NEWS LETTER

California Advertiser.

Vol. LXIII 68

SAN FRANCISCO, JANUARY 2, 1904.

Number 1.

The SAN FRANCISCO NEWS LETTER is printed and published every Saturday by the proprietor, Frederick Marriott, Halleck building, 320 Sansome street, San Francisco, Cal.

Entered at San Francisco Postoffice as second-class matter. New York Office—(where information may be obtained regarding subscriptions and advertising)—206 Broadway, C. C. Murphy, Representative.

London Office—30 Cornhill, E. C. England, George Street & Co.

Chicago Office—J. H. Williams, 1028 New York Life Building.

Boston Office—M. W. Barber, 715 Exchange Building.

All social items, announcements, advertising or other matter intended for publication in the current number of the NEWS LETTER should be sent to this office not later than 5 p. m. Thursday previous to day of issue.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox is to write a play. No need of that—Ella is a whole show in herself.

A scientist from Yale is living at the Waldorf in New York on $1 a day. Great is science!

Boston practically refuses to stand for a poultry exhibition in Faneuil Hall. How about an eagle show?

A New York infant is addicted to naps that last twenty-four hours. Who wouldn't have a baby like that?

The race at Ingleside is not to the strong, but to the one who has a proper understanding with managers and bookmakers.

Our "Happy New Year message" to our sister Republic, the United States of Colombia, will be written on a thirteen-inch shell.

Two million dollars went to Europe this year on the "Christmas steamers." Santa Claus will soon be trading his sleigh for an airship.

Chicago has reached such a point of civic righteousness that she has decided to name no more of her public schools after saloon-keepers.

Snakes killed 22,810 people in India during 1901. How fortunate that the serpents most familiar to the Caucasian do not bite, but merely terrify.

Believing that it is better to "boost" than to "knock," Congress is getting ready to pry Livernash out of the seat that does not belong to him.

Parkhurst, New York's purifier, rises in his pulpit to thunder that "Parsifal" is blasphemy. And godless Gotham goes right on paying $10 a seat for the show.

Though Chicago has raised $600,000 for the permanent housing of its orchestra, the wits and wags of New York keep on poking fun at lakeside table manners.

That long-range prophet and philanthropist, W. R. Hearst, shrieks in anguish over a massacre of Jews which he predicts for a Russian village on January 7th. Take another peep behind the veil, William, and see what the Democratic Convention is going to do with you in the early summer.

The artist who tried to blackmail Rockefeller out of $50,000 should have reflected that he was dealing with the world's greatest artist in acquiring and hanging onto wealth.

A Chicago man, having quarreled with his wife the other day, over the supplement of a Sunday newspaper, killed her and himself. This is yellow journalism turned crimson.

What author would not envy M. l'Abbe Loisy his chance of being listed in the Index Expurgatorius? He is sure of at least a paragraph in future editions of "Who's Who?"

A despatch says that a Kentucky mob gathered in Jackson and fired hundreds of shots into the ground. Don't believe it: Kentuckians don't waste ammunition in that way.

In this season of "Peace on earth, good will toward men" even the gentlemen engaged in the shipbuilding combine have left off trying each to prove the other a swindler.

Two Oregonians tell of an aerolite that missed them so narrowly as to scorch the hair on their heads. There's nothing the matter with the lying industry in Oregon.

Too bad that W. J. Bryan did not meet Emperor William. There would have been a "talkfest" that would make a phonograph parlor sound like a deaf and dumb asylum.

The Ohio young man who fell heir to $80,000 and carpeted his rooms with bills of large denomination, so that he might walk on money, will soon be subsisting upon the memory of it.

Ohio C. Barber, president of the Diamond Match Company, was among the rich and prominent citizens who sawed wood in Akron for the Salvation Army's benefit. He is handier with the coupon scissors than the bucksaw.

Joe Richardson, of Colfax, Washington, wagered that he could drink twenty glasses of beer in succession. He died at the seventeenth, thus avoiding payment of the bet he had made. Some people have more luck than sense.

It is telegraphed far and wide and a South Dakota man has been set free after serving a fifteen-year term in State's prison for robbing a mail carrier of a two-cent stamp. An inconsequential detail is that he killed the postman.

An Indiana preacher is so wrought up over the indicacies of the waltz that in grim sarcasm he suggests as a substitute sofa hugging to appropriate music. He ought not to be unpopular with the gouty members of his flock.

THE KISHINEF BUBBLE.

It may be that the Christians of Kishinef are making ready to celebrate their Christmas on January 7th by another wholesale butchery of Jews. This is the season when the Hebrew-hating sons of Adam-zad spur their souls to high endeavor with the sharp-toothed vodki, which a thoughtful Government manufactures and sells to them. The baiting of Jews at this time of year is a seasonal manifestation, to be looked for in Kussia as certainly as one looks for cold weather in January. Thus far, however, the actual indications of a bloody Thursday at Kishinef have been visible only to the jaundiced eye of William R. Hearst, who is afflicted with visions, waking and sleeping. Moved by Mr. Hearst's interpretation of his own bad dreams and by some knowledge of Russian predilections for Christmastide atrocities, this Government has made inquiry, and has found, as was expected, that there has as yet been no trouble at Kishinef. The information gathered by the State Department so far convinced the Jewish leaders in this country that they decided at once not to trouble the Government at Washington nor that at St. Petersburg with petitions until they had reliable news that atrocities were in contemplation.

And yet Mr. Hearst keeps on affrighting all who will give him ear with tales of butchery already begun. He keeps on urging President Roosevelt to ride rough-shod over the courtesies prescribed in the dealings of nation with nation, and to make it a personal matter with the Czar. He keeps on telling how the Jews of all Christendom are begging himself and President Roosevelt to take the Muscovite bear by the throat and pull his teeth. All the time he keeps on printing letters and resolutions of thanks to himself for what he has not done and cannot do, but wants the Government to do for him.

Mr. Hearst would be amusing if he were not so malicious and so fatuously persistent. He has insulted and abused Roosevelt as man and as President, missing no chance to revile him. If there should be a massacre of Jews at Kishinef during Roosevelt's term of office, Mr. Hearst will say that the blood of the slaughtered is on the President's hands; if there should be no massacre, Mr. Hearst will garland his own brow with new laurels and say "I prevented it."

When he goes so far as this in self-glorification, playing tricks with the sympathies of men, misusing the name of humanity for his own cheap, unworthy ends, Mr. Hearst ceases to amuse his audience and fails to gain pity. It is highly probable that the Democracy of the country will before long turn down its thumb at him, and so do its part in suppressing him. This Kishinef scare is but one of the many contemptible things he has done in trying to exalt himself from the ranks of American nobodies. It is hardly possible that even in his most foolish moments he hopes to be nominated. Mention on the floor of the Democratic convention would overjoy him, since what he is really after appears to be advertising and a pretext for singing his own praises. Up to now he has achieved this purpose by posing in his own limelight as the champion of labor, the protector of the poor. By dint of preaching discontent and anarchy he has won a certain standing among the mislead masses of working men who have hearkened to the false gospel of unionism. Seeing now that the people, aroused at last, are pulling down the pillars of that temple, he moves on to another, and sets up a shrine where he may worship himself as the patron saint of the oppressed in all lands. Just now he is playing the part of Providence in the protecting of the Jews at Kishinef from real and imagined peril.

Very certainly this Government will protest as strongly as any Government can against barbarities at Kishinef or anywhere else, but what Mr. Hearst says or does in the matter is of no importance or interest, except in so far as it reveals him further for the pretender and charlatan he is.

WATER GAS POISON.

It is of vital importance to the people of San Francisco that the gas company be required to comply with the spirit of its franchise and supply consumers with coal gas instead of the deadly water gas, which the company persists in doing. Of course water gas is supplied because it is very much cheaper to manufacture, which in turn yields the company enormous profits, as compared with coal gas, but it is at the expense of the health, and already of many lives, of every one who uses it.

Certainly coal gas will kill when inhaled for any great length of time, but if escaping coal gas is detected before it causes asphyxiation, no serious consequences obtain, or at least no permanent results follow. But it is not at all so with water gas, because of its deadly poisonous substance—a chemical compound so penetrating and disastrous to healthy physical conditions that to breathe it but for a moment is to threaten the whole system with physical weakness, and permanently impair the brain cells more especially. The law should make the manufacture of water gas for commercial uses a crime, for it is a continuous attack upon the lives and health of every one who comes in contact with it, and naturally so, for its component properties are constantly at war with healthy germ life, nor does it need to go to the limit of its death-dealing power and asphyxiate. A mere whiff of the murderous stuff often so undermines the health forces in the one who breathes it that ever thereafter his health is impaired.

The reason why water gas is such a deadly foe to human life and health is because the process of its manufacture necessarily makes it so. To make the vile stuff, decomposed water in the form of steam is forced over beds of red-hot coke, resolving it into hydrogen and carbonic oxide, the oxygen being absorbed. Then the hydrogen and carbonic oxide are driven through a retort in which is vegetable matter, including the residue of turpentine distillation, called resin, going through the process of decomposition. From this mass of decomposed matter the "water gas" absorbs enough carbon to render it luminous when burned. Thus it is that water gas is a compound of the deadliest of the poisons produced from the decomposition of water and vegetable matter, and that is why the mere inhaling of a small quantity of it is pretty sure to undermine one's health for all time.

Coal gas is quite a different article. It is the product of dry distillation of coal, the residue being coke, but it costs more than water gas, and because it does, the gas company is giving the city the most poisonous of compounds, that its profits may be greater. The trail of this death-dealing monster is observable in the daily reports of its havoc in all parts of the community. Of course, the Board of Supervisors could, if they would, oblige the gas company's officers to comply with the spirit of their franchise and supply gas extracted from coal, but it may take a whirlwind of public indignation to awaken the Supervisors to the enormity of the crime the gas company is perpetrating every day. If so, they should know that just such a whirlwind is already in process of formation.

THE WAY IT IS.

The once-convicted criminal, Mrs. Botkin, is given a chance to prove that the testimony, direct and circumstantial, the rulings of the court and the conduct of her trial generally, which convicted her of murder, were all in error from start to finish. In other words, she is permitted to try to show that the court that sentenced her was a combination of legal stupidity and judicial paresis; that the witnesses against her were liars, and that the jury was composed of a compound of putty and decayed brain cells, and hence impervious to the goo-goo eyes of feminine voluptuousness in charming presentation. Meanwhile, or, rather, while her appeal for a new hearing was pending, very much of the evidence that convicted her has been "lost, strayed or stolen," with no reward offered for knowledge of its whereabouts or its return. Great are the technicalities of the law! That is to say, they are great in the work of defeating justice by the hooks and by the crooks of a sort of alleged law or court practice which annuls the purpose and intent of law and paralyzes the hand of justice.

It is under such conditions that legal technicalities have brought convict Botkin smiling and confident into court again to hear herself proclaimed an innocent, virtuous, charming and much abused specimen of glorious womanhood. But will all this legal trickery and debauchery of the high and honorable profession of the law avail the Botkin woman anything? The chances are that it will. It is simply capable lawyers with doubtful codes of ethics on the one side, scheming to defeat the operation of law, and public indifference on the other side, with a far too low appreciation of the sanctity of the mission of courts by courts in the middle. The atmosphere in and about most of our courts, the criminal courts more especially, is not surcharged all the time with that high sense of honor which the laws of the land provide for. The elevation of a lawyer from the bar to the bench is often more political than sentimental. Not many judges in this community are able, seemingly, to understand that a judge when upon the bench is not of politics nor of social life, nor of friendship's bonds, nor of any ties that bind him to his fellow human beings. He is there as the representative of the best, the truest and the loftiest thought of the community as expressed in the letter and in the spirit of the community's highest standard of conduct of life to see to it that justice between man and man be done. As to the average jury, well, history and experience does not encourage boundless faith in the wisdom or in the integrity of the average jury, and because that is true, and because some judges cannot rise to the heights of separateness from personal likes and dislikes, and make their court truly and honestly and faithfully a court of oyer and terminir, the Botkin and similar offenses against law and order are permitted to use the law to prevent the law's administration.

A BRUTAL AND MURDEROUS SPORT.

At best, prize-fighting is a brutal and foul sport. However "square" it may be, or however scientifically blows are given, the whole business appeals only to the lowest and most depraved nature of those who participate, either as principals or spectators. But low and beastly as was prize-fighting in the long ago, its march has steadily been from degradation to degradation, and now, in truth, it seems to have reached the very bottom where principals and spectators are vicious and heartless animals in human form without one tiny thread of human worth or moral sentiment to cover their true selves. "Birds of a feather flock together" should be emblazoned in letters of fire over the door through which men pass into the arena of the prize-fight. Figs do no more grow on thistle bushes than does the Recording Angel go to a prize-fight in search of piety, moral sense or self-respect. And what emphasizes the brutal nature of the spectators is that they will pay large sums of money, and submit to perplexing inconveniences, that the lowest life principles in them may have a feast of bruises and blood.

At one of these exhibitions of brute physical power in Sacramento quite recently, one of the principals was so seriously pounded that he died the next day, and in that act he disgraced himself in the estimation of those who saw him receive the fatal blows. He should have died in the ring, and in his last breath made an effort to kill his opponent. He cheated the on-lookers out of that much "sport," and he will always be remembered by them as a defaulter. The man in the ring who gave the fatal blows was the principal murderer, but were not the howling spectators who inspired him by cheers of appreciation to redouble his brute force and deal the fatal blow participants in the murder? And are the governing authorities of the city of Sacramento altogether blameless for the man's murder? On the face of the fact that the legally constituted authorities of Sacramento graciously granted permission for such an exhibition of brute force and a possible murder, a stranger would have the right to conclude that the moral sense and standard ethical conduct of the authorities were no higher nor no lower than those of the prize-ring. It is hypocrisy of the rankest sort when municipal authorities condemn that which they cheerfully permit the doing of. And this applies to San Francisco and to every other community that permits prize-fighting; besides, legalized prize-fighting is, as in the case of the man killed in Sacramento, legalized murder, or rather the privilege of committing murder by a blow with the fist, is granted. If prize-fighting is brutal, then those who permit it and those who patronize the business are brutes. That is the logical conclusion. Always the social conventions of a community may be used to determine the level of moral worth and integrity upon which that community is dwelling.

A nineteen-year-old school girl of Chicago has been selected to represent the Windy City in a New York beauty show. The Chicago press goes into distressing detail in describing her charms in terms of linear measurement, but maintains a dignified silence concerning her feet.

It was a mighty mean man who paid Senator Tillman a bogus $100 bill for a lecture at Savannah, Ga., on the race question and it was quite decent of the bank on which the bill was drawn to make the amount good to the South Carolina satesman.

The Dutch parliament has voted $1,750,000 to buy Krupp cannons. Let there be a prompt revision of that lusty song whose refrain says, "Down with the Dutch, they don't amount to much."

An author of the present day, R. W. Chambers, has bought him a house in New York for $55,000. And still the great army of literati wails in chorus that there is no money in writing.

THIEVES RUN TO EARTH.

County Clerk Mahoney has been indicted, as have a lot of his aides and strikers, for robbing the funds of which he was the official custodian. So far so good. But what will be the outcome of it all? The law is quite ready to open very wide the doors of the penitentiary for the entrance of these plunderers of the public's money, but Mr. Mahoney and his fellow culprits only laugh when punishment for the crime they have committed is suggested. They seem to think themselves superior to the law of the land, and that it is impudence on the part of the public to ask what has become of its money. It is a reflection upon his official and personal integrity. What if he and his fellow cracksmen did absorb for their personal use about all of the total receipts of the County Clerk's office. Did they molest or try to sell the office fixtures or rent the room for social gatherings and pocket the money?

But there is a deep meaning in Mr. Mahoney's laugh of derision and contempt when punishment is intimated for his crimes and misdemeanors, and the meaning is that he has the strings of the "push" and the "pull" too well in hand to fear any adverse operation of the criminal laws of the commonwealth. It means that Mr. Mahoney believes that the City Hall ring dare not disturb him lest they, too, become involved. It means that he believes in the mightiness of thieves standing together. It means that he and his fellow plunderers of public funds believe that the courts will find it easy enough to exonerate them. It means that the City Hall gang do not intend that one of their fellows shall be punished for robbing the city or county strong box. This makes the issue between the law of the land and the Mahoney gang, as to supremacy, quite clear and plain. If the operation of the law may be crippled to complete inefficiency, why, Mahoney must be recognized as one who is superior to law, and one who is not bound by law, decency or conscience to respect the property or rights of the body politic. On the other hand, if public sentiment and the courts insist on administering exact justice, and do administer it, Mr. Mahoney and his co-partners in crime will sojourn for a number of years in the penitentiary. There is no middle ground. Either Mahoney and his following are superior to the criminal laws or they are subject to them, and in determining the matter, a big lot of law-abiding public sentiment most vigorously expressed will exert an influence in criminal court circles which no judge or jury would care to antagonize. The question at its last analysis is: Shall a robber of the public's money be decked with the epaulettes of public commendation or with the prison stripes of honestly administered criminal laws?

GOOD MAY COME OF EVIL.

The parading of several young women up and down the sidewalk before a Market-street restaurant, and appealing to patrons of such places to boycott that particular eating house, presents a spectacle that is both disgusting and humiliating. The young women who are making their union's appeal to the public in voices that set nerves on edge, naturally draw crowds of curious and rough men, who indulge freely in coarse wit and doubtful suggestions, and these crowds also block the sidewalk very much to the annoyance of pedestrians. Not one in ten-score of such idlers know or care to know anything about the merits of the dispute that caused the effort at boycotting. An opportunity to exhibit their vulgar mannerism is presented, and that is all they want to know about the trouble. As for the girls who parade the walk and sing of the arbitrary and cruel refusal of the boycotted restaurant keeper to let their union run his business for him, why, they unsex themselves every time they open their mouths. The absence of what is known as "woman's native modesty" is conspicuous, and more is the pity that these "persuaders" or "barkers" do not seem to mind putting on the necessary bold and persistent facial expression.

One good, however, is likely to come of it all. It is beginning to dawn upon both organized employees and associations of employers that but for the walking delegates of the unions and certain members of the Employers' Association it would be an easy matter, generally speaking, to adjust differences between employers and employees, with little or no loss of time to either side.

The plan suggested is yet crude, but it seems to have the elements of success. It includes the recognition of the unions by the Employers' Association and the recognition of the Employers' Association by the unions. The next step is to appoint a joint conference board composed of an equal number of the two organizations in interest. This board shall meet once a month and discuss the present and possible future conditions of their joint interests. This plan would, not a few believe, so operate to bring employer and employee closer together in each other's confidence, which in turn would inspire and stimulate both sides to work in accord to suppress disturbing influences, even before they evolved into a force. The idea is to teach both sides that the doctrine of "give and take" in a spirit of earnest purpose to more clearly emphasize their independence and yet recognize the individual rights and award just dues to each one in interest. The plan will provide for the complete elimination of walking delegates—a class of men who encourage discontent because discontent is the tool of their trade—and for a board of appeal, arbitration and adjustment. As is seen, the plan provides for full recognition of labor unions and of employers' associations as the basis of their mutual efforts to avert strikes by uprooting the cause before it bears fruit. To this extent, then, good may come of the spectacle of young women parading the sidewalks as enemies of law and order, and the rights of man.

A DEN OF THIEVES.

The revelations of rascality in the New York post-office surpass anything of the kind in the history of the country. All, from the lowest cuspidor scrubber to the Postmaster himself, which include about 6,000 employees, seem to have acted either the role of thief or victim. The Postmaster not only neglected his duties, but permitted another man to draw and appropriate his salary. A little syndicate of officials got up a scheme to rob the other employees by the monthly assessment plan. This device alone netted $18,000 a year for the little syndicate's pocket change account. Sub-stations were hired at rentals several times above the asking price, thus securing a large monthly rake-off. In fact, the inspector finds that every department of the office is steeped in thievery, and that scarcely a man holding a position that could be used to increase his income by dishonest methods was found to have conducted his trust honestly. The pay-roll was found stuffed with hundreds of names of people who had no existence at all. Perfidy, false swearing, bogus vouchers, bills for goods that were never purchased and scores of other devices and methods to plunder the Government were discovered everywhere. And yet the authorities at Washington have known for years that the New York Post-office had become a den of thieves.

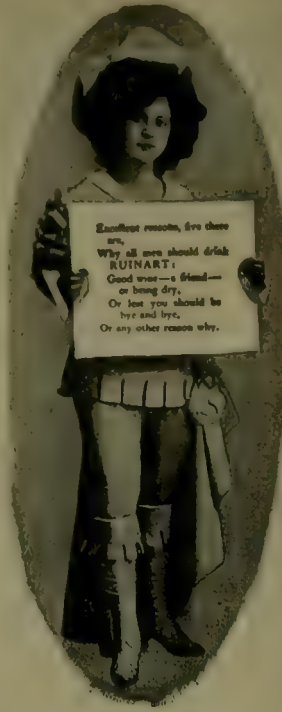

ENCOURAGE HOME MANUFACTURE.

The News Letter has for years advocated the policy of patronizing home industry, and not without results. If all consumers of manufactured articles kept this fact in mind, California would rank high as a manufacturing State. Mr. Carl L. Schalitz, proprietor of Sanders & Company's Copper Works of this city, gives us valuable information bearing upon the much-discussed and often-advertised subject of patronizing the home industries and increasing the manufacturing importance of the Pacific Coast. Sanders & Company have impressed this upon our local brewers, and incidentally of the entire Coast, and have succeeded in a marked degree in deviating a large amount of money, which in past years went East, to the local firms. Keep the money at home, and keep the local manufacturer busy. We quote Mr. Schalitz's words in part:

"We very recently experienced a marked expression of confidence on our ability to manufacture copper works that compares favorably with (if it does not excel) the Eastern product, when the largest brewery on the Pacific Coast, the Seattle Brewing and Malting Company, of Seattle, Washington, contracted with us for an exact duplication of their three hundred barrel suthaus now in operation in the North. When you consider that a plant of this size consists of a 300 barrel copper kettle, mash tub, rice tanks, Grant and Pfaffe, and various machinery, you will realize what a great stride has been taken in the recognition of the value of our home industries. Heretofore the breweries on the Coast have been equipped by Eastern manufacturers, but in the future we trust this extensive work will remain at home."

We wish to heartily endorse and congratulate the Seattle Brewing and Malting Company for the decided steps they have taken in the right direction, and we also wish to congratulate Messrs. Sanders & Company for their progressiveness in undertaking the construction of a plant of this magnitude.

—Visitors to San Francisco never cease to wonder at the perfection of Zinkand's, where appointments, service cooking, music, and also visitors, are the very best. It has no equal.

BY THE LOBBY GHOST

If we but remain patient we will get all the Fitch plays. "The Girl with the Green Eyes" is another frothy tid-bit by this most prolific of authors. It is in the usual "smart" vein, and the genius for novelty is shown at every twist of the action. The story is one of a jealous girl, who makes herself most unhappy. She is suspicious of her husband, and sees every action of his from her own point of view. Of course, in the end, she is changed, and when the positive evidence against her husband is explained, she sees how silly she has been. The dialogue of the piece is interspersed with the brightest of sayings, and the wedding scene in the first act is prettily staged. Fitch is at his best when picturing society people and their ways and "Jinny" Austin, her husband, and her friends, are easily recognized as belonging to the ultra "smart set" that they are supposed to represent.

Fitch's plays lack weight, logic and argument, but they are trimmed so prettily that they are restful. They contain no problems and are successful in that they do not compel people to think. They are to the drama what William Dean Howell's school of writers is to literature.

The re-opening of the Tivoli in new quarters is worth more than a passing note. On Wednesday night last week the initial performance was given, and the old favorites and some new people were most enthusiastically welcomed. Mayor Schmitz made a sort of dedicatory speech and expressed the sentiment exactly when he said that if the new house but sustained the reputation of the old it would be supported willingly by the music lovers of the town.

The piece is a conglomeration of fact and fancy, by Ferris Hartman, called "Ixion," and is redolent with Hartman atmosphere. There is wit in the lines, melody in the songs, and the augmented chorus is well trained. The picture afforded by the transformation scene is very beautiful, and the light effects are fine.

The piece is a typical Tivoli extravaganza, and the people are well suited to their roles. The cast numbers many old friends. Anna Lichter and William Schuster are familiar faces, and received a rousing welcome. Bessie Tannehill, one of the new ones, is more than a singer—she can act. She has very little to do, but she has the temperament that promises something good in the future. Wallace Brownlow, the Australian barytone, has perhaps the best-trained voice in the company. With two such fine voices as his and Cunningham's, we should hear some fine solos in succeeding pieces. There is no reason in the world, with the friendly backing it has, why the Tivoli should not reach unlimited success. The infusion of new blood into the company should work wonders.

A word for the building itself: It is an airy, cheerful place, with lots of room. The seats are comfortable and the acoustics perfect. The decorations are not prodigal, but they are good, and the elevator to the top floor is an innovation.

continues to attract a large audience. The piece is staged perfectly, and a more finished production could not be asked for. Eleanor Gordon, as the Dutch slavey, has a perfect dialect, and shows her remarkable advancement in character work. Harry Hilliard, as Ike the Hoosier boy, throws his dignity to the four winds, and makes up as the homeliest, silliest person to be found in a day's travel. The leading people all assume their roles in excellent form, and Miss Starr is the most womanly of ingenues. The scene she has with her little baby is very affecting, and she is never off key for a minute. She runs the whole gamut of emotions, from the hoyden to the poor wife and mother. The villainy of Miss Block is more convincing than most melodramatic ones, and the thrill of the buzz-saw scene makes the up-stairs people happy.

The "road show" is in its second and last week at the Orpheum, and is greatly improved by Victor Moore and Emma Littlefield in their skit, "Back to the Woods." This same act was seen last year, but it is so novel that it is not like a re-hash. The rest of the bill is of uniform excellence.

A great treat will be offered to the patrons of the Grand Opera House the week beginning to-morrow matinee. It will consist of the famous comedian, Joe Kelly, the pipe-dreamer, and his merry bunch of players, in the musical comedy, "The Head Waiters," which for several seasons has been one of the greatest theatrical successes of the East. The engagement is limited to one week only. Sunday matinee, January 10th, "In Convict Stripes," a pleasing play of the people of South Carolina, will be presented.

"I-O-U" will be presented another week only at Fischer's, as the management has decided to close its phenomenal run on January 10th. The production has met with substantial appreciation from amusement lovers, and seems to have lost none of its power to please. The piece will be succeeded by "The Beauty Shop," a purely local burlesque, written by J. C. Crawford, one of San Francisco's best newspaper men. The presentation of "The Beauty Shop" will introduce several new principals, including Miss Helen Russell, a handsome soprano, in feminine leads, and John Peachey, a baritone, who can act as well as sing.

Mme. Patti, the greatest songstress the world has ever known, will appear in San Francisco, which she regards as her banner city, on the night of January 7th and the afternoon of the 11th. Manager Friedlander has decided to inaugurate a scale of popular prices ranging from $1 to $5 for the two concerts of the peerless diva. When Patti first began her operatic career she had to conquer the world city by city, for it has a pessimistic attitude toward the young phenomenon. Now that she has risen to her triumphant position as the world's prima donna, she has been bribed away from her luxurious castle of Craig-y-Nos in Wales to make a truly farewell American tour.

Novelty galore will abound at the Chutes this coming week. Mason and Filburn, comedy sketch artists, will make their first appearance here, as will also the Prampkins, colored musical comedians, said to be especially clever in their line. The Harrison Brothers, whose sketch, "A Matrimonial Agency," is a scream from beginning to end, will reappear, and Joe and Sadie Britton will sing new songs. Gardner and Stoddard will offer a new skit, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The animatoscope promises a new and amusing series of moving pictures, and the amateurs will appear on Thursday night.

"Ixion" will run but one week longer at the Tivoli, and will be succeeded by "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," the most successful American comic opera ever written.

There will be a complete change of programme at the Orpheum this coming week, and the features announced are all of a high order of merit. Fred Hallen and Molly Fuller, Dumitrescu, Van Auken and Vannerson, Charles and Minnie Sa-Van, Charlotte Guyer George, Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Deaves, Joan Haden's "Cycle of Love," Ernest Hogan and Mattie Wilkes will be the new bill.

An Estimate of Tolstoy. "Tolstoy and His Message," by Ernest Crosby, is a small volume; but into it he has condensed a fine sketch of Tolstoy—not only of the man, but of his thoughts, beliefs and aspirations. The following is typical of the book:

"That the examples of the success of Christ's teachings should be so few is due to the fact that they have been so rarely lived. Count Tolstoy is making the experiment to-day, and no one who has visited him at his home, as I have had the privilege of doing, and has looked into his searching eyes under their heavy brows, can for a moment doubt his sincerity. He has stripped his house of everything superfluous; there is not a rug on the floor, not an ornament on the table; his dress is the peasant's blouse; he has become a vegetarian, and touches neither coffee nor tea nor sugar nor tobacco. . . That there is a vein of asceticism in all this I am not disposed to deny. A German admirer of his has called him the John the Baptist of the new religion of the Spirit, and if sometimes we are inclined to criticise him for denying himself unnecessarily and for making the externals of his life a little too bare, we should remember that there was room in the world for John, whose food was locusts and wild honey, and for Jesus who came eating and drinking, and that wisdom is justified of all her children. There is a place in our economy for the Tolstoys as well as for the Ruskins and Morrises. And if there seems to be little art in the exterior appearances of Tolstoy's life, it is not because he is not an artist and has not faced the question of art and answered it to his own satisfaction. But he denies to the art of the day, the luxurious plaything of the exploiting few, all claim to be considered as art at all.

SHAKESPEARE OR DANTE.

A communication has been received by the editor of this paper, poorly written and signed with an assumed name. The News Letter in this case departs from its rule not to answer anonymous communications for the simple reason that the questioner recognizes the News Letter as authority which is the one sensible thing in the letter, which is as follows:

"There is a question before several young men as to whom is greater and more famous, Dante or Shakespeare? It was decided to ask the opinion of the press, and this is the reason that your judgment is earnestly requested on this matter. Kindly publish the answer as soon as possible in your paper."

Dante is as famous for his Beatrice as Shakespeare is for his Anne; in fact, to borrow a phrase, "they mutually surpass each other." It is the same old question in another form: which is the greater power, wind or water; or, which is man's best friend, the dog or the gun. The nonsense of the discussion is only equaled by the lack of sense on the part of the propounders.

Jack London's Great Novel

THE SEA WOLF

BEGINS IN THE JANUARY CENTURY

A MILLION SAVED IS A MILLION EARNED.

The problem which has been pored over since the days of '49 of saving flour gold from auriferous sand and soil has, after years of study, been solved in a scientific manner by Mr. C. A. Peer, an expert chemist residing at Watsonville, Cal., U. S. A. The perfection of the invention at once interested the leading financiers of that wealthy city, the result being the formation of the Pacific Coast Chemical Gold Mining Company of Watsonville, Cal. Its origin was unheralded by any notoriety, but the merit of the invention forced it into notice so promptly that outside of plants in the United States its fame has spread abroad, and negotiations are about closed for the erection of a large number of plants in Guatemala, C. A. In January, Mr. C. A. Peer, the inventor and president of the company, accompanied by Mr. George W. Sill, Consulting Director, will sail for Australia to close negotiations with a wealthy syndicate which owns an invaluable concession granted by the Australian Government giving it the sole privilege to mine for gold along some forty miles of beach gold-bearing sand, the tests and assays of which demonstrate that it will pay a fabulous profit.

One machine handles fifteen tons daily, and the output can be increased indefinitely by the erection of additional machines. The wonder lies in the extreme simplicity of the invention. The sand is fed directly upon the first apron, where a stream of water, regulated in force and quantity, carries the sand successively over three chemically treated canvas aprons, each placed in a frame with an inclination of fifteen inches in six feet. A succession of burlap-covered sluice boxes carries the tailings away and across especially constructed riffles. These sluices have a declination of eight feet in twenty-four, much more abrupt than that of the ordinary sluice, but the flow of water and sand, as stated, is so regulated that even the most microscopic particles of gold must, in its course, come in contact with a detaining surface.

The corporation is peculiar in the one fact that it evidences its confidence in its process to perform all it claims by refusing to sell outright its machines. They can be leased on royalty only. Further, it will on submission to it of samples of sand make tests and assays free of cost for responsible parties who own sufficient material bearing enough gold to warrant a profit in its working. In a series of tests on sand that assayed $3.80 a ton, the highest loss was 13 cents.

The fact that this process can and does save gold of microscopic fineness is being demonstrated every day, and that this corporation affords a mine of wealth for mine owner and capitalist is proved every hour. The gross average of the gold saved, which has hitherto been unavailable, is 95 per cent, which at once stamps this process as being practically perfect.

The Alcazar has selected "A Lady of Quality" for the first week of the New Year. It was in this powerful and picturesque drama of romance that Julia Arthur kindled a blaze of enthusiasm at Wallack's, New York, six years ago. "A Lady of Quality," with its romantic costuming, clash of steel and tragic intensity, will also give capital opportunity to the members of the cast. For January 11th there will be a beautiful production of "The Moth and the Flame," a play which has not been equaled for genuine power and feeling in any of Clyde Fitch's other efforts.

It is gratifying news that arrangements have been made for the appearance in this city of Miss Alberta Gallatin, in "Ghosts," at the Columbia Theatre, on Sunday night, January 10th. The special tour is a great success, and the only regrets is that it is to be allowed only one performance.

The great society theatrical event of the season will be the engagement of the "Jersey Lily," Mrs. Langtry, at the Columbia Theatre, commencing Monday evening, January 11th. It will be her first appearance here for many years, and she will be supported by the Imperial Theatre Company of London. The first of the repertoire of plays to be presented is Percy Fendall's modern comedy, "Mrs. Deering's Divorce."

Alexander Dumas's immortal drama, "Monte Cristo," with Herschel Mayall in the great role of Edmond Dantes, and the accomplished actress, Eugenia Thais Lawton, in her favorite part of Mercedes, will be presented at the Central Theatre next week. The production of "Monte Cristo" will be complete in every detail, and it will undoubtedly take rank as one of the popular triumphs of the Central Theatre.

The best bit of realism on the Metropolitan Opera House stage yet is to be credited to the donkey that was assigned to draw the cart for Sembrich. Instead of which, the animal simply squatted down on the stage and refused to budge. So the curtain had to be rung down. And yet some of the ill-humored critics say the donkey failed to come up to the level of the other artists in the cast. What a lack of appreciation of the real thing!

Co-incident with the coming of Tammany into power, religious revivals on a big scale for young men will be held in Manhattan. But Tammany, in spite of the plain inference, cares not who holds or attempts revivals, as long as it handles the revenues and the jobs, for Tammany relies on the practical superiority in the moral line of interest over principle.

Some of the stores instituted a reign of terror during the holiday season in their well-meant but ill-directed efforts to suppress petty larceny. I was in one of the largest of these stores a few days ago, when a lady carried a piece of dry goods away without its being wrapped up, the crush being so great at the counter that she could not afford the time to wait. She was immediately pounced upon by a floor walker, who accused her point blank of stealing, and demanded that she proceed to a certain room to be searched. All her denials were met by the most brutal and coarse rejoinders. Finally she bethought herself to show the salesman the check for the goods which she had taken half-unconsciously. He was not satisfied with this, but haled her to the clerk who had made the sale, and who fortunately enough remembered her. Of course, my friend vows that she will never put foot in the store again. There is a tremendous amount of stealing, that is true enough, but there is also such a thing as reasonable discretion.

It seems that every crazy scheme can find people ready to help it out for the sake of a little personal advertising. It is this human weakness upon which Hearst and the yellow papers rely. They can start any idea, however absurd, and find prominent citizens to help it along. Look at the list of distinguished Jewish leaders who have fallen into the trap and been used to make space. Dr. Voorsanger, however, does not bite as easily as the others, and reading between the lines of his contribution one can find a piece of very delicate irony at the expense of the International Gumboge.

"The first wife to the rescue!" Such, I opine, would be a good title for the sort of farce comedy which is being played with one Dr. J. A. Fritz in the leading part. His wife Lizzie Fritz had sworn out a warrant against him for threats against life. Thereupon his first wife, Mary Fritz, from whom he had been formerly divorced, went on his bonds. Now, why did Mary do this? Was it for love of the doctor, or to mark her approval of his threats against the life of her supplanted? In any case, it would seem to show that the doctor made a bad exchange, and that love's young dream may still have some actual cash value.

Here is a new crime which owes its origin to the imagination of the attorney for the Western Miners' Federation. John D. Ackerman, attorney and agent for the Yellow Aster Mining Company, is accused of the direful act of importing laborers into the Randsburg district under false pretenses. He has been charged once before with the same offense and released on habeas corpus proceedings. Surely an action for malicious prosecution should lie against the union.

What is going to be done about that turn-table at the foot of Market street? As things are, it is a hideous nuisance. The cars are stopped for two blocks and a half, very frequently, and people are obliged to get out and walk in the wet and slush over some of the worst pieces of street in the city. The whole management is an outrage and would not be tolerated in any less easy-going community than this.

I dropped into Department Two of the Superior Court the other afternoon, and there were no less than five attorneys all busily engaged in trying a case, the value of which to the victor in the suit would be about three hundred and seventy-five dollars. Do you think that all these disciples of Coke were eagerly endeavoring to get at the rights of the matter? Not they! They were trying to get lawyers' fees allowed on the three thousand dollars for which suit had originally been brought, which suit has offered to be compromised at the rate of ninety cents on the dollar. A more disgusting commentary on the morals of the local bar would be hard to find.

The force of habit or of instinct, it would be hard to say which in this case, was never more clearly shown than in Market street this holiday season. A number of peddlers had mechanical toys which they were showing off on the pavement, among them some mice. It was no uncommon thing to see a woman jump three or four feet to one side away from the imitation rodents. I heard several scream during a stay of a few minutes, and a boy told me that one had tried to climb the store window in her fright. The boy had red hair and squinted, and upon cross-examination would not state positively whether the woman ran from him or the mouse.

Will somebody explain why a charge of disturbing the peace is not brought against the raucous-voiced females who clamor outside of the boycotted restaurants? Picketing is, I believe, allowed by the laws of this State, but violent and abusive language, even when uttered by a woman on the public streets, is a misdemeanor. Why does not one of those people who are insulted when entering the restaurant swear out a complaint? It is our abominable laziness which makes the violation of the law so easy and so profitable. One arrest followed by a conviction, and the trouble would be at an end. But would the arrest be followed by the conviction? There's the rub.

There is evidently more wrong at the University than is generally admitted by the authorities. The President appears to have lost his hold upon the institution. Even the attitude of the students when they meet him on the cars or in the street shows that very plainly. A President who does not keep the ungrudging respect of his students cannot accomplish much, and somehow or other this respect seems to be lacking to the President of our most important institution. Why is it? Is it possible that ghosts can really queer people?

There is no end to the resolutions of the Board of Supervisors, but I should be glad to see them set to work really to abolish the masher nuisance. It has been more obvious this year than for some time, and country girls here shopping for Christmas have been subjected to all sorts of annoyances which they resent but do not know how to show their indignation. Unless the police intervene, male relatives will have to do so, though it is not to be expected that citizens should do their own scavenging.

Father Wyman says that the cure for this world's ills is matrimony and a large family. The good father is in no danger of trying his own medicine, and prescribing for other people is not at all disagreeable. Let the reverend gentleman be confronted with an overworked wife and a group of little ones whose need for shoes is more apparent even than their need for Christmas gifts, and he will find that marriage and a family may be good discipline, but not altogether joy. Priests' marriages are very like old maids' children—too ideal for practical existence.

How San Francisco Looks to Me.

By Fernauld Travers, Tourist.

Editor News Letter—I have traveled somewhat in my time in many countries, and tarried in many cities, but for a chaotic, non-conglomerate mass of men, women, and customs, San Francisco appeals to me as being next best or worst to Port Said or one of those places east of the Suez on the road to Mandelalay. The main charm of the Occident is the go-as-you-please customs of the fair sex and devil-may-care habits of the men, neither of which are overburdened with extra scruples regarding morality or virtue. They both, however, like San Francisco, aim to maintain the outward decorous form of an inward and spiritual grace by conforming as strictly as may be to the forms exacted by society at home in London or in my birthplace, New York.

Since I have been here I have noted one thing in San Francisco's incongruities that appeals to a traveled man. I refer to the hospitality offered, some of which I found to be genuine and some of which was pure and simple toadyism. In the one case it was a compliment to the gentleman and the scholar; in the other case it was a sort of morbid desire to capture and display me as a social lion.

I do not object to being lionized; it is due me; I am used to it. My position in the social world warrants it, but I claim the right to choose the cage in which I shall be shown. I have been put up at the clubs. I trust I shall not be inflicted by being compelled to register at any more of some of the rooms I have been taken to, which I was gravely informed was the So and So Club. Of course, you have one fairly decent club which approaches my own best in London, but you also have some that are the comic operas of true clubdom. One chap who lives at his club asked me to dine and spend the night with him at the jinks. I did so, and enjoyed it somewhat, but when he sent his man to attend me in my room before retiring, the beggar had a mustache! Think of a gentleman's man being allowed to cultivate a mustache! It is such bad form that it positively shocked me. The same fellow added insult to injury by appearing in my room with my peg next morning in his slippers—beastly bad manners. I thought of my Alexandria and Said experiences, where such things are not too common, and at once made up my mind that San Francisco clubmen needed a few hints in the art of culture.

The most amusing experience I have had for many years came to me at the opening of your opera house, the Tivoli. I was invited to be one of a box party. I was told that San Francisco's hall-mark of the select set is to go late to the theatre and make a noise while you are being seated. That this at once stamps you as being comme il faut, and also intimates that your coat is a good fit and the frocks of the gentlemen are imported.

The Mayor, not a bad looking fellow, made a "few remarks," in which he said he had been called a "musical Mayor" by some one who had opposed his election. I am sorry for the bad taste displayed by the nominator, but horrified at the worse taste shown by the nominee in commenting on it. The remarks of the speaker were, however, in tone with the actions of the audience. There was nothing but gabble, chats, and over-tone remarks all through the evening. It called to mind one of my great-aunt's charity bazars which she holds occasionally at Beechwood, York, England. The gentlewomen flock there in their finest plumage, and all talk one against the other until the bazar, the opera in this case, is entirely drowned in the ocean of sound. Yes, the city, to one well-bred, is so full of incongruities and inconsistencies that instead of going on I shall remain and enjoy them. I told my man to secure me some proper apartments, and then I expect I shall have to educate the incongruous how to do things as things should be done. My letters and credentials are ample, as has been proven by the attentions afforded me since my arrival, and I am so much amused and delighted that I want to show you your idiosyncrasies, your bad manners, and I want to do it in good faith.

Of all the notable New Year's Eve entertainments given by Mrs. de Young, that of this year takes the lead. It was enjoyed by a large company of young folks and a few married friends of the hostess. The ballroom, with its handsome stage, partially destroyed by fire a few months ago, was restored in good time for the festivities of the holiday time.

When Mrs. de Young returned from the East early in December she brought copies of a number of the latest songs, the catchy things that New York is humming and to which it is keeping its toes tapping. To introduce them, Ernest S. Simpson and Will H. Irwin wrote a play called "My Colorado Belle" that has proved a most satisfactory setting. Charles H. Jones of Fischer's Theatre staged the performance; Dr. H. J. Stewart had the direction of the music, and Miss Alice Duffy wrote words for the New Year's song.

The play, with its specialties, served to bring out a lot of first-class talent among the society folk. Mrs. Mark L. Gerstle, who took the part of the heroine, gave a performance that the professional world would have regarded as above par. Equally successful was Mrs. John D. Spreckels, Jr. Her singing of "Cora" and "O! Isn't It Perfectly Lovely to be on the Stage" were the cleverest kind of imitations of the singers who have made such success of them. The cast in full follows:

Gentle C. Breezy, Belle of Cripple Creek, Mrs. Mark L. Gerstle; Bella Donna, a Prima Donna, Mrs. J. D. Spreckels, Jr.; E. Z. Breezy, a Colorado Millionaire, Mr. Adison Mizner; Jasper Green, a Dramatic Author, Mr. Frank L. Owen; I. Collier Down, a Broken-Down Actor, Mr. W. H. Smith, Jr.; Sudden Smith, Owner of the Tin Bucket Mine, Mr. J. C. Wilson; Reginald Fitznoodle, That's All, Mr. Joseph Rosborough; Tottie Tiptoes, a Front Row Favorite, Miss Ethel Hager; Dottie Dimple, Miss Pearl Landers; Sarah Mony, Miss Constance de Young; Allie Mony, Miss Helen Wagner; Consie Quently, Miss Mabel Cluff; Apple Sisters (Cora), Miss Kathleen de Young, (Seedy) Miss Jane Wilshire; Evva Dentily, Miss Lucie King; Cora Spood, Miss Ardella Mills; Cissy Rhinestone, Miss Frances Stewart; Eddy Fie, Mr. Charles A. Shea; Benny Fitt, Mr. Charles de Young; Tommy Hawk, Mr. Paul Jones; Jay Byra, Mr. J. D. Spreckels, Jr.; Jack Pott, Mr. Roy M. Pike; Dan Deligne, Mr. Burbank G. Somers; Dickie Bird, Mr. Power Hutchins; Quess Knott, Mr. Emerson Warfield; Si Clone, Mr. Leslie Harkness; Chauncey Footlight, Mr. N. T. Messer.

The new songs introduced were "The Maid of Timbuctoo," "I'm On the Water Wagon Now," "Egypt," "Cora," "Little Street in Heaven," "Mamie O'Hooley," "On the Boulevard," "Drinking Song," "O! Isn't it Perfectly Lovely to be on the Stage," "Say, You'll be a Friend of Mine," "Mr. Breezy," and "Hoop La."

When the New Year arrived it found the guests at supper waiting to give it a rousing welcome.

Harold S. Curtiss is a young New Yorker at present in this city, who, in company most of the time with a young man near his own age, in all probability holds the unique record of seeing "Dolly Varden" the most times. The history goes back to the wonderful nights at "Herald Square" two winters ago. At that time Lulu Glaser was singing herself into a new immortality with the New York public. "Dolly Varden," a go from the first, was not of the hurricane sensation sort. "She stole into the hearts" of the inhabitants of Manhattan. The tales of her winsome charms appeared to be a story that was passed on personally by the public. And one day the town woke up to the knowledge that Lulu Glaser had made good with the great.

Early in the game, young Curtiss and his chum drifted into the Herald Square. They were struck with the utter daintiness of Dolly. After that, not a week passed without the pals present in front seats. Members of the company began to observe the punctuality. The young men were easily able to repeat large sections of the book. The attendance was the more remarkable for being a devotion to the ever-recurrent melody of the opera.

After the expiration of the New York season, Curtiss saw Dolly Varden for runs in Philadelphia, Baltimore, return to the Victoria, New York, again at the Grand Opera House, that city, west to Denver, and out to this Coast. On the opening night here he and his friend were invited in by the company's representative in recognition of long and honorable attendance. Thursday the two men from the East saw dainty Dolly on the boards for the twenty-fifth record time.

Curtiss thinks it significant that the big Sunday stories which are devoted to every phenomenally successful show in New York did not come out about "Dolly Varden" immediately after its first night, but following shortly the time he and his companion became regular attendants.

Oakland society has rebelled against the new finger-bowl fad, or rather what was supposed to be new. Recently a swell dinner was given in that "Athens of the Pacific," and instead of the usual finger bowl at the plate of each guest, there was nothing. A large bowl of scented water was handed round, and each one dipped fingers into it with some misgivings. Yet no one balked at this unusual ceremony, not knowing whether it was intended as a joke, a new fad, or whether the servant girl had broken the finger-bowls and this was used as a make-shift. But after discussing the matter, the ladies have decided that this innovation is not in good form, that it is de trop, and otherwise objectionable: that it is too promiscuous and most of all, it is a Chinese custom. In fact, it is more promiscuous than the Chinese custom from which it was evidently borrowed. At the high-joint dinners in the Chinese quarters, there are no individual finger bowls, but several large bowls are placed near the door, where each departing guest dips his fingers into one of them. But all of them do not use one bowl, as was the case in the modern Athens, and perhaps that is one reason why the esthetic have tabooed the fad.

I find that the average Alamedan is not ungrateful, and that the citizens of the Island City are thankful for the action taken by the Board of Harbor Commissioners at the instance of the News Letter. The wires are now connected, and there is a splendid arc light in the Southern Pacific waiting room at the Ferry, and Alamedans read their papers in peace, and there is no more groping around in the dark in an effort to recognize friend or relative.

The President of the Pacific Coast Commercial Travelers' Association is picturesque in language, if not in figure. In regard to an assessment for a free bed at hospitals, he uses the following verbal flow:

"If a traveling man will not spare the small sum of 50 cents a month, the association's dues, with few exceptions, he is either a nickel-in-the-slot artist, a natural-born miser or a high-born aristocrat, whose cowardly nature, in places where he cannot be detected, scorns joining an association where religious lines are not drawn."

Professor Sir William Ramsay, L. L. D., D. Sc., Ph. D., F. R. S., who has been invited to visit California next year and deliver a course of lectures on chemical subjects at Berkeley, is sure to become very popular here. He is one of the greatest living scientists, a man of splendid character, and is extremely affable. The writer for several years had the honor of studying chemistry under him in his laboratories at University College, London, and knows him intimately. His visit will draw great attention to the University, and in the course of his lectures he will most probably make public the results of some remarkable experiments he has been conducting for some months past.

Sir William is the son of the late William Ramsay, a distinguished civil engineer of Glasgow, and the nephew of Sir Andrew Ramsay, the celebrated geologist. He graduated as a doctor of philosophy at the University of Tubingen in 1872. For many years he was an assistant Professor of Chemistry in the Glasgow University. In 1887 he was appointed Professor of Chemistry at University College, London, and holds that position still. He is a prolific writer on chemistry, and a great experimenter. Recently, by a series of brilliant researches, he discovered argon, helium and crypton, three new gaseous elements, in the atmosphere, and he is now experimenting on radio-active elements. He is an officer of the French Legion of Honor, a Member of the French Academy of Science, and of the Academies of Berlin, Holland, Bohemia, Turin, Stockholm, Geneva, and of the Royal Irish Academy. All the leading scientific societies of Europe have bestowed their highest medals on the great scientist.

If my memory serves me right, I once wrote about the Adjuster. At that time I had learned that he, to be successful, had to possess a multiple of the genius of a Hawkshaw as a detective and a lawyer, to say nothing about a degree in chemistry. The New York Journal of Commerce a few weeks ago published in its fire insurance columns the following item which it called a new special hazard:

"The manufacture of formaldehyde, extensively used as a preservative by dairymen, brewers, embalmers and others, involves a decided fire hazard as the following process will develop. In the regulation plant wood alcohol is fed by gravity from a 500 gallon capacity steel tank to a half dozen steam-heated stills, capacity of each 25 gallons, temperature of stills the boiling point of water 212 degrees. The Alcohol is rapidly vaporized at this temperature, the vapor is then forced by air pressure through a 2-inch iron pipe which is heated by a strong gas flame located immediately above stills—allowance being made for combustion expansion by quadruple pipes fitted in the trunk line, also a relief valve with a weight counterbalance connected with a 4-inch pipe, leading to outside of building. After combustion is produced in the aerated alcohol vapor by the gas-heated pipe, it is condensed in a water jacketed condenser; the resultant liquid is further strengthened by re-distillation in steam-heated copper stills and again condensed, the product being commercial formaldehyde. It will be readily observed that vaporized wood alcohol under air pressure in a room with open gas flame is an extremely serious fire hazard."

The information, if not the article itself, was furnished by Inspector Tolley, and while worthy of reproduction in the special interest of fire insurance men and adjusters, shows how varied must be the knowledge possessed by the successful Adjuster.

I do not know why, but one week I run into a lot of life insurance stories (some of which I have written and some only), and the next week it is all fire insurance news, or news connected with the agents who devote their money getting ability to that end of the profession.

This week I find the managers all a-buzzing over the organization of the Special Agents' Association of the Pacific Northwest.

The Special Agents, or most of them, are in the city for the holidays, and if the war paint which they wear will stand the Sun and Water, there will be some tomahawks out in January at the annual meeting of the Pacific Underwriters' Association.

The Pacific Underwriters' Association has been venerated on account of its age; it dates back to the big Nevada fire, but in later years it has drifted into a sort of one-man power, and the new and younger and equally as able brains object to the continuance of the one-man idea.

So in a spirit of semi-rebellion, and in a whole spirit of independence, the men behind the guns (i. e., the Special Agents) organize their own association.

It is necessary to a full understanding of the condition that it shall be known that several managers covertly fostered the formation of the new association, for the simple reason that they did not wish their specials to come to San Francisco from Seattle and Portland to attend an annual meeting of the association when they could do the same thing at half the expense by being members of the new association of the North, and they are equally disgusted with the one-man state of affairs.

Fire insurance Special Agents as a rule are a bright lot of fellows, and encouraged by their employers they did not need a second hint to get together and organize.

Their principal howl is that their present secretary seems to have a mortgage on his position, and that they can't get any public notice except through him. On the other hand, I learn that he is a most estimable gentleman, engaged in the profession of Independent Adjusting, and also is statistician for one of the insurance monthlies.

The same monthly was chosen by the association at a poorly-attended meeting to be what is termed the official journal of the organization.

Hence the war-paint on the faces of the Specials. They are tired of their affiliation with the older body. They want a new deal, and their employers are willing they should have it, and the insurance editors are up in arms about the selection of an official journal, so that the true inside facts of the case may be exposed by one or both of the other journals.

The annual meeting of the Underwriters' Association used to be held in February, but this year, after it was put to a vote, it was decided to hold it a month earlier, or in the middle of January, the Northwest Specials being in the majority, ruled by their votes that it be held in the first month of the year, which would enable them to enjoy their holidays in the city and attend the last meeting of the old Fire Underwriters' Association, and at one and about the same time.

Whether the Fire Underwriters' Association can get along and exist without the membership which the new association comprises, remains to be seen, but wagers are offered, I am told on the street, that this is the last annual meeting of the parent society.

The objects of the new association are, as defined by the following, identical in principle with the objects of the older association:

1. The fostering of good and correct practices.
2. The upholding of the honor of the profession.
3. The promotion of good fellowship among the field men of the Pacific Northwest.
4. The extension of knowledge of advanced methods in the insurance business.
5. The maintenance of Association headquarters, where business and social meetings may be held.
6. The keeping on file of the latest and best insurance literature, and records of value or interest to the members of the Association.

7. The recording of suspicious losses and unsatisfactory claims in this field.

8. The general welfare of the fire insurance business.

So why the need of two bodies?

After talking with many managers I have reason to think that the move is not any more on the part of the Specials than on the part of the Managers; that they, also, are tired of existing conditions and expenses, and are going quietly to shelve the old association, which has simply deteriorated into a ring, and that they take this means of unloading without friction.

The one unlucky insurance publication which the new association elected should be their official mouth-piece damns the new regime by faint praise tautologically, thus:

"The constitution and by-laws of the association are probably the most concise and the most flexible which were ever gotten up for any society. This is right. It has been done on purpose. Their brevity makes them elastic, and their elasticity gives power for expansion. Hence, the sphere of the good to be performed becomes limitless. It encourages every member to stimulate the activity of the society. Every member is expected to take the initiative. No one will have to depend on the action of the officers of the institution. Every one will know that the officers are simply elected to attend to the few administrative duties. For real work, for elevating the association to its true standard, every member occupies the same rank."

When it is understood that this journal is the organ of its advertisers, the fire insurance companies on the Coast, the reports and views that the old association is dead or to be killed are easily understood, for the journal in question only writes phonographically. The new organization is not the move of the Specials unaided, but of the Specials and Managers, and the meeting on January 19th will tell the story. The king is dead—long live the king!

The year of 1903 about to close has been rather an uneventful one in local financial circles, in the matter of market changes. Business in the Board has run along in the most placid manner, too placid entirely to suit the ideas of brokers who carry on a strict commission business. The panicky conditions which have shaken the money center of New York failed to break the monotony of the zephyrs which breathed so gently in the frequented haunts of the local kings of finance. It is years since the severity of their surroundings has been broken in so rude a manner, and the last financial shake-up of the kind seems to have played such havoc with the vitality of speculators as to act as a sure preventative of another outbreak of a like serious nature. With money so plentiful as it is with the savings banks, reflecting the unprecedented prosperity of the working classes, the vast accessions to the corporate wealth of such corporations as the Gas and Water companies, represented by a new issue of millions in bonds, can be accounted for readily. Had local investors confined their operation to the local line of bonds and shares, instead of patronizing Wall street so magnificently as they did, there would have been a good deal more money to credit up to this community at the close of the period under review.

The only real feature of the year outside of a possible increase in the number of banks, owing to a brief repeal of the banking law, which left the bars down for a while, and the extraordinary increase of capital referred to above, was the merger of the big powder-making plants on the Coast, all of which, with one or two exceptions, are now controlled by an Eastern syndicate. The tendency seems to be in this direction, and the incoming year will likely see many more industrial plants of one kind or another in combine, under the manipulation of Eastern capital. Viewed in a certain light, the changes which will certainly follow in business methods may be generally considered a blessing in disguise. The methods of finance in vogue here at present are a little primeval for the rapid evolution now going on in the transformation of a provincial burg into a great metropolis.

The Comstock Market, which has lain in a slumber for many years, has given signs during the twelve months now about ended of an awakening, which cannot come too soon. For a long time past the management of the mines at Virginia City have been modernizing the system of operation of leading properties on a scale which will permit them to compete in regard to cost of mining and ore reduction with any of the most progressive companies in the world. The result must be that improvements of the kind will eventually promote an activity in the market, with better prices for the stocks of all the leading companies. A good lively market for Comstock shares would be a veritable benefaction for the city, and put more surplus money in circulation in a month than the "securities" of the so-called legitimate description would in a year. San Francisco has been a slow place since Comstock speculation fell flat, and attempts to arouse the same spirit among speculators on other mining and oil boards has resulted at all times in a flat failure. This may seem strange, but it is true, nevertheless.

During the past week the Comstock Market expanded a little again, as if to show its steam-making possibilities which all the power the shorts can bring to bear does not seem qualified to interfere with. The north-end stocks as usual gave tone to the market, and the leaders have an undertone which indicates a current of strength which it would not take much to develop into a vigorous vampire on the up-grade. The outlook in Ophir is generally believed to be exceptionally bright just now, and this would appear to be amply justified by all that can be learned from the mines, which is now producing a very handsome grade of ore on a highly liberal scale. The middle mines and the Alpha-Bullion group are gradually beginning to loom up as a powerful factor in bringing about and supporting a more active condition of affairs in the market. At the present moment indications are such as to warrant the inference that this activity is not so very far away as the talent on the bear side of the business might suppose.

Local Securities Rule Quiet.

The California Gas and Electric Corporation's statement for November last shows a net surplus for the month of $37,236, about the average net monthly earnings for the past nine months, which amount to $275,736. Trading in the stocks has been light during the past week, and the same might be said of everything on the entire list of the Stock and Bond Exchange, which is only natural, considering it is a holiday season, when only miserly souls keep up their money-grubbing. People of means, who are above the sordid methods of the hungry-eyed squad of professional nickel-chasers, do not pretend to take much interest in the ordinary investment markets at this season of the year, which accounts largely for the dull times among the stock-broking fraternity. Another financial statement which has appeared is that of the North Shore Railroad for the month of November. It shows a deficit for the month of $16,897. The net surplus for nine months past to November 3d amounts to $89,608, an increase of $3,200 over the same period last year.

The Tonopah Share Market.

The market for Tonopah shares shows more activity than it has done for some months past, on the strength of the assurance that railroad communication will soon be secured with the outside world, affording facilities for the cheap transportation of ores which has been lacking ever since the mines were first opened up. It will make a material difference when this camp gets in touch with reduction works, and the owners of small mines are placed in a position where they realize on their ores. It will enable them to open up their properties to good advantage, and bring money into the camp. The only trouble with the share market is the immense issue of stock which nearly all of the leading companies are laboring under. It weighs them down and will be a bar to manipulation at all times. At least that was the experience of the men who ran the Comstock Market in the years gone by. They could never have managed matters as they did, had the share issue amounted in the millions, or to any larger figure than they now do. Just imagine a company with a million shares floated, in the public getting the necessary quorum together to hold an annual meeting or elect directors. It means one board, good or bad as it may be, holding over year in and year out, whether or not it may be desirable to the principal holders of the stock. The management of the mines ought to consider this matter and judge for themselves if things would not work to better advantage by a reduction of the capital stock.

The Federal Government has knocked one mining fake in good style, unfortunately, however, not until a great deal of money has been lost by investors all over the country. The property involved lay in what is known as the Wichita Mountains, Okla, which have been boomed for some months past "as a gold-bearing County." Under the direction of the Department of the Interior, a Government assayer visited the ground, and after an examination, reported that "none of the assays showed ore in the proper sense of the word, and that the region has no present or prospective value as a mineral producer."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Paul Gerson begs to state that in response to numerous requests he will, on January 1st, open a Juvenile Department in connection with his School of Acting, and has secured the services of a teacher of experience especially qualified for this work, Miss Lillian E. Muscio. One of the features of the department will be the dancing-class in charge of Signora Matildita. In order that each one may have his or her proper time and attention, the class will be limited to twenty-five. Mr. Gerson will give his personal attention to every pupil. For terms, etc., call or address the Juvenile Department of The Paul Gerson School of Acting, Native Sons' Building, 414 Mason street.

The fourth of the series of matinee performances by students of the School will take place Friday afternoon, January 29th, at Fischer's Theatre. A brilliant programme will be presented. The School will be assisted by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, this institution hereafter combining its artistic interests with the School of Acting.

A CHOICE RESIDENCE SECTION.

The population of the cities is showing more of an inclination all the time to remove to the suburbs. Tired of the noise, the rush, and the roar of town, they are seeking places where they may spend their nights in comfort, and where children may be raised properly.

No better residence property has ever been offered the people of San Francisco than at San Bruno Park, between here and San Jose. The location is ideal, with mountains on either side, no fogs, no heavy winds, and plenty of soft sunshine. Moreover, the train and electric car service that has been established makes it within easy distance of the city. Now that the cut-off is to be built, and with the splendid service of the San Mateo Electric Road, the time to San Francisco will be shortened to fifteen minutes. Considering the advantages, the lots there are selling very cheap. The property is in the hands of the Hensley-Green Company, Department A., Mills Building.

—The Japanese art goods displayed by George T. Marsh & Co., 224 Post street, are worth your while. Nothing more appropriate could be selected for Christmas gifts.

MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE.

The massacres in Turkey recall the infamous Mormon massacres of a half century ago. In this historic massacre, men, women and children were killed. When the Mormons were driven from Nauvoo, Illinois, for coveting their neighbors' cattle, and because of their immoralities, they settled at what is now Salt Lake City, and soon organized an independent Government, styled Deseret. Immigrants from the States were plundered as they passed through Brigham Young's territory; gold-seekers were driven out of the country, and many of them were lost in the mountains, supposed to be the work of that murderous band styled the Destroying Angels. Brigham Young prohibited prospecting for gold, prophesying that the development of the mines would cause the country to be overrun with the accursed Gentiles. In this he foresaw the loss of power, and that of the Church authorities, over the ignorant fanatics. His prediction was almost fulfilled. Finally, the Prophet issued an order, so history states, that no more Gentiles should pass through his territory on their way to California. The Nauvoo Legion knew what that meant.

Soon afterwards, in the fall of 1858, there arrived at Salt Lake two trains of immigrants—one from Mississippi and the other from Arkansas. They had united for protection, and numbered about one hundred and thirty-five.

The immigrants left Salt Lake by the southern route, with the assurance from the Mormon officials that they would be given all possible aid. In the meantime, a detachment of the Mormon militia, known as the Nauvoo Legion, was ordered southward, under the command of the infamous John D. Lee. Orders had also been sent along the road to the farmers prohibiting them from selling provisions or grain, or even giving water, to the accursed Gentiles, the enemies of the Mormon Church.

The disheartened and starving immigrants camped at a beautiful meadow about two hundred miles south of Salt Lake, to graze their stock and possibly replenish their almost exhausted store of provisions. This is a beautiful and picturesque spot, about a mile in extent, with a spring at the base of the hillock. Early one morning the immigrants were attacked by men dressed as Indians. They wheeled their wagons in a hollow square, and defended themselves. The camp was surrounded and the supply of water from the spring was also cut off. At the end of two days a white flag was seen. The immigrants believed that relief was at hand. The flag was borne by Mormons, who informed the immigrants that they were surrounded by an immense number of Indians; that their condition was hopeless, and that it would be better for them to surrender. The immigrants, unfortunately, placed faith in the Mormons, who had agreed to escort the Gentiles out of the country—if they would also surrender their arms. This the immigrants also unwisely did. The immigrants were then formed in lines—the men in one line and the women and children in another. They were marched out of their encampment, with an armed Mormon on each side. After reaching a point in the woods a short distance, at a signal each Mormon turned upon the man, woman or child at his side and fired. The work was finished with the bowie-knife. The cries of the women pleading for their children and babes were piteous, and would have moved the heart of any one save a fanatic. Mothers pleaded that their children might be spared, offering themselves as a sacrifice. These pleas fell upon hearts of stone. Children were stabbed to death while clinging to their mothers for safety, and babes were taken from the mothers' arms and their brains dashed out against a tree. Women were violated, and then murdered by the same brute, just as the Turks are doing to-day. Finally, the vengeance of the fanatics was appeased and the massacre ended. Of the one hundred and thirty-five immigrants, only seven or eight were spared, and these were babes and children under ten years of age. The children were placed in Mormon families, their names changed and identity lost, with the exception of a few instances. One of the eldest of the children was reserved by avenging Justice to appear as a witness in the prosecution of the leader, John D. Lee, nearly twenty years afterwards. Lee was convicted, and shot on the meadow where the massacre occurred.

The Mormons had disguised themselves as Indians, and for many years it was believed by the outside world that it was an Indian massacre. But the accumulation of evidence and the confessions of some of the participants, convict the Mormons of the massacre. Furthermore, books in which were written the names of some of the murdered immigrants, and Masonic emblems belonging to them were found in Mormon families. It was charged by some of the assassins that the order to slay the Gentiles was issued by the Prophet of the Mormon Church. Copies of this order have been printed, while others contend that no such order was issued, at least in writing. However that be, there is no doubt that the massacre was committed by an armed body of Mormon fanatics, who believed that they were acting in the interests of their Church as the Turks are now doing. And this in free America. Small parties were subsequently massacred by bands of Mormon fanatics, individuals who opposed Church authority were "blood-atoned," and life was unsafe there, until the Government stationed troops and batteries of cannons in this modern Turkey.

It is a blot upon the civilization of the world and a disgrace to that country that can never be effaced. Humanity shudders at such massacres. It is the moral duty of the world to prohibit such outrages among any people. The vicious or half-civilized people should be put under such controlling power as to render such butcherings impossible.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

A great many drivers of automobiles in San Francisco have in the past enjoyed the privileges extended them by the authorities of the Presidio. The roads and drives in the Government reservation are the best in the vicinity of the city, where the lover of the horseless carriage has been permitted to drive, but this privilege will be withdrawn should the reckless, careless drivers continue to abuse the favor, and thereby not only suffer themselves, but also place punishment upon a number of autoists who are conscientious and careful while driving on these roads.

The members of the Automobile Club are doing all in their power to help the Government authorities compel reckless drivers to pay more attention to the speed limit, and it has been suggested that an "auto-light-patrol" be placed inside the reservation so that the offenders will be unable to escape the arrest and punishment deserved. A few arrests would be the most effective cure.

The Automobile Club of California, through its president, Mr. F. A. Hyde, is engaged in the commendable effort to stop reckless driving by automobile owners and chauffeurs. We do not believe that any member of a reputable club will indulge in such reprehensible practice, but it is certain that unless it is stopped automobiles will be barred from many places, and notably from the Presidio. President Hyde is sending out a letter from Colonel Morris, Commandant at the Presidio, and this letter, together with President Hyde's reply, will be posted in all salesrooms and garages, and incidentally notice made of same in all papers. President Hyde is to be warmly commended for the stand he has taken in the matter. Only irresponsible and foolish people endanger their own and other people's lives, and some means should immediately be taken to restrain them.

Three entries of American automobiles, sufficient to form a team, have been made for the international Cup race in Germany in 1904. In addition to the entries of the Sampson and Peerless machines, already noted, a third was nominated last week by Peter Cooper Hewitt, of the Automobile Club of America. Entries closed at the club at seven o'clock, December 19th, without any nomination from Alexander Winton, who had been credited with the statement that he would be represented on the American team if professionals were permitted to drive.

The entry of Mr. Hewitt came as a surprise, few of the club members even being aware of the fact that he was having a racer constructed from designs of his own. In his entry Mr. Hewitt named the Trenton Iron Company as builders of his machine, and its conditions as practically completed.

Mr. Hewitt later described his machine as being not unlike the new Hotchkiss in some of its features, though in designing it he had not followed any model. It had been built unusually low, and the center of weight is below the hubs. The total weight of less than 2,200 pounds is well distributed. The gasoline engine of four vertical cylinders is of fifty to sixty horse-power normally, but capable of high development. The drive is direct and similar to the Napier system. From the engine to the wheel the only bearings that carry weight are those at angles. Magneto ignition is used.

The Massachusetts Highway Commission has licensed 3,872 operators and registered 3,206 automobiles in the three and one-half months that the automobile registration and licensing law has been in force. Professional chauffeurs to the number of 678 have been licensed. The Commission anticipates a considerable increase after the first of the year when people begin to purchase the new models. Beyond a circular which was issued some time ago by anti-automobile forces, nothing has been done that would indicate further automobile legislation. Automobileists are satisfied with the law and will probably not ask for changes this winter.

The gala performance given at the Opera in Paris on December 16th, by the Automobile Club, proved a great success. A novel feature of the evening was the ballet with automobiles, which was a gorgeous affair. There were four allegorical automobiles, representing the principal European countries. At the conclusion of the ballet there was a grand tableau, representing the apotheosis of the automobile.

The question of repairs has caused owners to meditate and prospective buyers to hesitate in making a purchase. Experience is proving that much of the repairs is due to the cheap construction of the machines. It is the saving in repairs that is causing the American automobilists to buy foreign cars. The Mobile Company is adopting a policy which will be welcomed by purchasers. This company, which has Coast agencies for French cars, the Arrow touring car, Pierce Stanhope, and the Decauville, will guarantee purchasers of these cars that repairs will not exceed an agreed sum per month, accidents excepted. Should the repairs be less than the guarantee the owner gets the benefit.

The Mobile Carriage Company sold to Major C. L. Tilden, president of the Overland Freight Transfer Company, a Pierce Stanhope, French type. Major Tilden is an extensive dealer in horses and an admirer of a good driver. It was with great reluctance that he decided to replace his fine stable of carriage horses at his Alameda home, with an automobile. He said: "I know that if I buy that machine I will have no use for my horses and I hate to give them up." Major Tilden is a believer in the future of the auto, and he is ready to adopt them in his various lines of business as soon as the commercial car appears.

The Mobile Carriage Company has opened its branch house at Los Angeles, which will carry the same line of cars represented there. Their new warehouses and garage are at 331 to 333 South Main street, adjoining the Van Nuys Hotel. Mr. L. H. Johnson, one of the oldest automobile men in Los Angeles, has been appointed manager of the branch house. It is the purpose of the Mobile Carriage Company to develop a plant similar to the one in San Francisco.

Pioneer Notes—

As predicted by some of the automobile dealers in San Francisco, the standard touring cars are going to be very hard to get this season. Several sales of Winton touring cars have been made in Boston at premiums of from $200 to $300 for early delivery on 1904 machines.

Mr. H. D. Morton, a director of the Pioneer Automobile Company, has just returned from an extended trip throughout the East, which included the inspection of the different factories represented by this company. He states that interest in the automobile is greater than ever before. All factories manufacturing standard machines have been taxed to their limit, and their entire output has been sold. Mr. Morton particularly investigated the automobile as applied to trucking, and has decided that the auto is the future vehicle for freight transportation. He states that the Automobile Show to be given in Madison Square, New York, in January, 1904, will probably surpass the annual show which was held in Paris.

Mr. J. Parker Whitney, the well-known capitalist of Boston and San Francisco, has just returned from the East, and has placed his order for a 1904 Winton, to be sent to his Spring Valley ranch at Rockland. Mr. Whitney stopped over at the Winton factory in Cleveland on his return to San Francisco, and is very enthusiastic over the 1904 models.

Mr. M. L. Goss, General Sales Manager of the Baker Motor Vehicle Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, is spending a few days in this city, and is making his headquarters with the Pioneer Automobile Company. Mr. Goss says that his company has done a very satisfactory business during the past year, and that the use of electric vehicles is on the increase.

Jesse E. Poundstone, of Colusa County, has placed an order for a Stevens-Duryea.

Pacific Motor Car Notes—

A sample of the new Jones-Corbin car has been shipped by express to the Pacific Motor Car Company, they having been appointed the Coast agency of the Jones-Corbin Automobile Company's products.

This machine weighs 1200 pounds, has 12 horsepower, and standard gearing, which enables it to attain a speed of 40 miles an hour. A carload of these machines is following the sample by fast freight. The sample is on exhibition at the Pacific Motor Car Company's office, 49 City Hall avenue.

The Pacific Motor Car Company has also added to its line of cars the Crest Manufacturing Company's Runabout; also the Crest Tonneau Car of same make, with forward motors. The same will be on exhibition at the Pacific Motor Car Company's garage shortly.

The new 1904 St. Louis Tonneau Cars are expected daily, and the new four-cylinder model "L" Packard will arrive early in January.

The B. F. Goodrich Company, of Akron, Ohio, have brought out a handsome little booklet on the Goodrich Clincher Automobile Tires—"Six Thousand Miles of Triumph." This booklet is illustrative and descriptive of the first successful transcontinental automobile trip from San Francisco to New York City, recently accomplished by Dr. H. Nelson Jackson, of Burlington, Vermont.

The very excellent photographs tell the story of his trip in an attractive and amusing manner. We can especially cite the picture called "A Soft, Restful Spot for the Tires," which makes us wonder how on earth the venturesome doctor ever got out of such a dilemma. The "Pictures of Roads Through Oregon" and "Approaching the Rockies" both testify to the splendid qualities of the Goodrich Clincher Automobile Tires.

Following is a list of names handed to this department as being recent purchasers of Locomobile cars: N. M. Brittin, New York City; W. J. Kingsland, New York City; P. F. H. Eisenmeyer, New Haven, Connecticut; Edward S. Warren, Bridgeport, Connecticut; Frank H. Holt, Staunton, Va.; Dr. Stuart McGuire, Richmond, Va.; M. Victor Vallade, Paris, France; J. W. Thompson, Yokohama, Japan; B. C. Wheeler, Shanghai, China; George Henning, Auckland, N. Z.

Among recent purchasers of Oldsmobiles across the bay are Dr. Lill of Oakland and Dennis Diamond of Alameda.

OBITUARY.

With the passing of Judge Haynes, who died on December 22d, the community suffers a distinct loss. He was a man of wonderful personal power, and his strength in this direction came from his self-contained mentality. In every situation in which Fate placed him, from adult days to old age, he was prominent and a power.

He was formerly a law partner of Judge Holmes, former associate of Roscoe Conkling, at Ithaca, New York. In 1876 he began the revision of "Estee's Pleadings and Forms." He was then a resident of San Francisco. His health compelled him to remove to Arizona. Here he became the attorney for the Copper Queen Mining Company of Biber; attorney for the Tombstone Mining Company, the Santa Fe Railroad, and several other important corporations. He was appointed County Judge, but declined the honor. In 1887 he removed to Los Angeles, where he practiced law until his appointment to the Supreme Court Commission. He was always an unassuming and approachable gentleman.

STILL INNOCENT.

"Senator, what was the nearest you ever came to being bribed?" asked the girl who always blurts everything right out.

"It was the time I voted for the postal box bill and received 7,000 shares of stock in the concern that was to make the boxes when the bill gave it a monopoly on the business."

"I should think that was a clear case against you."

"No. The measure didn't go through and the stock never amounted to anything."—Chicago Record Herald.

COLLINETTE.

By John Winwood in The Smart Set
 My garret was an empty place—
 Four walls and nothing more—
 Until the feet of Collinette
 Tripped lightly through my door.
 And lo! The walls were hung with silk
 And silken-piled the floor.

My cupboard held a beggar's dole—
 A crust and scanty wine—
 Till, 'neath the hand of Collinette,
 My bread was food divine,
 My wine the nectar kings might sip
 From carven cups and fine.

My Muse was but a beggar maid
 Who whined for scanty fare,
 Till Collinette had draped her robe,
 And filleted her hair;
 And now, behold, a goddess stands
 Who bids me do and dare!

I mocked at Love—an infidel!—
 With sorry jests and quips,
 Till Collinette upon my eyes
 Laid Love's own finger-tips;
 And smiled upon me with his smile,
 And kissed me with his lips.

Oh, you who starve in loneliness,
 Beggar or king, my kin,
 One prayer have I for both of you,
 One hope you yet may win:
 That, some day, through your open door
 Your Collinette trips in.

HIS AMBITION.

By S. E. Kiser in The Cosmopolitan
 She thought he rose to make her proud,
 To raise her high above the crowd:
 She thought he went pursuing fame
 And striving after wealth to make Her glad that she had shared his name—
 She thought he won for her sweet sake.

He strove with all the wit he had To make one who had scorned him sad;
 He rose above the common crowd
 That sorrow might eat out the heart
 Of one who had been cold and proud—
 To make her weep, he played his part.

One day when Death stood near, he told Them why he won renown and gold,
 She that had shared his wealth and fame
 Fled, broken-hearted, from his side.
 And she that scorned him was aflame
 With foolish joy and worthless pride.

PRESCIENCE.

By Rose Mills Powers in Good Housekeeping
 Love, hear the burden of my prayer:
 'Twill not be always thine to woo,
 And lifeless fingers have no care
 If laid therein we rose or rue.

Love, hear the burden of my prayer:
 Give me to-day to hear thee vow
 How dear my eyes, my lips, my hair,
 Nor wait for Death to teach thee how.

Love, hear the burden of my prayer:
 Lock me to-day in thy embrace!
 Too late when striving candles flare
 To rain thy kisses on my face!

Love, hear the burden of my prayer:
 Walk with me gently down the days,
 Lest Death come on us, unaware,
 And point the parting of the ways.

 VINCENT NEALE, Secretary.

Dear Bessie: How am I to begin to tell you of all that has taken place since I last wrote to you? There has been so much that I have actually wished some of it could be placed in cold storage to draw upon when the dull times come by and bye. There have been Sunday teas and week-day teas, luncheons, dinners, "at homes," theatre parties, and dances—enough to keep up going every minute of the time.

The Hyde-Smith cotillion came off all right, and was one of the pleasantest affairs of the season, which you may believe when I tell you I didn't get home till nearly five o'clock in the morning. First we had dancing, then supper, and last of all the cotillion. The decorations of the ballroom at the Palace—where it was given—had a decidedly Christmas flavor, with its evergreens, red berries and green lights. Gertrude, who led with Ed Greenway, wore white crepe de chine, and the favors were pretty, though nothing very wonderful, and I got so many I am thinking of starting a small curiosity shop. Kitty has done nothing but talk of the lovely dance at the Occidental on Christmas eve, which was almost exclusively military in character, though all the navy chaps that could be mustered were there, and just a few civilians to top off with.

How full this week has been! So full, half its glories cannot be done full justice to in this epistle, and I shall have to spin some of them over to next week's letter. Let me see if I can remember it all. First on the list comes the theatre party at the Tivoli—the new house—on Monday night, which was the first real big theatre party of the season, and for its inception the thanks are due to Baron von Horst, your friend Philip Paschal (who has come quite rapidly to the front of late), and Lieutenant Fuchs. The idea was first started by them for a comparatively limited number of guests, but by degrees it grew and grew, till the list of those who took part increased to sixty or more, with Mrs. Eleanor Martin, Mrs. Bowie-Detrick, Mrs. H. A. Huntington and others as chaperons. It was a very pleasant affair, ending with supper at the Palace. For Tuesday night there was the winter picnic at Mrs. Bowie-Detrick's, and we did have the loveliest, jolliest time. The whole house was wreathed with evergreens, lit with electric lights and red lanterns, and we danced in the hall and dining-room—the rest of the rooms were for resting between dances—and iced lemonade was dipped from a well placed in a nook of the stairway. Nearly all the guests were in duck, and its delightful informality added greatly to the pleasure of the evening. The Friday Fortnightly came off on Wednesday evening, and we all missed Mrs. Salisbury, who was not well enough to take her usual charge of it, her place being filled by Mrs. Pomeroy, and Christine led the cotillion.

These were the more important events of the week. Now for the minor affairs, if one may dare call them so. Cora Smedburg gave a little tea on Monday, and it is nice to see her coming out of the shell in which she seemed to ensconce herself of late. Mrs. Lansing had another big luncheon, and Maye Colburne gave Polly McFarlane a dinner on Tuesday; on Wednesday there was Mrs. Adams's luncheon of a hundred or more for Kate Voorhies Henry, and Mrs. Harley gave one, too, for Florence Gibbons, with Mrs. George Boardman's tea for her prospective daughter-in-law, Bernie, to wind up with. Mrs. Kittle's tea on Thursday was for her daughter, Mrs. Lewis, who is here on a visit to her from Portland. Such a lot of teas and egg-nog parties as there were yesterday, and to-day Mrs. George Gibbs gives a big tea for her newly-arrived niece, Stella Kane.

We are to have two more army weddings ere long, Kate Selfridge and Ethel Kent having announced their engagements to Lieutenant Kellond and Lieutenant Gilbert Allen respectively, both of the 19th Infantry. Both prospective grooms have been down here from Fort Wright, Washington for the holidays, and, with their fiancées, been much congratulated. Then the wedding of Mabel Cluff and Jack Wilson, who announced their engagement at the de Young rehearsal last Sunday will, it is said, come off very soon; Kate Du Val and Oliver Dibble are to be married in February; and think of Kathro Burton being engaged to Lieutenant George Lee of the 4th Cavalry! But her wedding will, of course, take place in Washington City, where the Burtons are stationed at present.

There have been several gatherings at the Presidio, some exclusively for the wearers of gold lace and their families; others where the civilians were also made welcome. There was the jolliest kind of a hop the same night as Gertrude's cotillion (worse luck, for I couldn't go to both), and the 10th Infantry gave a hop Christmas night for the "military only." A good deal of talk has been going on all through the holidays of the leap year party the army girls were to give at the Presidio soon after New Year's, and the date has now been set for the 8th of January. So many innovations promised, new ideas to be carried out were gossiped of, it has set every girl on the anxious seat to be there, and I felt like doing the two-step down Market street when I heard that my name was on the invitation list, so you shall hear all about it in the fullness of time.

Tessie Oelrichs has come and gone again, making such a flying visit that but few of her friends saw much of her, and many entertainments planned had to be given up. Mrs. Will Tevis captured her for a luncheon; she dined at the Smiths' and also at the de Youngs', and appeared in all the glory of a wonderful ball gown at the last Greenway dance; she was one of Mrs. Eleanor Martin's family dinner party on Christmas, and she gave a small dinner herself at the Palace, and all is told.

There is any quantity of things being arranged for the edification of the Peter Martins, who are expected here almost any time now. A lot of people have come back again recently; the MacArthurs and the Requias returned from Honolulu last Sunday; Mrs. Huntington is home from her visit East, and Dr. and Mrs. Hopkins arrived last week from their long absence in foreign parts; the Harry Poetts are also back from their honeymoon trip to the Hawaiian Islands. The Jules Bretts, who returned recently from Japan, are off again, this time for Cuba, and leave for the East en route next week. Beatrice Fife is looking fine since her return from her trip East, but seems very glad to be home once more.

But oh, dear me, isn't it too bad that all our lovely button beaux are going to be sent off to the wars—which, being interpreted, means Panama. What shall we do without them? I do hope the Presidio dance I told you of will come off before they leave—it promises to be such fun. —Elsie.

The delightful weather was a great drawing card for the Hotel Rafael, San Rafael. Several dinner parties were given there during the holidays.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie entertained the Board of Trustees of the Carnegie Institution at dinner at the New Willard Hotel in Washington, D. C., on the evening of December 8th. Among the guests were Dr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Gilman, and Judge and Mrs. W. W. Morrow. Dinner was served in the Cabinet room, and the floral decorations were chrysanthemums, roses and ferns. Secretary Hay was unable to be present.

"A HAPPY NEW YEAR."

That is the greeting which one hears on every side these days. Happiness for the year to come is the thing that all desire, and the greater the regard for your friend, the greater happiness you wish for him. Happy homes form centers for the dissemination of happiness. Several wise people have discovered lately that as happy a home as one can find, with none of the vexations of tradesmen or of servants, is the Hotel del Monte. Under new plans and new management arrangements have been made at this resort for the especial accommodation of families. Three San Francisco households well known in society have gone down there recently to spend several weeks, and there are several families from far away who have been there several months. It is getting to be the popular thing—this life at Del Monte—and the exercise and recreation that comes from golfing, driving and riding is bound to bring health and happiness.

Politics, of course, like business, suffers from the holiday dullness, and yet there is always something doing. It is only little more than a week now before the Mayor will tell a waiting world whom he proposes to place in charge of the several departments of the city Government. The Governor, too, has several prizes in his gift to be awarded soon. President Fitzgerald of the Prison Board reaches the end of his term on the 12th ulto, and there are several ambitious gentlemen who are anxious for his place. It is said, however, that the Governor is more than inclined to re-nominate him. It is urged against him that he is a Democrat, and that the Boards should be Republican. But though nominally Democratic, the fact is that the Board has been for years simply the reflection of the Governor, and the appointments have been made from the executive chamber at Sacramento, whether Budd, Gage, or Pardee was Governor, and the private political views of the members have amounted to nothing. Fitzgerald has always done what he was told to do; no man, even if he had voted for Fremont, Lincoln and so on down the list to McKinley, could have done more. Besides, if Fitzgerald is re-nominated, it will not make as many enemies for the Governor as if he gives the place to a Republican and thereby disappoints a dozen other Republicans who want the nomination and cannot get it. Senator Belshaw wants it, but Belshaw and Wilkins of San Rafael, both come from the same Senatorial District, and were rival nominees for State Senator in the Eleventh District in 1902, and to put them both on the same Board would be to create endless rows, and Pardee is a man of peace. Some man of experience in criminology ought to be put on the Board, and the Southern end of the State should not be ignored if a new man is to go on, and Belshaw is neither a student of criminology nor from the South. Dr. Walter Lindley, at present a director of the State school at Whittier, would be at once an appropriate and wise selection. Will the Governor show his wisdom by naming him?

The rumor is revived that Assemblyman Prescott of San Bernardino is to be given the position of Adjutant-General. He is anxious for the place, is devoted to military life, is a veteran of the late unpleasantness with Spain, and is a good disciplinarian. The condition of the National Guard is such that a change in the office of Adjutant-General is imperatively demanded. General Stone is too busy selling cement to give much time to the Guard, and the opposition to the militia is such that it cannot afford to drag along as it is doing now, or the first thing that happens there will be no militia, and no one knows when it will be needed, as troubles where it might be useful are not improbable in the near future. Not only is it in bad shape from the standpoint of discipline, drill, etc., but there are a number of other irregularities that have been allowed to creep in that must be suppressed. Thus the officers of some of the companies, without a shadow of authority, have borrowed money on the credit of their companies. The amount in some cases is large, and in at least one incident, it is said, the company could not wind up its affairs because a debt of this character hung over it. The Attorney-General has also held that the militia cannot exceed its monthly allowance any more than any other State institution, and that means very serious embarrassment if some one who understands business methods, and who has the time and the desire to put them into practice, is not at the head of the Guard. For those and other reasons a new Adjutant-General is needed, and will soon be named.

Speaking of the illegally created debts in the National Guard reminds me that it is said that the Regents of the University, at least those who were responsible for the auditing of the accounts, may be asked to make up what the State has lost through the defalcation of the Secretary. The Secretary had no bond as Secretary; his bond was given while he was Assistant Secretary, and therefore does not cover even in part his more recent stealings. The law requires him to give a bond, and it is held by some attorneys that those who failed to see that the law was carried out should make good the loss to the State.

I learn from Santa Clara that the possibility of naming a candidate for Congress from that part of the Fifth District on the Republican ticket is causing much discussion, and that among other names that have been suggested is that of Dr. A. E. Osborne, at one time the Superintendent of the Feeble Minded Home at Glen Ellen. Dr. Osborne has an establishment at Santa Clara for the care of patients similar to the Glen Ellen Home, and has been very active in politics since he left the State service. He is a member of the Santa Clara town council, was a delegate to the State Republican convention, and has been for some time more or less prominently mentioned as a candidate to succeed Louie Oneal as State Senator. Oneal wants to go back to Sacramento as Senator; he and his friends the ex-Mackenzieites would favor running Osborne for Congress to get him out of Oneal's way, and as Osborne is persona non grata with the Hayes contingent, he could probably get the united support of the Republicans of the county. He has strength in this city, where he is well known, and those who are booming him for the place think he will make an ideal candidate, and give Wynn a good run for his money.

I was quite amused to see Congressman Wynn, by the way, on the streets during the holiday season. As an opponent of the monopolies of the country and of the Southern Pacific Railroad in particular, it was funny to see him, accepting a pass from them to come home for Christmas. A few years ago Wynn would have hesitated to have gone to San Jose for Christmas, but then he had to pay his fare. Now when he has only to ask to receive he comes across the continent in a palace car, to eat his turkey in San Francisco on Christmas. I do not blame him, of course. He is wise to get all he can out of his position while it lasts, but how can his labor constituents reconcile traveling on passes with his professions on the stump before election? But probably they do not try to reconcile them. Consistency is not a thing that worries them much, as a rule.

Besides the position on the State Prison Board, the Governor will have the place of Commissioner of Public Works at his disposal in March, and the fight for the place is already active. It is a place in which there is nothing to do but draw your salary. Under Budd, the brother of Sam Leake who is the efficient editor of the Woodland Mail, was the Commissioner. Frank D. Ryan has the place now. Usually, however, it goes to editors. But the fact that newspapermen and lawyers can fill it successfully shows what a sinecure it is. W. D. Pennycock of the Vallejo Chronicle thinks that the salary would help out his editorial income very much, and George W. Pierce of Yolo would like the $3,000 that it represents, also, and of course there are one or two candidates in Oakland, but the Governor has given no hint whom he will appoint.

During the last city campaign, McCarthy, the head of the Building Trades Council, was very conspicuous in his advocacy of Henry J. Crocker for Mayor. It is now said that he will be rewarded by the Governor with the position of Labor Commissioner, a position now held by F. V. Meyers, whose term expires in April. McCarthy, while not a success at swinging his followers in line for Crocker, is nevertheless a strong man in labor circles, and his appointment would be popular among that element, who certainly should be recognized in the naming of the Commissioner. It is said the push and those who represented the Republican ticket in the late fight, will do all they can to persuade Pardee to give McCarthy the place.

If rumor be true, John P. Irish expects to leave his present position very shortly, and ex-Congressman Woods may get the place he so much desires. It is said that the Employers' Association, which it is claimed numbers several thousand members in this city, has offered him the position of manager at a salary said to be $10,000 a year, with a guarantee of five years in the place. It is proposed to make a fight against the unions if they become too aggressive this summer, and Irish has been selected as the best man that could be secured to lead the fight. He is considering the proposition, but as the salary is much larger than that he is now receiving, and the duties are congenial to him, it is thought he will accept the offer.

The new house bought by the State for the Governor in Sacramento nearly resulted in killing him and his family. He noticed that the house had a very bad odor, and concluded that it was from sewer gas. Two Sacramento plumbing experts, however, examined the premises, and declared it was not sewer gas in the cellar, but bats in the garret, but the Governor took no stock in the bat theory, and sent for a San Francisco expert, who at once located the trouble. The Governor and his family narrowly escaped an illness, and if he had not been so persistent, there is no question but that he and his family would have been stricken down.

—Junius.

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

During the siege of Mafeking, one of the officers organized a concert or "singsong" to keep up the spirits of the men. He discovered, according to the story as it is told in V. C., that the men had cause enough for low spirits. Hear of a sergeant in the Highlanders who was a good performer, he asked the man to contribute to the concert. "I'm sorry, sir, but I cannot." "Why?" asked the officer. "You play some instrument, don't you?" "I did, sir." "What was it." "The bones, sir; but I've eaten 'em."

"Is there anything that I might do for you," asked the chauffeur, after having demolished the grocer's store front. "Yes," came the caustic reply, "you might give me a pane."

"Is it true that you act under instructions from that great corporation?" "It is emphatically untrue!" replied Senator Sorghum with indignation. "I think I can claim by this time to know just about what that corporation wants without any instructions whatever."

Kippax—And who is your favorite author, Mrs. Softly? Mrs. Softly—My husband. Kippax—Pardon me. I didn't know he wrote. Mrs. Softly—Oh, but he does, and so nicely—checks!

"I'd like to know," began the Eden street little boy. "Well, what would you like to know?" asked his mother. "I'd like to know why sweetbreads haven't any bread in 'em and sweetmeats haven't any meat in 'em."

"So you want a divorce," said the lawyer. "Yes, sir, and if I don't get it quick I'll land in the insane asylum." "What are your grounds?" "My grounds are that my wife plays the piano from morning till night. Week days and Sundays it's all the same, and it's just about enough to drive a man crazy. Why, I haven't the nerve to look the neighbors in the face!" "But, sir, you could hardly call music a sufficient cause for divorce; what does she play?" "Hiawatha." "Just a minute till I speak to the judge," said the lawyer, making a wild lunge for the door. "I'll get that divorce while you wait."

"I'm so glad you chose the subject of 'Chinese Women,'" said Mrs. Flushly to Mrs. Gushly, who had just finished reading her paper. "The subject is so interesting I never tire of hearing about the poor things." "Mercy," thought the author of the paper. "I hope no one else stops to congratulate me before I get home. These new shoes pinch me so I can't stand it another minute."

"Now that we are engaged," said the amateur magician, "I must begin to save up for the wedding."

COCKTAIL FACTS

About 90% of the Cocktails now drank are either Manhattans or Martinis; no good bar-keeper uses any bitters but "English Orange" in making them. The "CLUB COCKTAILS," Manhattans and Martinis, are made as they should be with English "Orange Bitters," are properly aged and are better than any fresh made cocktail possibly can be. A fresh made cocktail is like a new blend of any kind, unfit for use. Age is what makes a good Punch, age is what makes a good Cordial, age is what makes a good blended whiskey, age is what makes a palatable sauce, and above all age is what makes a good cocktail. These statements can be verified by any reputable blender.

Br'er Johnson—You is accused, Mistah Jones, ob bettin' on t'ree-card monte an' losin' $90 ob de festible money. What has yo' to say? Br'er Jones—Well, we is all human, an' de game am werry excitin'!

"You're not going to bar me out, are you?" the newly-arrived spirit pleaded. "Oh, no," replied St. Peter. "You're the street railway magnate, aren't you?" "Yes, sir." "Well, just hang on to one of those straps for an eternity or so."

Ned—Your Literary Circle is making a study of Shakespeare now, I believe. Bess—Yes, indeed. Ned—And what do you think of him? Bess—Oh, we all think he's just cute.

Her Papa—And if I say no? The Suitor—Well, I confess it won't have the same effect on me as if your daughter said it.

"They say that he is a fortune hunter." "I don't believe it. Why, he has proposed to several girls who are not worth more than a million apiece."

"Faith, Mrs. O'Hara, how d'ye tell them twins apart?" "Aw' tis aisy. I sticks me finger in Dinnis' mouth, an' if ee bites I know it's Moike."

"Good morning!"
 "Good morning, sir," I replied to a pleasant faced man of about 40 years of age, as he entered my parlor. "Something wrong with your eyes, I presume."

"No," came the decisive answer.
 "Oh, I beg your pardon, but it is natural, from training, for me to take for granted that any one who enters my sanctum has need of my services as an optometrist. If there is nothing wrong with your eyes, what, then, may I ask?"

"Glasses."
 "Ah, for some one else or repair, perhaps," I ventured glad that at last I had landed on the right track.

"No, not for some one else, nor any repairing. I want a pair of glasses—those that hook behind the ears, and have rims all around, for my own dear little self," he went on.

"But," said I, "you just said that your eyes needed no aid—may I make an examination?"

"No, I know that my eyes are right, I tell you; I just want a pair of glasses."

"You've got me." And he had; that was true.

"What do you mean—where is the trouble?"

"Well, your eyes, you say, are perfect; you do not need glasses, but you want them for personal wear. What number shall I give you? What do you want them for?"

"To make me look honest."

That settled it. I gave him a pair of riding bow frames, for which he paid me $6, and he went away happy. I was stumped

"That fellow's likely-looking," he ventured to remark to the stranger who happened, like himself, to be studying the statuary. He pointed to a small discobolus. Then he was silent for a moment. Finally, as he turned away, he burst out: "Gosh! What things they do get up nowadays!"

THE FERRY NEWS STAND.

Public attention has been drawn once more to the men and the methods of the Harbor Commission by the partially smothered controversy over the news-stand privilege in the Ferry depot. The facts are these: For years, Foster & Orear have held the privilege at a rental of $400 a month. Recently President Spear, head of the Harbor Board under the Pardee administration of State affairs, notified this firm that it must get out. It is declared that he said bluntly when pressed for a reason: "I want it for Rooney, my brother-in-law." Rooney has never been a business man farther than his employment as a clerk in a wholesale grocery store. Foster & Orear are said to have offered at once to pay for their privilege whatever increase of rent the Board decreed, inside the profits of the business. But no: President Spear did not want more rent. He wanted the privilege for his own family. Then the news-men offered to sell brother-in-law Rooney a one-third interest in the business. This was declined on sight. At last week's session of the Board, President Spear offered a resolution awarding the concession to his brother-in-law at $600 a month, and then Foster & Orear bid $1180 a month for the privilege. This was not accepted, President Spear declaring the amount to be absurd. He tried again to jam the Rooney award through, but this was too much for even the seasoned politicians of the Board, and the matter went over.

Here, if we mistake not, is material for a pretty scandal. Presumably the holders of the privilege are responsible men; presumably they would not have bid $1,180 for what is now costing them $400 unless they figured on a profit above the advanced figure. The people will not care who gets the concession, but they will insist that the person or persons to whom it is awarded shall pay not less than $1180 a month for it. Most likely, if Foster & Orear continue to hold this valuable monopoly at the increased rents, they will be nagged and harassed into giving it up, and then President Spear's needy relative may get his chance at it. If, on the other hand, the Board gives the news-stand to the Spear family at $1180 a month, the public will want to be assured that there is no rebate—that every dollar of it goes where it belongs. Should the Commission accept President Spear's novel view that the high bid is too large and give the privilege to his relative for any smaller sum, we predict acute unpleasantness for the Board, and for the Pardee administration the worst scandal it has had to face.

The full and detailed truth about the Harbor Commission would make interesting reading. It is the last stronghold of State patronage in the metropolis. Theoretically, it may be correct that the State and not the city should control the city's water-front, since the State, as much as the city, is concerned in the commerce that flows through this, California's principal port. Practically this system has resulted in making the harbor of San Francisco notorious the world over for its excessive port charges. It has resulted in the creation of a political machine, an asylum for the shelter of politicians and the relatives and dependents of politicians, all at salaries far beyond the value of their services. It is stuffed with men who could not earn a living elsewhere. Most of the vast revenue it squeezes out of our commerce is expended in salaries for men who do little work or none at all, and in contracts and purchases of supplies that stink with fraud.

Lately, a politician who never did and never will do an honest day's work was without a salary. The Harbor Board created for him the position of Auditor at $200 a month. This farcical fraud upon the public attracted little attention. Now comes a still greater piece of jobbery, revealed and checked only by the clumsiness or boldness of the manipulators. We hope it may serve to uncover the obvious rottenness of the water-front administration.

SWINDLED AND ROBBED.

A few months ago the News Letter exposed the working and purpose of the so-called "Vril Association," and warned the public to pass it by. A great many took the advice, and now they are glad that they did. But not a few, mostly women, went headlong into the trap and invested all their money—poured all they had into the rat hole—and now they mourn as only those can mourn who find themselves penniless because they permitted themselves to be inveigled into a glaring swindle. They deeply regret that they did not heed the News Letter's warning, the more so because they knew that it is one of the missions of the News Letter to expose frauds and ventilate schemes that are intended to hoodwink and rob unsuspecting people.

The Vril Association is out of business. The several thousand dollars that went into its "treasury" are exactly where the getter-up and manager of the swindle intended at the beginning they should find their strong-box. He is not in the city. He does not want to be in the city, nor has he wanted to be in the city for several weeks; besides, he does not make known his whereabouts, nor does he intend to. Several "lone women" put in their all—some of them "investing" as much as $1,000—under an agreement that they should not only make enormous profits, but draw a fat salary meanwhile for their services to the Association. For a while the pay roll was large. Why not? The dupes were simply being paid out of their own investments, but all they received in salary amounted to only a small percentage of what they had invested. And in what did they invest? In the word of a stranger, who is an accomplished hypnotist, with a tongue that can "wheedle with the devil" when it comes to persuasive language, promises and mannerism. But his work is done; he has harvested his crop; he has gone with the golden sheaves, and his dupes have only the stubble as their own. It is said that the net profits that accrued to the "dear, soulful and personally disinterested humanitarian" aggregate about $8,000. He does not like the climate of California, so he will return to the scenes of his conquest no more forever. The scheme was born at a spiritual seance in Denver.

ROUGH AND RAGGED STREETS.

About the only thing that San Francisco is doing calls for criticism—and severe criticism to the point of condemnation—is indifference to the condition of some of the principal streets. Rough and untidy streets do not really reflect the taste, culture or desire of the city, but simply displays the incompetency of those authorities whose business it is to remedy the evil, and indirectly may be attributed to downright neglect of the people in general to demanding what is their due in the way of clean, well-appointed and substantial thoroughfares. The streets of a city are the arteries through which the currents of business and social life flow, and to clog these currents with holes and ridges and ponds of water and filth and stray cobble stones and dilapidated and straggling curbs is to commit a crime against decency, self-respect and convenience.

Take, for instance, California or Sacramento or Bush or Sutter streets, say as far out as Larkin, the condition of not one of them could be justified by any sort of an excuse save the one excuse that those whose public and official business it is to see to it that such rough, ragged and inconvenient conditions do not obtain. And the wonder is that property owners residing on these thoroughfares do not make life a burden to the negligent authorities until proper repairs are made. If the resident property owners on these streets did but know it, they would see and feel that such dilapidated highways in front of their houses are a reflection upon their taste for the beautiful and the convenient. Culture and refinement do not stop at book-learning, nor at an assuring bank account. It includes what is pleasing to the eye, what is not distressing to the nose and what does not remind one of the gullies and ruts and rocks of a neglected mountain road when walking or driving. The plain fact is, there is altogether too much indifference displayed by residents on neglected streets to stimulate the authorities to any active sense of their duty. What is needed is a vigorous protest of increasing vigor and earnestness until these thoroughfare evils are remedied by complete and substantial renovation. A lick and a promise should not be accepted. Let only smooth, even and clean streets satisfy, and since residents are entitled to just such highways, it follows that if they do not have such, the fault is largely their own.

THE FAR EAST MUDDLE.

A state of war already exists between Japan and Russia, but no conflict of arms has yet taken place. Russia is maneuvering diplomatically for time, and Japan is impatient almost past endurance. Both sides understand that the question at issue must sooner or later be debated and settled by shot and shell. Japan is ready and anxious to go to the field of battle, but is restrained for the moment by what is called diplomatic courtesy, which enables Russia to augment her military and naval strength on the ground. But the inevitable is admitted by all observers, and only a humiliating back-down by the one or the other could avert a clash of arms, and neither nation would submit to that. Wild rumors of the movement of troops and warships come thick and fast, but no overt act has yet been committed. A black smoke is ascending, and where there is smoke there is fire close by; besides, neither side is disposed to extinguish the fire.

What international complications are likely to grow out of it all is now the main question. Germany and France do not conceal their purpose to give their moral support to Russia. The sympathy of England and the United States is decidedly with Japan. Of course, it is not sentiment but commercial reasons that are actuating these outside nations, but just how far they can be interested without becoming involved to the extent of armed participation is a problem that no one is able to solve at this time. It is tacitly admitted by all concerned that Russian supremacy won by a victory over Japan would mean a serious handicap on British and American trade and traffic in Manchuria, Korea and Siberia, with satisfying advantages for Germany and France. Japanese supremacy would exactly reverse this order of things. It would seem, therefore, that Germany, France, England and the United States are almost sure to become actively involved as a matter of self-protection in a commercial way.

Should China join with Japan, as she is morally and politically bound to do, lest a victorious Russia should absorb still more territory of the Celestial Empire, there is no doubt that the entire family of nations would be directly or indirectly involved before the "Eastern question" is settled upon a permanent basis. The Washington Government's "manifest destiny" doctrine, together with its rather conspicuous identification with the "concert of the powers" is likely to yield a harvest of bitter fruit at an enormous cost.

CALIFORNIA'S NEED.

What California is very much in need of is a board of fruit inspection—inspection that inspects and classifies on merit without fear or favor. There is no doubt at all that California fruits suffer in reputation and in market values in the East because the packages arrive without any sort of official classification or marks to designate their quality. Fruit growing has become an enormous business in California, and it is destined to multiply in volume many times over in the not very distant future. But unless the business is safeguarded at every point by rigid and competent inspection of these products, the general standard of California fruits in Eastern and foreign markets is likely to be low.

This is conspicuously true of grape fruit. Some of the grape fruit shipped to the East is pulpy and unfit for marketing, but they are being used to represent the best product of the State, nor can this commercial dishonesty be overcome by mere protest, nor yet by asking that judgment be based upon comparison. Outside consumers want satisfying evidence that a package of California fruit is exactly what it claims to be, and since such guarantee would be of little value unless coming from a disinterested official source, it would seem to be clear enough that if California fruit is to command the full confidence of outside consumers and secure their patronage on the merits of the consignments, growers should have the protection of disinterested inspection by authority of the State, which would mean the separation of the goats from the sheep; which would mean, too, that spades would be labeled spades, and that the inspector's stamp on a package would designate correctly the quality, variety and quantity of its contents. The importance of such inspection is becoming so self-evident that fruit-growers should move as one man to secure the needed legislation, for they certainly should know by experience that the marketing of the lower grades of fruit abroad as the best products of the State is gradually creating shadows of doubt upon all fruit products of California. This is not a surmise, but an actual condition, which will grow in disastrous influence if not overcome by proper official inspection.

There is another reason why grape fruit more especially should be amply safeguarded. Pulpy and otherwise low-grade grape fruit from the Southern States and the Mediterranean region is offered in Eastern markets under the brand "California." Doubtless this is done to discredit California grape fruit in the interest of other localities; but no such misrepresentation could be made if California grape fruit had the official stamp of the State upon it. It would be a criminal act to counterfeit it or in any way palm off worthless stuff as the real article from California. It is not denied by Eastern dealers in foreign and Southern grape fruit that the California grape fruit is the equal if not the superior of offerings from other countries, but they are handlers of other fruit, and the California article is too strong a competitor. Let there be an inspection and the official stamp of the State determine the quality and excellence of California's fruits.

WATER GAS: A DEADLY POISON.

Since it came into the enjoyment of a monopoly in the lighting business the San Francisco Gas Company has been decreasing the pressure, as well as the quality, of the article supplied through its mains, and has been increasing the pressure in its literary department. While its gas burns more and more dim and deadly, it pours out upon its patrons a flood of cheap talk in printed form. Every few days householders who use gas are afflicted with tracts from the gas company, in which they are told with effusive friendliness how much they do not know about gas and its uses, how pleased the company will be to hear their suggestions and complaints, how rejoiced it will be to sell them cook stoves and heaters, and how, to facilitate their visits, street cars will let them off at the door. It is the era of glad hand and bad gas.

But the monopoly's glad hand, like its gas, is bogus. The citizen with a bill to protest or a complaint to register, finds the company's ear as deaf and its eye as unseeing as ever. The purpose of its tracts seems to be to soothe a rebellious people into acceptance of their lot without complaint. The gas purveyed by the monopoly is so wretched in quality at all times and so lacking in pressure at the times when people want to use it, that it would be dear at half the price. To burn it is to court blindness; to breathe it is almost certain death. Hardly a day passes that the Coroner's men do not gather in the body of a victim of the lethal carbon monoxide, and most of these "gas cases" are accidental. A jet gone wrong, a heater tube worn out, a feeble flame blown out by the wind, and somebody pays with his life for the gas company's criminal disregard of the law and of the public's rights—pays with his life the profits that the company pockets. Time was when a double asphyxiation was an event of sensational proportions; now "gas cases" come doubly and even in triples without provoking more than passing interest.

And cheap gas is not cheap, after all. No ratepayer finds himself paying a smaller bill at 75 cents or $1 per 1000 cubic feet of the detestable "water gas" than he did when the price was $2 per 1000 cubic feet and the gas was honestly made from coal. Many citizens find "water gas" much more expensive and far less effective. The old joke about lighting a candle by which to see the gas flame is almost a reality these nights in San Francisco.

The gas company may think that it can keep the people honey-fuddled by its fool pamphlets into acquiescence in its new policy, and it may rely in an extremity upon the fact that it has no competitors, and that the people must have gas. If it proceed much farther on these assumptions it will hear something drop. The people know the remedy, and when they have made up their minds it will be applied.

AN UNJUST FINE.

If San Francisco sinned when it re-elected Schmitz as Mayor, its punishment has already begun.

This week the three Union Labor members of the Police Commission, Drinkhouse, Hutton and Reagan, constituting a majority of the Board, found Patrolman James P. Fogarty guilty of "using unnecessary force in making an arrest," and fined him $10. The other member, Howell, dissented, holding that the charge of assault and battery and of unlawful arrest were not sustained, and that the accused had shown courage, coolness and fidelity in his conduct on the occasion in question.

The Fogarty case was an outgrowth of the Cloakmakers' strike. On the night of December 5th, Sol.

Levitus, a member of the striking union, was one of the principals in and in front of a Market street restaurant, into which a man and woman, erroneously supposed by the Cloakmakers' pickets to be patrons of a boycotted shop, had been followed by a mob of unionists. Single-handed, Patrolman Fogarty quelled an incipient riot, arresting Levitus and one other, after a sharp struggle, in which he was obliged to use his club and to handcuff his prisoners. The case against Levitus was so plain that a Police Court, notoriously tender toward unionism, convicted him of disturbing the peace. Now comes Schmitz, and through his tools in the Police Commission, convicts the patrolman and fines him for doing his plain duty.

The consequences of this damnable piece of business will probably be serious. No policeman who wants to keep his star will interfere with the pickets and "wrecking crews" and "flying squadrons" and "educational committees" of organized labor unless he sees them actually killing people or setting fire to houses. He would be a fool if he did. From this on, as long as Schmitz and his pack are in power, the unionists can do as they please so far as the police are concerned—that is, until the tornado of public sentiment fast forming shall break and whirl them out of the way of our peaceful progress.

The police courts have rarely failed to turn loose union labor men arrested for violating the laws. The police have kept a semblance of order by occasional use of their clubs and by occasional arrests. Now that the Police Commission has plainly informed the force that there must be no interference with organized labor, even when it assaults peaceable citizens and engages in riots, what will happen? We can only hope that while their Schmitz has his day the unionists will be too busy doing something else to take advantage of this situation. If not—well, for a time San Francisco will not be a pleasant place for decent men and women to live in.

After we have disposed of Schmitz as Mayor of San Francisco, after we have flogged organized labor back into respect for the law and for the fundamental rights of men, let us not forget the Drinkhouses and the others who have snarled loudest in the union pack. And let us not by any means forget Patrolman Fogarty. Let us one day give him back that $10 piece, and with it a medal that shall be at once a testimonial of public esteem for a good man most unjustly humiliated, and a souvenir of an occasion when he did his duty most excellently as a citizen and as an officer of the law.

University Gossip

By the Undergraduate.

The faculty youngsters at Stanford have a new pastime that is fascinating as well as thrilling. A railroad track has been laid along the back yards of the faculty houses, and the other day Professor Adams of the History Department was horrified to see his own youngest-born and two other midgets indulging in a novel game. They were seeing which one could stay on the track longest when the engine was coming, without getting run over. The engine was only a few feet away, and Adams was afraid to shout for fear he would distract the children's attention. They scurried off at the last minute, and when the professor was through administering the rod, he asked:

"What would you have done if that engine had struck you?"

"Done?" exclaimed the boy, with a look of fine scorn on his small face, "I'd just 'a laid down and let the thing pass over me. Shucks! didn't you ever see a tramp riding on a brake-beam?"

And the queer part of the incident is that the child really had faith in his ridiculous theory. The faculty is now petitioning the railroad to erect a fence along the track, and the railroad is petitioning the faculty to hobble the babies.

The Berkeley telephone subscribers are airing a grievance that is not a novelty in some other communities. They want to stop flirtations over the telephone. Householders, doctors and business men complain that often they can't get the line after seven o'clock in the evening because a host of sissy Johnnies and baby Marys utilize the time in striking up acquaintanceships over the wire. Even "Central" has been known to grow wrathful over some of the inane blubberings that are transacted through the receiver for hours at a time—and Berkeley "Central" does not rise to action on small bait.

Telephone dates are quite the rage in Berkeley. "Ring me up at eight, sure, and tell me what you are thinking about," pleads Tommy Traddles to Simpering Sally, '06; and doctor, lawyer, merchant and chief are forced to hold back until Tommy receives voluminous electric assurance of her well being. And for a "new acquaintance" to be struck up over the 'phone requires even a longer period. One irate merchant established himself a detective on the line, and is still at work. He takes down the 'phone numbers of the would-be new acquaintances, and vows he will make complaint to the proper authorities. No other remedy has been offered to abate the nuisance. Rubbering over the 'phone is not a pleasing pastime for a busy man, but the merchant swears he will call on the young ladies himself, and put them to the blush, and will send a policeman to the young men. He wants to know if he can't have them arrested for disturbing the peace!

During the recent diphtheria scare at Stanford, one of the students packed up his grip about examination time, and appeared at the parental abode with the intelligence that there "was a fever scare at Stanford and he thought best to clear out." The old gentleman was on; he looked down the youngster's throat, and announced to the family that "he had it sure." Therefore, the absconding student was locked up and quarantined, minus tobacco, and was put on a soft diet. His fraternity brothers learned of his predication, and a few of them called on the old gentleman to expostulate.

"Lord!" exclaimed the bland parent, "you couldn't drag him out now, if you wanted to. The joke of it all is, he really thinks he's got it, and he won't eat unless we feed him through a tube. He's a rare study in Christian Science, and I've never known where he was at before for two weeks at a time."

The boy's leave of absence is still in session.

The Looker-On

That eminent statesman and perpetual kicker, Sammy Braunhart, is once more upon the warpath; and his little axe, which seems undulled by the hard knocks of time, is swinging violently around his head, seeking the top-knots of those who have dared to smile when Sammy has spoken of the "wices" of this "vicved" world. Samuel's long suit, be it known, is "wirtue"—not political "wirtue," necessarily, but "wirtue" as a general theoretical proposition. Having been in public office a decade or more, he has seen much of it, no doubt—in others—and thereat has marveled greatly. Just now he is seeking to instill "wirtue" and "wigor" into the Civil Service Commission—and with good reason, from his standpoint.

For the past four years many of the Braunhart push have been enjoying life at the public crib. It may not have been a roisterous life, but it was easier than cigar peddling. During the days that are gone, Braunhart has seen no reason to complain against the retention in public office of his particular "temporary employees," but now that his people are about to be cast out, there is much gnashing of the Braunhart teeth. 'Tis not that Sammy cares whether the mattress-makers, the sheet turners, the mush-cookers and the others of the army of petty job-holders are classified and examined, or not, but that the new administration should capture all the patronage—there's the rub. So the Braunhart has induced the Supervisors to adopt a resolution demanding that all the petty jobs—worth from $5 to $30 a month—shall be classified, and all the applicants therefor be required to tell what they know of the history of politics "South of the slot," and of the men that make San Francisco great. Sammy is a true friend of his country. Being unable to hold the jobs himself, he turns reformer, so that if he can prevent it, the other fellow may not have the feeding of many mouths. List' to the Braunhart Civil Service chorus:

The butcher, the baker, the candlestick-maker,
Are all on the classified list.

The watchman and fireman, the cook and the pie-man,
Must do just as Braunhart insists.

The porter and painter, the plumber and waiter
Are examined when he demands.

Oh, he is getting them all; they come at his call,
And he's right up behind the band.

The kickers and knockers, and growlers, you know,
May roast him with greatest of ease.

But Schmitz hasn't a show for municipal dough.
List' to Sammy; he says: "If you please,

No official nor clerk, with a shirk to his work,
Can bluff Sam with frown or glad hand.

Oh, Braunhart's getting them all; they come at his call,

And he's right up behind the band.

Remember W. H. Daly, "King of the Dudes," who used to order six canvasbacks for dinner at the Palace Grill, and who incidentally ran the Copper King plant? Well, I understand he will soon be headed this way again, with shekels in every pocket of his many suits of clothes, ready to prove to the satisfaction of any court that he is a very much abused individual, and that those English stockholders have really deprived him of his mess of pottage. Daly is reported to be sojourning at the Waldorf Astoria where, it is said, he has nearly succeeded in astonishing the New Yorkers—and that is more than enough satisfaction for the ordinary man. Moreover, it seems he has interested capital in his tale of woe, and he will precede quite a strong array of bank books in an endeavor to do things up at the Copper King. As the tale is told, a number of the water rights, rights of way and other easements, all of which are of great importance to the mine, are in Daly's name. When he was superseded, and his attorney transferred the title, deeds and other papers to the manager sent out from England, these easements were overlooked, and Daly continued to hold them. Now, it is said, he proposes to show that the lawyer who turned over the papers to the new manager was the personal attorney of one W. H. Daly, and not the legal representative of the corporation; wherefor, says the famous interner of ducks, the aforesaid lawyer exceeded his authority, and his actions were illegal. For all these reasons, Daly says they will have to "show him." Whether his return to town be followed by a law-suit or not, the Daly presence would do much to cheer the hearts of those who ardently admire the beautiful in nature. Verily, W. H. has not lived in vain, for he hath done much to add to the gaiety of nations.

That great and glorious institution, the Monticello Club, is on the toboggan. Time was when its halls were filled by those who could not crowd into the assembly room to extend the glad hand to "the canny Scot," and his chief lieutenants. The club has really known nights when even the waving of the Murphy bandanna would not flag enough card players to get up a three-handed game. But "States fall, arts fade," and political fame passes as the fog in the night. Those who once were seekers at the Highland court are now running far afield, nosing out new places wherein to gain a foothold near the hearth. The Monticello halls are deserted; the faithful old steward nods before the fire, and dreams of the nights when there was ever a crowd around the punch bowl, and sighs wearily. He is gray and scarred with the marks of many battles (bottles, too, mayhap); his years sit heavily upon him, and ever and anon, in very pity of his lonely old self, he rings up the bar register and drinks to the "dear departed." Charles is about the last of the Mohicans.

The turning of the Lane was the beginning of the end at the Monticellos. It was a long Lane—a monstrous long Lane—but it's a long lane, you know, that has no turning. This Lane of the Monticello turned so suddenly that the deflection made a break in the road. Consequently, many of the so-called Democrats who had habituated themselves to the path, were switched off at an acute angle, and never since have they found their way back. In brief, the Monticello Club, once the home of the high joints of Democracy, is in the sere and yellow. Around its rooms are heard the hollow rumblings that precede dissolution. Its members have apparently lost interest in the organization, and of course no longer have interest in its objects—for both of these latter were buried under the ballots of last November. It may be—it is but a surmise—yet it may be that the location of the club has more than a little to do with its present decrepitude. You see, it is on the floor above the California Jockey Club, and to reach its portals, one has to pass the Jockey Club door. Now, Democrats, particularly when out of office, are violently virtuous men, and for such to be required to pass the door of the headquarters of the easy money combination to reach the quiet rooms in which the most violent suggestion is a picture of Judge Lawlor—oh, it was too much! Hence, to avoid temptation, for contamination may be in a "touch," the virtuous Democrats gradually fell away, until now there remain only a dozen statesmen to uphold the power and the name of the club; likewise, to stall off the collector of dues.

To a man up a tree, it seems that little Tommy Walsh, recently Registrar, knocked down the big persimmon in that tilt with the Mayor over the trip to Washington with the Kahn-Livernash ballots. Walsh was not looking for glory; that statement may seem strange, if you know the diminutive Thomas, but this time it is true, just the same. He was after the mileage and the per diem. Your Uncle Samuel, remember, has plenty of money in the bank, and when he sends 'way cross lots for a man, he is willing to have his guest travel in state. For insisting on answering that subpoena from the House of Representatives, and standing boldly up for the paramount dignity of this great and glorious country, little Tommy Walsh will draw down at Washington something like $1,200. He will get mileage both ways—how many miles is that?—at twenty cents a mile—say about $800 or $900. Then he will be paid $10 a day while in Washington, and if he can't manage to drag that contest along for at least thirty days, why, then, Thomas will be a sore disappointment to his friends. I think the Government will also pay his hotel bills. If it doesn't, it should, anyhow, for it is not every day that the law-makers from the backwoods of Maine, and the wilderness of Manhattan can look upon the likes of our little Tommy Walsh. A trip to Washington, $900 mileage, ten per and all expenses, why shouldn't Schmitz want to beat Tommy to it? Can you blame him? Who? Why, either of them.

The Public Works Commissioners, with the exception of the late Mr. Manson, inspected all the local theatres in town during the week to determine for themselves just what additional precautions should be taken to prevent the repetition of the Chicago horror in this city. I think they were satisfied—with the exception, of course, of the late Mr. Manson—that our theatres are in good condition so far as exits and fire protection go. Speaking of fire protection, San Francisco should be thankful for the fact that it has an honest man as Chief of the Fire Department. Sullivan's business is to put out fires, and he does put them out—excepting, of course, that of the late Mr. Manson, which is unquenchable. Two firemen serve every night on the stage of every theatre in town, and if they are caught trying to graft, even in a small way—bounce—to the woods go they. In Chicago it was, and is, different. There, graft is King. But in this city, so far as Chief Sullivan's end of the fire business goes, graft is dead. Do you remember how Sullivan refused to accept a donation of $1,000 from the Fire Commissioners when he started on his Eastern trip? Well, that's his way. A few months since, he went to the box-office of a theatre, accompanied by a friend, and put down the money for two seats. The manager of the house was in the office, and recognizing Sullivan, handed him two tickets and then shoved back his money. The Chief flushed up, thrust the tickets into the theatrical man's face, threw the money back at him, and stalked away. He has never been at that house since, and he scowls when he sees that manager a block away, and the manager can't make it out! That any one, and especially a public officer, should refuse theatre tickets is too much for his comprehension. But it is that very superiority to graft in any form that makes Sullivan the man he is. If as much could be said for some of the Fire Commissioners, the town would have occasion for even greater thankfulness.

When old John Swett said that the recent convention of school teachers was a fake, he spoke the simple truth, and every school teacher in town knows it. I bank on old John Swett. He knows his business, and he is not afraid to call a spade a spade. The trouble with the teachers of San Francisco is that the great majority of them do not consider their occupation a life work; they look on it as a hard, necessary drudgery, from which, they hope, they will be released some time—by death or marriage. There are some who are above the crowd—men and women with ideas. But what good are their ideas to themselves or to any one else? If they dare to publish them in the press, or even, forsooth, if, uninvited, they should suggest them in writing to the Board of Education; what happens? Why, they are sent for, taken into executive session, grilled, roasted and bastinadoed, kicked out, and told to go away back and sit down. The result, of course, is that the teachers are in a constant condition of terror. It is not surprising, therefore, that the recent convention was a flat failure. Future conventions, also, will be fakes and frosts, unless the existing conditions change. The martinets in the City Hall are "the responsible parties." If they would arouse the teachers to the possibilities of their profession, the Directors should treat them decently, and not like a lot of empty-headed poll parrots who have no ideas beyond vacation, flirtation, dollars and dress.

That the selection of Morley by the heirs and political legatees of Gladstone to write his biography was a fortunate one was felt from the first announcement of Mr. Morley's appointment. Some idea of the mere manual labor involved may be obtained from the author's statement that in the preparation of the work between two and three hundred thousand papers have passed under this review.

To attempt to review these volumes in the space at our command would be to attempt to summarize the principal events of English history lying between the date of Gladstone's election in the year 1832 to the year 1894, when he retired from Parliament and political life, the world's greatest citizen and England's "Grand Old Man."

These volumes exemplify that Gladstone was all things political. That no single tribute to his greatness should carry more weight than the fact that his political positions changed with the changes of conscientious belief. How he was able to retain his following through all those changes is sufficiently explained in the letter from Spurgeon, which we find quoted here: "We believe in no man's infallibility," he wrote, "but it is restful to be sure of one man's integrity." We did not need to be convinced of Gladstone's greatness, but we did need an unbiased and enthusiastic review of his life. Mr. Morley's gives us a new significance of the greatest political figure of modern times.

Novels and Essays by Frank Norris.

Doubleday, Page & Co. have issued a beautiful "Golden Gate" edition in seven volumes of the novels and essays of Frank Norris. The publication, after death, of the complete works of so young an author is warranted not so much by Norris's literary worth, but because he belongs to the existing order of things, and consequently still lives.

In these days of the "get-rich-quick" methods, Norris is a voice crying aloud in the wilderness against the gods of Chance and Greed. Believing that the novelist is a teacher whose supreme obligation is to the struggling men and women around him, not to the "cultured few," he preached the need of a literary conscience, "the responsibility of the novelist toward the plain people."

"It is the demand of the people that produces the great writer," he declares, and "the attitude of the novelist toward his fellowmen is the great thing; not his inventiveness, his ingenuity or verbal dexterity."

Holding strongly to his belief that an immoral man could not be a great writer, Norris lived up to his creed as a way of proving it. That this assertion can easily be proved a heresy mattered not to him for his ambition was to dwell upon the hill-tops of life. As a critic, he was "a Spartan in morals, an Athenian in democratic sentiment," but as an interpreter of men and conditions he was "a Pagan dominated by the conviction of an ever-coming fate." His imagination was bounded by this idea of the inevitable, and his characters struggle hopelessly against a relentless destiny.

At twenty, his first article, "Ancient Armor," appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle, followed seven years later by a series of letters from South Africa concerning the Uitlander insurrection. During the next five years he wrote for the Overland Monthly short stories and poems, besides contributing occasionally to Eastern magazines. In 1903 he published "The Octopus," a book that caused much contradictory criticism. But Norris paid no heed to the critics; he was launched upon his life work, the trilogy that he called "The Epic of the Wheat."

The second volume of the trilogy, "The Pit," was under way and went to the publisher before his death. The third volume would probably have been written upon the same lines, for Norris had ever before his eyes the fortunes of the Plain People, the playthings upon this Chequer-board of Nights and Days. Right or wrong, Norris felt that he had a message to give, and it is the living power of the West that has lost an interpreter.

French Faience.

In a volume of 172 pages, Mr. M. L. Solon has condensed a history of French Faience from its creation to gradual decay and comparatively recent revival. With great care he has searched biographies and records for facts that may be of historical value to the lovers of ceramics, but only where beauty of form or color, or the peculiar touch of the potter warrants it, does he describe in detail. The history of Faience is a record of failures and struggles, for as a ware for the people it could not compete with the more delicate porcelains. It is an interesting fact that the ware as it left the hands of the potter has little that is characteristic of the period or the maker. Only in glazes and ornamentation can the difference between the many faiences produced in France be detected, and only in the color and the style of decoration can the true be distinguished from the counterfeit. Therein lies the fascination of this ware to the collectors.

French and English Furniture.

The question has been often asked: "Why is the furniture of the present day so inferior in character and form to that of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries?"

A satisfactory answer is to be found in a book by Esther Singleton entitled "French and English Furniture." It divides the subject into the following periods: "Louis XIII," "Jacobean," "Louis XIV," "Queen Anne," "Early Georgian," "Louis XV," "Chippendale," "Louis XVI," "Adam," "Heppelwhite," "Sheraton," and "Empire." The general historical and social conditions are outlined in each chapter, and the characteristics of the furniture and furnishings are described.

There are many interesting facts in the book, which is more for the use of people desiring to furnish their homes correctly than for the use of collectors.

McClure, Phillips & Co., Publishers.

In "The Outlook" of December 3d, Mr. Jacob A. Riis begins his talk upon President Roosevelt, with the assertion that he does not intend to write his "life," but to speak of Theodore Roosevelt as he knows him "of his own knowledge or through those nearest and dearest to him."

Society

Dear Bessie: This has been another lively week in our swim, and though the dances have not been so numerous as those of last week, the youngest—or rather, I might say, the least seasoned—of the girls are commencing to show signs of fatigue. But first let me hark back a bit and tell you of the festivities which ushered in the New Year. I do not know which of the New Year teas I enjoyed most, for I was at all of them; that is to say, of those in our set, which included the Huntington's, Gertrude Dutton's, Mrs. Redding's, Agnes Buchanan's, Mrs. Ed. Schmiedell's, Amy Gunn's and Mrs. George Martin's, where egg-nog was the beverage dispensed; the day was lovely, and every one seemed to be having a good time. The most gorgeous of them all was the Huntington's, where Marion made her formal debut, but possibly the one I liked best was that of Mrs. Schmiedell, which she gave for her sister-in-law, Mrs. Geo. Howard, who looked just as sweet and lovely as when, as Nettie Schmiedell, she was one of the best-liked girls of our set, and oh, what a lovely gown she wore! Amy Gunn had with her a very pretty girl from Los Angeles, Elizabeth Gibson by name, who is on a visit to Amy.

Just as I knew it would be, the New Year's eve fancy dress party at the Navy Yard was just too perfectly delightful for words to express. Christine says she never enjoyed anything so much in all her life, and that some of the costumes were very pretty and others were very odd. Betty Moody's poppy dress was much admired, and so was Lucy Coleman's flags of all nations, as well as a lot more. The girls from town all stayed there over New Year's, and as everyone at the Yard kept open house and received calls, it must have been very like New Year's calls of long ago that Aunt Susie is always talking about nowadays.

Aunt Susie and I had a fine time at Mrs. Gibbs's tea on Saturday. As Aunt Susie says, to think of all the years Mrs. Gibbs has wasted living so quietly without giving the faintest hint of what a charming hostess she could be, which she has so delightfully demonstrated the past three years. Stella Kane, for whom the tea was given, has been here before, and was much liked, so of course she received many words of welcome.

There has been a little of everything done this week, though of dancing not so much as we had in its predecessor. Mrs. Grayson Dutton had a luncheon party of twelve at the St. Dunstan, to open the week on Monday afternoon. Then, owing to the uncertainties of the weather at this time of year, as well as the fact that some of the men invited would find it difficult to go up to the Navy Yard, the Gaiety Club decided to hold its meeting in town instead of at Mare Island. Miss Stella McCalla played the hostess at Century Hall, on Monday evening, and a delightful time was enjoyed by all lucky enough to be asked. Of course I went to Mrs. Horace Davis's first "at home" on Tuesday to greet her daughter-in-law, Norris's wife; she will give another party next week. But the great event of Tuesday was the gorgeous dinner Mr. Jim Phelan gave in the Red Room of the Bohemian Club for his niece, Alice Sullivan; nearly all the buds of the season were among the guests, who numbered sixty or more. Mrs. Joe Donahoe had her first "at home" on Wednesday afternoon, and there were more there than I anticipated, while for the evening there were several events on the cards. One was the wedding of Carrie Ayres and Dennis Searles, which took place at the Ayres temporary home on California street at nine o'clock. It was rather a quiet affair: only just their most intimate friends, with May and Frank King as sole attendants, and Doctor Clappett performed the ceremony.

Thursday was full to the brim of good things. Mrs. Gus Costigan was one of the hostesses, giving a luncheon at the St. Dunstan for Margaret Wilson. Bertie Bruce Stephenson gave a tea for Newell Brown, Maye Colburne following suit with one for Polly Macfarlane. Dr. Gibbons and Ida gave a dance at Cotillion Hall in the evening for the loveliest debutante of the season, Florence Gibbons. Yesterday Nellie Oxnard gave one of her delightful luncheons for Mrs. Lewis, who is here from Portland on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Kittle; and a gang of us met at Ollie Palmer's second at home. I had also to give a look in at the reception at the Sketch Club, and do the first at home of Mrs. Frank Sullivan for Alice, and Mrs. Sam Knight's first tea, and finished up with the dinner given by Mrs. Irwin for the Norris Davises. There is to be a Leap Year tea at the Presidio, with Lieutenant Lewis as host, and of course all are on the qui vive as to what it is to be like. There were two card parties on Thursday of last week. Mrs. L. L. Baker was hostess of the six-handed Euchre Club, and Agnes Buchanan had one of fifty guests to play seven-handed euchre, with Gertrude Dutton as guest of honor.

Terpsichore will have an inning next week, as Ruth and Bessie Allen have a dance on Monday evening, which opens the week famously. Tuesday is to be a white letter date, for that night Florence Whittell is to be given a ball by her uncle George, for which the cards were sent out last week. Among other things on the carpet is the tea to be given for Polly Macfarlane by Mrs. Chris. Reis, on Thursday, and another tea for the same little lady on Saturday of which Gertrude Palmer will be the hostess. Mrs. Frank Deering will also give a tea on Saturday from four till seven.

The Cluff-Wilson engagement is not to be a long one, for already the wedding day is named for the 10th of February. It will be an evening ceremonial at the Palace Hotel, with Mrs. Jack Spreckels as matron of honor, Pearl Landers, Carrie Cluff, Helen and Constance de Young to officiate as bridesmaids, and will be quite an elaborate affair. Preceding it will come the wedding of Louise Harrington and Lieutenant Leahy, which is named for the 6th, I believe, but am not quite sure of the date, and we may expect to hear of the cards for Bernie Drown and Sam Boardman's wedding being out almost any day now.

The arrival of the Peter Martins will become an accomplished fact next week, and the gossip is that one of the grandest affairs of the season will be given by Mrs. Eleanor Martin—who has been keeping it up her sleeve all these weeks—to give them welcome. They are to stay with her, and we may look out for lots of good things in every shape and form once they are actually here. —Elsie.

The reception of the Papyrus Club on the last day of the year, with an interesting programme, in charge of Miss Ella McCloskey, was attended by many. The Press Club Quartette, Messrs. King, McMillan, Hunt and Keene, rendered "Annie Laurie," by Bruck, and Lacy's "Simple Simon." Mrs. W. S. Leake and Mr. Dorville Libby told some acceptable stories, while Alice Carey's "An Order for a Picture" was spoken by Mrs. W. B. Buckingham, and Mme. Caro Roma and Mme. de Seminario sang very entertainingly. Benby's "Serenade" was sung by Miss Pearl Hassock, with Miss Elma Woodbridge as accompanist. Mrs. Louise Battles Cooper, Mr. Charles Sweigert, Jeanne Morrow Long, Mme. Tojetti, Grace Loring Williams, Mesdames Briggs and Cornwall, Miss Flynn and Miss Helen Sutherland, filled the balance of the programme very much to the satisfaction of the audience.

Among the arrivals at the Hotel Rafael during the past week are the following: Mrs. and Mr. B. M. Gunn, Mr. and Mrs. M. Posner, F. W. Young, Mr. and Mrs. A. M. McDermoth, Harry Gerdes, Mrs. Gironard, Mrs. Chamblor, Mrs. J. M. Todd and sons, John F. Elliot, H. A. Preston, Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, Mort Lawton, W. B. Moore.

HOTEL CLARENDON.

The past twelve months have been the hotel era of San Francisco. Many good, and some very superior, apartment houses and hotels have been erected, but the leader of leaders is easily accredited to be Hotel Clarendon, which opened in June, and which has steadily advanced in public favor. The appointments of the hotel are so thoroughly modern, and the conveniences so many, that a homelike atmosphere pervades every floor and every room. The cafe is without exception the best in California, and nothing, even in best club life, can compare with the quiet elegance of the swim and surroundings. Try the Clarendon, and you will thank the News Letter for the suggestion.

The celebrated painting, "The Blacksmith," by Hubert Delorme, is again on exhibition at the Emporium, where it will be shown for a limited time and will doubtless attract much attention. The picture is one well worth seeing many times, both as a work of a master painter and a piece of realism. Delorme's reputation would be secure if he had never painted any other picture than this.

"The Blacksmith" is not a huge canvas crowded with figures and overdone by startling effects: nothing but a smithy of the old style, with the smith bending over his forge, waiting for the iron to reach proper heat. He is the old country blacksmith about whose shop you used to play when you were a boy, and he wears the same old leathern apron. There, too, are the double-end anvil, the barrel filled with scrap iron, the heap of old horse shoes and other odds and ends, the glowing fire, shooting sparks in every direction as the smith pulls on the bellows cord.

Upon this simple background the figure of the smith himself stands out as if alive. Apparently you might walk around him as he prepares to draw the hot iron from the fire. You can almost see his hairy chest heave and the sweat drop from his brow, so real is the effect of Delorme's treatment, and you find yourself waiting and wondering why he does not turn from the forge to the anvil and take up the hammer lying there on the old splintered block. And over this homely and familiar scene streams the sunlight through door and window, lighting up the figure of the smith and meeting the warm glow from the fire.

Delorme's great picture needs no technical knowledge of art to enable the spectator to enjoy its beauties, yet it appeals both to the artist as a masterpiece and to the layman as a story told with brush and canvas and color in the keynote of sympathy for human life. One of the artists who spent an hour studying it said: "Not one painter in a thousand could duplicate the fire reflection upon the face and arms of the blacksmith, or the glow of the flame itself. Delorme had to battle with the sunlight effect from the windows and the firelight from the forge, and his success was genius in its most perfect achievement."

The picture is owned by F. F. Galbraith of Toronto, and is valued at $50,000. The painter, Delorme, was born at Givors, France, in 1842 and died in Paris in 1874.

—The epicure knows that an oyster should be eaten as near the oyster bed as possible, and that the least possible time should ensue between the time the oyster is "tonged" to the minute of consumption. Moraghan's Oyster House in the California Market is world-famed as the place best to secure the succulent bivalve. The "chef" is pre-eminent as a master of the art of cookery, and no one seeking satisfaction in oysters will ever do aught but praise Moraghan's.

It is well known and to be regretted that dishonesty is rampant among the university students. Scandal after scandal has come and gone; the library has complained of stolen books; the students of stolen money, clothes and books, and the lack of straightforward manliness has become such a problem that the introduction of the honor system is being seriously debated. In other words, the college authorities, despairing of disciplining the students, are asking the latter to discipline themselves. What is the reason? Partly the lack of a strong head. A President who calls on the Lord publicly whenever he has to face an emergency, and tells twenty-year-old boys that he feels as if he could cry every time that he is called upon to reprove them, cannot instil any robust manliness into those whom he is supposed to lead. Just imagine the head of a great firm who has been obliged to administer a warning to a careless clerk adjuring him to be good, and wringing his hands over the sin of the youth and the painfulness of the situation? It is small wonder that our college men, on the completion of their course, are less manly than their brothers who went to work in the world. Robust leadership of a strong man would clear things up morally at Berkeley.

The days of the lazy student are coming to an end. The standard is being raised at both the Universities, and henceforward men must work for their degrees. It is none too soon. For several years the University students have had a disgracefully easy time. The competition between the two Universities has degenerated into the merest advertising and scramble for numbers. Methods of touting which might have been justifiable in the case of a small auction, but were absolutely out of place in university matters, had become more and more the rule, till a line had to be drawn somewhere, for the reason that the depths of vulgarity had been sounded. Now the heads of the colleges appear to have awakened to the fact that scholarship may serve as well as foot-ball games and glee clubs. Henceforward, the class room will be of more importance.

It is not often that pathos troubles the hard heart of the Town Crier, but in the case of the death of Professor Paget, which was followed so soon by that of his wife, his voice cannot be altogether silent. Their love is a lesson to all, and a comfort in these hard times, when the villainies and the hypocrisies of our would-be leaders and exemplars take up too much of our notice. The professor devoted his life to the payment of a debt which he voluntarily assumed, and died poor, as fools count poverty, but richer in all that good men respect than most of those whom nearly everybody envies.

There is much disgust in virtuous Oakland over the fact that white girls have been discovered in a notorious Chinese place. There is a whole lot of bosh talked about the girls being lured there by a Chinaman. Any girl who could be lured into that sort of thing by a Celestial photographer is not worth much of a fuss. There is very much jubilation in the city across the bay that the girls were from San Francisco. For once in a chequered career, Oakland is entitled to congratulations.

When a policeman does his duty as did Fogarty, the community will not stand by and see him punished. The judges are afraid of the unions, and henceforward it will be impossible to secure any justice for the officials who stand for public order in the face of violence and abuse. The most that can be done is to pay their fines for them, and see that their good deeds do not entail any suffering. Let it be known that wherever a peace officer is punished by the local Dogberries for carrying out his duty and protecting the citizens, the money will be forthcoming to pay his fines and to keep him from suffering, and we shall be able to maintain the outward semblance of decency, at all events, in spite of the efforts of our officials and the perjured cowardice of the Police Court Judges.

There is a report, probably malicious, that Mrs Schmitz makes her children call their father "Mayor." At any rate, something must be filling his musical soul with swelling waves. His idea that he could successfully grapple with the Federal authorities could only have been born of colossal vanity or an equally enormous ignorance. Probably both had a share, for the Mayor is a handsome man, and has been a little spoiled in his time. It is a pity he did not persevere. To have lined up against Congress would have taught him his limitations, as it has many abler and bigger men. It is getting time that our local politicians began to learn that there is a power in the country, and that their little schemes do not include the whole universe.

We are to be treated to another exposure in the matter of the Clunie estate. It is a queer thing that our attorneys cannot put through a simple piece of business without making everybody who has any connection with the deceased ashamed and annoyed. The pettifogging which is spreading like a malignant disease through the bar of California and particularly of San Francisco, will yet destroy the profession. The sharp practices which were formerly confined to the shyster part of the profession are too generally invading the better class of law officers, and the whole structure of the legal profession is weakened. All this is of comparatively recent growth, for it is not many years since our local bar was one of the finest and cleanest in the world.

The Town Crier would like to know how so many professional men of standing can find time to be always at the race-track. If you are at the Ferry Building, you can see them dropping off the cars one by one and making their way to the boats. Watch them at the races, and they are hanging about the bookmakers' stands. When these races can have such a disturbing influence upon men who have sufficient balance to have acquired a certain standing, what must be the effect upon the callow and the weak? There is something unhealthy in our make-up when the racing microbe can get so strong a hold; and the racing is, generally speaking, not straight, either.

What's a restaurant? An eating place. What's a French restaurant? The answer may be found in the list of things to be sold on account of the closing of the Maison Riche for running illegal gambling games. There are a few pots, pans and kettles in this inventory, but it consists mostly of bed-room suites, mattresses, sheets, pillow-cases and like fittings. All of which proves what I have always maintained—that French restaurants are indecent places, unfit for the patronage of respectable people.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 2

It's awfully jolly to me to be able to say something which I know to be right and which the other fellow says is wrong. Wrong only because the statement hits the objector in a spot which is tender to the touch. I mean pressure and not "touch" in the vernacular of the Coast, which I learn is a slang synonym for asking a temporary cash accommodation from a fellow clubman or a friend. In my mingling with San Francisco's best of clubmen I learned to my cost the definition of "touch." I did not know it before, but I do now. I have acquired a collection of autograph cards that in event of any one of the artist signers becoming famous I shall recoup the what to me looks like a loss. I am really only out a few hundred dollars, and have had sufficient fun studying the various methods used by the autograph sellers to compensate me for the expense. I am not, I flatter myself, as simple as I look, and I expect the "autographs" to be purchased by the San Franciscans who made them at cost prices. If not redeemed, I shall treasure them as mementoes of my visit, and as an evidence of poor judgment. My man has not as yet been able to find apartments which suit me, and I am terribly unsettled. It is bothersome to a man to be compelled to put up with the unhomeness of the hotel and the perfunctory "Good evening, sir," of the waiters and hall boys at the clubs. I hope to get settled quickly, and my own establishment started, and then I shall be better able to enjoy the funny things I see done by the barbarians of society at this place.

I had quite expected to have a lonesome New Years. I was a stranger in a strange land, and had been taken in. A cablegram from the pater, which I received in the evening, set me on my feet. I called Roger, my valet, dressed and thought I might perchance find some friend at the club who would dine with me and help to drown my solitude and end the year. I had barely handed my hat and stick to the hall-boy when I was greeted by a "Hello, Travers!" from a chap whom I met in Scotland, and who is a Christ Church-Oxon-Man and an Honor man. We dined at my expense, and then called a cab and went down to Market street to see the old year die. The cabby would not drive fast, and the horse walked up one side of the beastly street and then down the other. When we finally got to the hotel, I said, "Pay him, and let's foot it for a while."

We did. The experience was anything but pleasant—the men were so illy-bred that they made vulgar remarks because two gentlemen in evening dress were taking a walk. I resented it once, and called a "bobby." I repeated to him the insulting language of the man who had made himself offensive, and requested his removal. But all the satisfaction I received from the peace officer was a remark which sounded like "G'wan!" I have formed my opinion of San Francisco's constables, and I think they need some of England's Scotland Yard Inspectors to sharpen them up. I also formed my opinion of the young women I saw. They are not a bad-looking lot in this city, but I fear that the most of the complexions I noted would not stand a rain-storm. The women were athletic enough in appearance, rather too much so, but their gowns were neither fit for kettledrum, tea or dinner, and much less for the street. I think they were all good women. I think this in spite of their high-heeled shoes and high-held skirts. They were not the class to raise a nation or to make a wife. The lack of suggestion in either look or action pleased me, but the taste displayed in their costuming was simply perdition. I was told by my chum that New Year's eve in your city is a sort of Mardi Gras. I found out later that it was worse. My pocket was picked of a pair of Dent's and a couple of silk handkerchiefs, while my friend was relieved of a diamond-studded locket which he wore on his job. After we got back to the hotel, through the horn-blowing, confetti-throwing mob, and sat down to discuss a bottle "frapped," I even confessed that I had enjoyed myself. I had seen an innumerable lot of pretty girls "en passant"; I noted their carriage and gestures, and they were girls with stride and action, with trim hands and ankles, such as I am convinced is indigenous to San Francisco and California. I realize that they were not, of course, the kind or class that I could know, and I do not desire to meet them. I may look at them and admire them as I do my horse for his points, or my dog for his affection—but nothing more for Travers.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP TO YOU ON THEATRICALS.

COLUMBIA—Last week. "The Girl With the Green Eyes." Good.
FISCHER'S—"I. O. U." Last week. Not up to usual standard.
TIVOLI—"Ixion." Last week. Mystical extravaganza. Entertaining
GRAND—Joe Kelly, "The Pipe Dreamer," in "The Head Waiter."
GRAND—Special—Patti, January 11th.
ORPHEUM—Joan Haden's "Cycle of Love." New company. Good.
ALCAZAR—"A Lady of Quality." Enjoyable. Well put on.
CENTRAL—"Monte Cristo." Spectacular.
CALIFORNIA—"Happy Hooligan." Cartoon play. Amuses children.
LYRIC HALL—Burton Holmes. Illustrated lectures.
CHUTES—The Brittons.

Patti did not attract a fashionable crowd at the Grand Opera House Thursday night. The audience did not show disappointment in the weakness of her voice—the voice that once demanded recognition from the world—but it was weak nevertheless. The "wise old owl," as Ferris Hartman would say, makes no attempt at the higher or lower notes, and sings only in the middle scale. There was nothing grand nor nothing sweet in her rendition of the programme, and yet the audience applauded—applauded Patti, not her voice.

Although the possessor of a repertoire numbering thirty-odd roles, it is a fact that Mme. Adelina Patti has never turned her attention towards the classic operas, as "Zerlina," in Mozart's "Don Giovanni," is the only classic role which she ever essayed. Masters of singing will point out that her avoidance of the heavier roles in grand opera is the cause of the long preservation of her marvelous voice. Mme. Patti will be heard for the last time in San Francisco at the Grand Opera House Monday afternoon, January 11th, at 2:15.

Adele Block as Cho in "A Lady of Quality" is a very pleasing personation. The carpingly critical might say that there is a dead level in the voice of the Wildan's Diana, but I find on consultation with many of those on the foreside of the footlights the "eternal feminine" and the rhapsodical youth, that a dead-levelism and intense earnestness are supposed to possess consanguinity. Adele Block is sweet, winsome, tragic and tantalizing. She has a magnetic temperament, which is easily transferred to her audience.

Durkin is such a villainously good villain that you sorrow at his demise.

Harry Hilliard is but a poor Lord Osmonde. He lacks vim, and his dialogue lacks the bubbles of brightness necessary to make it interesting. "The Lady of Quality" has been presented here on two other occasions, and the Alcazar Company's version is as good as any we have seen.

* * *

Clyde Fitch might have written "The Girl with the Green Eyes" for Ida Conquest and company, it is so well given at the Columbia. Mrs. Thomas Whiffen easily shares honors with Miss Conquest, and Robert Drouet is an associate of which any star might be proud.

* * *

"Ixion" still holds the boards at the Tivoli to large houses. The staging and scenery are excellent. The Bothwell Brown's dancing class might well be dispensed with in favor of a professional chorus. The dancing class, although well trained, did not give satisfaction at the Grand, in "Cleopatra." It does not take an audience long to feel the difference, and this is because of the lack of professional swing. The performance is a generally pleasing one, however, and fills the house nightly.

"Monte Cristo," at the Central, pleases the lovers of the 1-2-3 drama, and Herschel Mayall received the plaudits of a breathless audience. Eugenie Thais Lawton gave a fairly good piece of stage work. Her transition from youth to old age shows much painstaking study. The setting is good.

* * *

Fischer's Theatre, with "I-O-U" in its last week, has been well patronized. The play is not up to the standard of this house, and the company seems to be suffering from a sundering of relations. The new company, or rather the old company, with a few new faces, will take up "The Beauty Shop." This is announced as a roaring local farce, with a plot, and was written by Mr. J. C. Crawford, a San Francisco newspaper man. The only evidence, and the best at hand, of the taking qualities of the play is the enthusiasm of all, from scene-shifter to manager. Helen Russell will make her first appearance, and judging by her photographs, the title of Madame Voluptia, the Beauty Doctor, fits her well. Mr. Dill will personate the president of the Pretzel Trust, Mr. C. Schwabber Pilsener, while Kolb becomes Mr. Jay Bierbump Culmbacher. The names in the play bill should be enough to fill the house.

* * *

At the Central, "The Moonshiners" will be put on. This is a melodrama with impressive scenes and magnificent scenery. The play is located in Virginia, and it is said to have had great runs in the the East and South. A new comedian will make his initial appearance as "Eph, the African."

* * *

A story of cross purposes and conditions gone awry is afloat about Fischer's. It is said Barney Bernard undertook to obtain a raise in salary that would have enabled him to own a string of horses. He was signed for a Los Angeles house, and report says the Angeleno audiences gave him the frozen face. He resigned, and was looking longingly toward Fischer's again. He knew the public wanted him, and he knew Fischer wanted him. Fischer knew this, too, but he had the Actors' Union on his hands. Amber, Dill, Kolb and Winfield Blake were all howling for a raise. There should be a Hague Tribunal of Arbitration for disgruntled actors and managers with Flashton Grievance, he of the interviews, as chief arbitrator.

* * *

"Als ich Wiederkam," a sequel to "At the White Horse Tavern," will be presented at the Columbia by the Alameda Lustspiel Ensemble. The cast is large, and the very acceptable manner in which "The White Horse Tavern" was presented is a guarantee of a satisfied patronage. "Als ich Wiedenkam" is said to be a very amusing comedy.

* * *

"The Moth and the Flame," one of Clyde Fitch's earlier works, a social problem and a play of polite manners, is to be the attraction at the Alcazar. This play is a strong one, and it should receive excellent treatment from the unusually intelligent company. Durkin will essay the juvenile, and Mr. Conners will take up the part of the villain. The rest of the company is nicely cast, and should give a good account of itself. This house has "Mrs. Jack" in preparation. "Mrs. Jack" ran for nearly the whole of last season at "Wallack's," and is by Leo Ditichstein, author of "Are You a Mason?" and other popular plays.

Alberta Gallatin "on special tour" will be presented January 10th at the Columbia in Ibsen's "Ghosts."

Hoyt's "Trip to Chinatown" is the bill for next week at the California.

Stanislaus Stange and Julian Edwards have collaborated to write "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and this is to be the next Tivoli bill. This distinctly American work is said to have scored great success in the East. There is a splendid plot, a climax and anti-climax. The music is a blending of the themes of the North and the South.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Deaves will present their "Merry Manikins" for the entertainment of the Chutes' audiences this coming week, and young and old alike will have ample opportunity for laughter. La Drew and La Zone, "The Daffy Dame and the Tad," promise an amusing act, and the Girdollers, society acrobats and equilibrists, will contribute the athletic portion of the entertainment; Luce and Luce will offer a comedy sketch, and Mabel Lamson will be heard in new illustrated songs. Joe and Sadie Britton, the colored dancers, will appear for the fourth and last week of an unprecedented engagement, and the animatoscope will complete the programme with interesting and amusing moving pictures. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night. The babies in the life-saving incubators are thriving, and the collection of animals in the zoo is constantly in receipt of rare additions.

The Orpheum bill shows a new company, with Henry Thurston, "the man who mystified Hermann," played up strong. Walno and Marinette, Austrian grotesques, and Asra, the juggler. Asra is a specialist with billiard balls. Fred Hallen and Molly Fuller, in their last appearance, will give Cohen's successful comedy, "His Wife's Hero." The bill throughout seems good, in the advance notes, but it will have to be more than good to beat the "Road Show."

An Amateur Chauffeuse

Click, click, click, went the typewriter. Marion Wesley paused and pushed back her hair from her forehead with a tired gesture. Office hours were over, but she was clearing up work in connection with the employment agency in which she was part manager. Suddenly there came a sharp rap. The door opened, and a girl whirled in all flying laces and chiffon, and flung her arms round the neck of the soberly-clad figure behind the desk.

"You dear old thing," cried the apparition in a slightly high-pitched voice, "I've found you out at last. I'd given it up as a bad job when a cute young policeman gave me the cue. Fancy if I'd had to return to New York without seeing you. Not that I should have returned. My dear, I cut myself adrift. Behold a pauper."

And the girl in a peach and gray confection swept her friend a deep curtsy. By this time Marion had recovered her presence of mind and touched the electric bell. A grimy-looking office boy appeared in answer to her ring.

"Jones," she said, pulling out her purse, "go across to the A. B. C. shop and bring over tea for two and bread and butter, and do not forget the cream."

"Wahn't you 'ave no kyke?" inquired the youth, with an amazed stare at the dainty vision in the chair opposite.

"Yes; cake, of course, and strawberries," promptly responded the newcomer. "Nasty little boy! Why do you keep him, Marion?" asked the vision, otherwise Pauline Augusta Vanderheim, step-daughter of Jabez D. Barnes, of New York.

Marion Westley smiled at the question. "I think I keep him for the same reason that I bought these office chairs—both are cheap. Employment agencies do not run into wildly extravagant dividends at the end of the year."

"So times are bad, eh? Well, it's lucky I've come along to bustle them up," remarked Miss Vanderheim. "Now, little boy, you will spill that cream. Ah! I knew it." She started up and rescued the tray. "I will pour out for you. Sugar and cream, dear? As I told you," she resumed, "I've burned my boats—cut the painter—that's the English expression, isn't it? And now I'm on my own. You see," she continued, sipping her tea serenely, "poppa tried on what I hear is a common dodge with parents this side. He wanted to fix me up with a husband."

"And you did not like his choice?" asked Marion, edging in a word with difficulty.

"My dear, I've never seen him. It was some rich, stuck-up Englishman—begging your countryman's pardon. I was just to be packed off like a bale of dry-goods. I declined even to be introduced to him under the circumstances. I told poppa he would certainly object to my choosing a new mamma, and I had equally strong objections to his selecting a son-in-law."

Marion Westley laid her hand on her friend's arm. "I will do my best for you, dearest, you may be sure, in memory of the happy days we spent together in America. But I used to think that, perhaps, there was some one else. Are you sure? Quite sure?"

The young visitor's face flushed crimson and she snatched her hand away. "You are altogether wrong. There never was anything between us," she said hotly. "As for earning my own living, I never thought it was so stupid, but I guess there are only two things I can do well—ride a bicycle and drive a motor car."

Marion laughed. "Yes, I know your qualifications as a chauffeuse. I have them all recorded here, and the races you have won for your father. He was proud of you, Paula, as proud as though you had been his very own daughter. Can't you forgive his ambition for you?"

Marion was doomed to interruptions that afternoon, for hardly had Pauline Vanderheim driven away (her ideas of pauperism not being precisely practical) than there was another knock at her inner door.

"Come in," she called somewhat impatiently. "Oh, Donald, is it you?" and her voice changed. "Come in. I am glad to see you."

"So it would seem," answered her cousin, Donald Mainwright, discontentedly. "You have taken pains enough to avoid me, I think, shutting yourself up in a poky little hole like this. Pray, how long is this farce to continue?"

"Farce?" timidly echoed Miss Westley.

"Yes, farce, Marion. What is the good of humbugging about with an employment agency when you know I am only longing to give you anything you want?"

"Now, Donald, do give up prowling around," she continued, smiling. "My work is quite respectable. I assure you. Lots of women do this sort of thing nowadays. Sit down and tell me about yourself. Who is the latest? A little bird whispered that you were very nearly annexed in the States."

"Nonsense!" he protested angrily. "People will talk. It was all a mistake. She never cared for me."

Marion looked at him, smiling at the ingenuous confession. What a boy he was, after all! So she encouraged him to talk, and soon had drawn out the whole of his pitiful tale. "She was the most charming being in the world. But she would have nothing to say to him. 'I'm not good enough for her; she is so clever and all that,' he concluded sadly. Marion listened patiently to the end. "You shall go in for some hobby," she counseled. "Why not cultivate your tenants? The proper study of man is man, not woman."

"There now, Marion. That's too bad to hit a fellow when he's down. As it happens, I have taken up motoring. I've just got an electric car, a real beauty, but I can't find a decent driver. I've advertised and hunted around for a week. All the fellows who apply are such awful cads that I should hate to ride with them. I suppose now that sort of thing is not in your line?"

Marion laughed. "Well, hardly," and then she paused. A wild idea had flashed into her brain. "It happens strangely enough, though, that I have heard of a driver only this very afternoon. The—person has won several races and has qualifications that are quite unexceptional."

"What is the fellow's name?"

"Vanderheim."

"Oh! American, I suppose? Well, so much the better. I wish you would send word to him to come up for a trial trip to-morrow. By Jove, Marion, what a brick you are!"

"For finding you a chauffeur? Well, I hope it may prove so."

"Please, sir, the car's at the door."

Donald Mainwright looked out on a dense fog depressing to every sense. But he was anxious to try his new toy. "All right, I'll come," he answered. "Is the new chauffeur here?"

The valet coughed discreetly. "The new—? Oh, yes, sir! if that is the name, sir. And a rummy name it is, and the rummiest go I ever knew," he added in a scandalized aside as he helped his master into his big fur and coverall.

The electric light was switched on in the hall, and as Donald Mainwright stumbled out into the gloom he felt almost blinded by the sudden transition. "All right; go ahead," he said, and away they rushed. "I say, do you think it's safe to make quite such a pace in the darkness?" he inquired anxiously.

"Quite safe."

The words were simple enough, but he started and peered anxiously across at his companion on the driving seat. He could make out nothing but a dark mass surmounted by a white peaked cap. "You have won three races in America, I understand."

"Yes."

"And you feel quite competent to drive in London?"

"Quite."

The machine swerved by a hair's breadth, thus just avoiding a lumbering 'bus, and pursued its rapid course. They were leaving the crowded streets behind them and the fog was lifting.

"What nationality are you?"

"American."

"How long have you been a chauffeur?"

There was a perceptible pause, and then, "I don't know!"

"You don't know! Whom have you driven for?"

"My father."

"Your father? Why, then, how old are you?"

No answer.

"How old are you?" he repeated impatiently.

"Come, I have a right to know," and he laid his hand on the driver's arm.

It nearly cost him an accident, for the jerk of the hand on the wheel caused the machine to swerve suddenly aside and nearly sent it against the curb-stone. The driver righted it in the very nick of time and sent it flying ahead at an increasing pace. Both were trembling, but not from fear. In that instant they had run under an electric light and caught a glimpse of each other's faces.

"By Jove! It's little Lena," muttered Mainwright, and then fell silent in sheer amazement.

She slowed down the machine and turned to him. "Let me tell you how it came about," she said. "It was Marion. She sent me your address. I did not know who you were. Oh, you must believe that."

"Of course I believe it. You always did avoid me," he answered ruefully.

She nodded in a gratified manner.

"Well, I saw you under the electric light as you came out of the hall, but you did not see me in the fog, and I hoped to get back before you found out."

"But now I have found you, and you cannot possibly escape, and leave me in the lurch. I cannot drive myself. Lena, do you remember those days in the mountains?"

"I can't," she said. "Not now. I'm too busy," but the car was slowing down and was almost at a stop. "There is something wrong. The battery is giving out. I wish I had looked at it before we started."

"I don't," said he, "for now you will have to wait until you have answered my question, and then—why, there is a fresh charge in my bag."

She sighed resignedly. "Well, what is it you want to ask?"

"Do you remember those days on the mountains?"

"I'm not likely to forget them, I should think," she answered, demurely, "considering whom I met there."

"Ah, you mean—"

"Marion Westley, of course."

"Oh, Marion! Yes, she is a dear, good creature: still I do wish you had said—"

"Who?"

"Why, me!"

"You? The idea! Why should I remember you?"

"Ah, why indeed?" he sighed. "I dare say you forgot all about me long ago. But I never forgot you. Lena, and I wouldn't even look at any of the New York belles. Why, there was one old fellow—he'd heard I was heir to a title, I suppose, for he was a millionaire—who actually proposed to me for his daughter. I would not even meet her."

"What was her name?" asked the chauffeur, trembling.

"His name? Oh, Barnes; Jabez Barnes. What is the matter?"

Lena had grown very white. "Then it was you whom he meant," she gasped. "I—I never asked your name, but I did not want to meet him—the Englishman—and so I ran away and came here and asked Marion to find me work, and I couldn't be anything but a chauffeur, and Marion sent me to you."

"By Jove, she did! Well, I always said she was a brick, but I never knew just what a brick she was!" exclaimed Donald. "And now, let's get in a new charge, and ride along and tell her."

Half an hour later the fog had lifted. Marion Westley, glancing out of her office window in Little Portland street, saw a motor car glide up and stop at her door. There was a girl on the driving seat dressed in a big coat and a white peaked hat. A man sat beside her.

Marion sighed and then smiled. "It is quite right," she said to herself. "She will steer the car for Donald now and always, but he will not know it. So, best for both."—Sunny South.

Financial Review.

The Sweepstake Deal Winds up in Court.

The inevitable has come to pass again. Eastern folk get a California mine handed out to them for $6,000,000, and they snap it up as a bargain. The fact that mines of this value are few and far between in any part of the world did not serve to render them at all shy of the proposition, and the sale of a practically undeveloped claim at such an extraordinary price was heralded all over by that portion of the press which would undertake to defend Satan himself if he paid for it. Now they are inclined to the belief that the mine was salted. Tricks of this kind have been played before in California, which is no saying, of course, that the Sweepstake property was salted. The ruin of the Frenchmen who bought the old Succor Flat mine one day and found that it was salted within the next twenty-four hours, is still fresh in the minds of a good many people. Again, the late Melville Attwood had his samples salted on him at the time they were doing up the bankers of Narbonne, building flumes upside down and playing all sorts of pranks down at the Quartz Mountain mine. Fortunately, Mr. Attwood was too clever to be caught napping, placing little trust in the locks and bars on doors and windows of a newly built assay house, even although every precaution was taken in the way of sealing them up for the night. He took pains the next morning to run the samples through the same mesh sieve he had used the night before, and to his astonishment found particles of the yellow metal which would not pass, on account of coarseness, and yet the seals were intact on doors, window and chimney. How these samples were salted, under the circumstance, was something which puzzled the distinguished geologist of over 50 years' experience, until the day after his death. Strange things do happen in mine promotion sometimes.

The market for Comstock shares is beginning to develop a tone which suits everybody in the business except a few short sellers who would "bear" a stock for the possible profit of a copper cent. These people are, as a rule, outside of the pale of legitimate speculators. No one will attempt to deny the right of an operator to play any side of the market he may choose. There could be no "bulls" on 'Change were there no "bears;" the one is of as much vital importance to the market as the other. It would not be proper, however, to include the so-called "bears" of Pine street in the same category. They are, as a rule, wreckers, pure and simple, striving eternally to tear down what others are working to build up with the recourse always open of laying down their cards when the financial strain becomes too heavy, and then it is a case of "What are you going to do about it?" in so far as the men on the other end of the string are concerned. The end of a number of these people is in sight, and the street will be cleared of them in a few short months. Ophir is now giving evidence of the reserve force in store in the Comstock market, backed by something that money on the short end cannot beat, and that is ore. During the week the news that the ledge has been widening on the 1800 level, two of the last cars of the ore shipped to Selby's giving returns in gold equivalent to $111 per ton. This is the same vein that has produced so well in the Con.-Cal.-Virginia mine, and which is working north, through the Ophir ground, opening out in size and value all the time. Active trading and higher prices along the entire list may be anticipated for months to come, with a marked increase in the output of bullion from mines along the lode, many of which have been idle for years.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

Business continues dull in the local market for stocks and bonds, the only feature of the week being an overplus stock for sale of the S. F. Gas and Electric and a decidedly weak tone in Alaska Packers. The stockholders of the Gas Company do not seem to have profited much from the recent manipulation, which struck the Board of Directors as such a capable bit of work that they rewarded Mr. President Brown with a small fortune and a raise in salary of $25,000 a year. Without attempting to enter into the controversy now going on between the Company and its clients over the quality of the gas it sells, it would strike a man up a tree that there is more heft at the managerial end of the business, and that perhaps trouble may result from a retrenchment in wages to counterbalance the high salaries paid the men who fill leather-backed chairs and travel in Europe on leave of absence. One would naturally consider that, after undertaking the contract to pay interest on about three times in excess of what a good serviceable plant would cost, that it would behoove all concerned to devote their energies toward the conclusion of work which was far from being finished by the operation of tagging on a number of millions to an already immense capitalization. All facts considered, the wonder is that the stock holds up as it does. As a combination, our re-constructed Gas Company is anything but a success, and a question suggests itself as to what the majority of the present management knows about gas making anyway. In bonds there was little done during the week and prices show no particular change.

American Production of Precious Metals.

California ranks second in the annual statement of the approximate distribution by producing States and territories of the yield of gold and silver of the United States for the calendar years of 1902 and 1903. The output of California for this term is estimated at $16,535,525 in gold and $497,664 in silver, trailing along after the heels of Colorado, which is credited with a yield during the same period of $22,000,000 in gold and $7,517,812 in silver. Utah comes third with a yield of $5,036,599 in gold and $8,000,000 in silver; then Montana, with a record of $4,134,367 in gold and $5,400,000 in silver. Alaska is only credited with an output of $6,921,157 in gold and $16,540 in silver. The States which show an increase for the year in the production of gold are Idaho, Nevada, Utah and Washington. Alaska, Colorado, Montana, South Dakota and Oregon show a decrease. The total output of gold for the period under review was $74,425,340, and of silver $30,520,688. This, in comparison with the previous year, shows a total net decrease in the gold production of $5,575,000 and a net increase of $1,110,000 in the production of silver. The Klondike produced in round numbers $12,000,000 in gold against $14,000,000 during the previous year.

The decrease of gold production in Alaska is attributed to a short season of water supply. In Colorado the decrease is attributed to the miners' strike, which interfered with production. It is not difficult to assign a cause for the decline in the California yield. Mining has been practically at a stand-still all over the State owing to labor difficulties, and it is probable that the production will be still less before the trouble is definitely settled. As it now stands, it is ridiculous to expect that capitalists will risk an investment with the chance of finding themselves tied up some day by the miners, who aim to dictate in all things the management of the mines. Tyranny is the only term to apply to the actions of the men, who, if the truth were told, are mostly foreigners, with views upon the subject of American liberty bordering so close upon license that they will have to be toned down considerably before they will make the more desirable class of citizens. It only requires a modicum of success upon the part of a company or proprietor, and the screws are promptly applied, as at the Royal mine in Calaveras County and the big copper mines at Keswick. Such a condition of affairs cannot last for all time, that is certain.

The annual statement of the financial condition of the Hibernia Savings and Loan Association at the close of business December 31, 1903, appears in this issue of the News Letter. It shows another progressive year, and a continuance of the prosperity which has ever attended the operations of this powerful financial institution, and its sagacious management. The total assets are now increased to $61,466,590, representing a gilt-edged holding of property in the form of real estate and high-class stocks and bonds. Itemized, the assets consist of $29,237,007 in promissory notes secured by first mortgages on real estate; $1,151,400 in promissory notes, secured by bonds and stocks; $19,776,933 in bonds of the United States; $8,282,700 in miscellaneous bonds; $324,686 in interest accrued on bonds; $763,000 in real estate; not included in the land and office building valued at $517,199, with cash on hand amounting to $1,960,012. The reserve fund now amounts to $3,283,914.80. With such a financial showing and a reputation for conservative, while at the same time liberal management, it is little wonder that the Hibernia Bank maintains the confidence of the public as it does.

The gross earnings of the United Railroads for the month of November, 1903, show an increase of $44,367, or 9.07 per cent, while for the eleven months to November 30th, the gross earnings increased $659,209, or 12.12 per cent.

The German-speaking element in our community have suffered a distinct loss in the death of Frederick W. Barkhaus. He was one of our best-known citizens and well beloved by all who ever came within the circle of his genial influence. He came to California around the Horn in 1853. The first few years of his life in California were spent in mining. His store was a center for a long time for all the culture of San Francisco. His great specialty was books in the German language, and by this means many of the German citizens were thus brought to more than a passing acquaintance with the old gentleman. He was a Mason and a member of the German Benevolent Society, besides being a director of the German Hospital. He was 67 years of age at his demise.

Moves and Countermoves.

The Secretary of State has issued a very excellent volume, or Blue Book, that will be of interest to politicians all over the State. It is very well gotten up, and though it is very "fat" matter from the printer's standpoint, that is the business of the State Printer and not of the Secretary. It is a veritable directory of Who is Who, in the political line in this commonwealth, and except the employees of the State Printing Office, who for some reason have not appeared in the pages of any Blue Book for several years, it contains the names of all the State, Federal and Municipal employees, from the President of the United States to the driver of the police van in San Francisco. As a rule, the addresses of the office holders are given; that is to say, the place from which they were appointed, but as the printer evidently had not enough type to set up the words "Oakland" or "Alameda" any more frequently, they were omitted when the lists of Harbor Board, State institutions, and some federal employees were given. The list, however, contains 138 names with the residences in Oakland, Berkeley and Alameda, not counting, of course, those connected with the University, and their salaries and wages reach the very handsome total of $197,540. When the employees of the Harbor Board, of the Customs House, etc., are added, no doubt those figures will be very nearly doubled. Not only does Alameda County figure in the list of persons holding positions, the work of which is to be done in this city, but she has proven a perfect octopus in grasping offices all over the State, north of the Tehachapi. Thus we have Alamedans on the Board of Trustees at the Mendocino State Insane Asylum, and at Napa they are the only managers of the Blind Asylum, and of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind. The State University would appear to be a mere local institution, as there is only one Regent south of the Tehachapi, and only two for the San Joaquin Valley. All the rest are either San Franciscans or Alamedans. Berkeley is represented on the Board of the new Polytechnic School at San Luis Obispo, and the Superintendent of that institution hails from the same classic town. Now as the distance from Berkeley to San Luis Obispo is generally supposed to be about the same as the distance from San Luis Obispo to Berkeley, I would respectfully request the powers that be to explain why there is not a single man from the Coast cities on the Boards of any institution except the Polytechnic School? Why not put some Southern men on the Adult Blind Board? Why not put some representatives of the great Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys on that Board, or on the list of Regents to the University? Certainly they would not prove themselves any more incompetent than the distinguished gentlemen who have allowed the Secretary of the University to walk away with what is now said to be $140,000.

I beg, also, to call the attention of the Governor to the fact that the terms of three of the Trustees of the Home for the Feeble Minded have expired. His friends say that the Governor has been only waiting for a chance to straighten things out there. Here is his chance. He cannot pass the responsibility to any one else. Let him put men in there who will give their attention to the work, who will not pass over in silence the suicide of its inmates, who will protect poor, unfortunate girls when they are unlawfully removed from the institution.

The defalcation at the State University is likely to reach seven times the amount that was originally named. Dozens of persons have paid the Secretary money and never bothered about it since, and to-day, even if they recall the fact, do not care to say anything about it, because they object to the notoriety that would result. While every effort is being made to find out what the loss is, the investigation is hampered by absence of records. Everybody who has any known financial transactions with the University is being questioned, but even that laborious method is proving far from satisfactory.

The appointment of George Adams in the place of Registrar Walsh was not unexpected. Adams was Assistant Secretary of the United Republican League but left that organization when the municipal campaign began carrying with him the records of the primary league. He became nominally Assistant Secretary of the Schmitz Club on Ellis street, but really its chief executive officer. He is an energetic man, and should make a good officer in his new place.

The conflict that I predicted between the Governor and the Mayor over the appointment of a successor to Justice of the Peace Percy V. Long is on, and the courts will have to decide whether Walter E. Dorn, whom the Mayor appointed, or Isadore Golden, whom the Governor named, is the rightful incumbent of the place. Incidentally, the court will decide the question whether the Justices are city or county officers. The Mayor relies on a late decision of the Supreme Court to sustain him, the decision which practically gave him the right to remove the Health Board. The Governor claims that he has the right to name the Clerk, Justices and so-called county officers as he is entitled to do in other counties where a vacancy occurs.

Long has named Partridge and Brobeck as his chief deputies, as was announced shortly after his election in this column. His other deputies are all men who have not been very prominent in politics, and who have to a large extent their spurs to win. It is understood that they were his personal choice, and that the "push" had nothing to do with the selections, although Long offered them the right to name their men.

Ex-Deputy Clerk Deane is to be the chief deputy of Clerk Grief. There will be a number of other changes in the office of County Clerk, though Casey will remain at the Probate desk, and several of the court clerks are to hold over. Grief expects all his men to work over-time until the books are up to date, and no one will be appointed who only wants a place to draw the salary.

By THE AUTOCRANK

The Governors of the Automobile Club of California held a meeting on January 5th, and matters of interest affecting the club were discussed. Mr. C. C. Moore was appointed a committee of one to investigate and report at the next meeting of the Board the desirability of holding an automobile exposition at the Pavilion some time in the spring. Before any definite action is taken, the Club desires to know whether sufficient interest will be taken therein by the dealers, and must be assured that sufficient space will be rented to render it profitable. The exhibition will include all kinds of sporting goods, launches and automobile accessories. It is proposed to hold the exhibition during the whole of one week some time within the next three months.

The question of good roads was discussed, and the Governors passed a resolution endorsing the restoration of the ancient highway known as El Camino Real or the King's Highway, from San Diego to San Francisco. Southern California is very much interested in this project, and a convention will be held in Los Angeles on the 30th inst. to discuss the matter. The convention has been called by the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, and consists of the Board of Trade, County Surveyors, the Landmarks Club and the Los Angeles Highway Commission. Their efforts will be to build a grand boulevard from San Diego to Santa Barbara, and it will be left to Northern California to continue the road to San Francisco. The Automobile Club of California is taking an active interest in the matter, and a similar convention will undoubtedly be called in San Francisco. There is strong hope that the Brownlow Bill appropriating $22,000,000 to aid good roads throughout the United States will be passed at this session, and if so, it is expected that the Legislatures of the various counties through which this road will pass will lend assistance and hasten the completion of the road. The old Mission Fathers not only selected their locations with wisdom and foresight, but they chose the easiest route for building the roads from Mission to Mission. In the desire for straight lines, these routes have not since been followed, and if El Camino Real is restored, it will afford the most delightful tour from San Francisco to San Diego, avoiding many of the hills that are now en route.

If such a road is completed, there will be stopping places all along the route for tourists, and the road will be used not only by automobilists but by vehicles of all kinds. An Eastern traveler coming to San Francisco can by easy stages see the most delightful parts of California, and carry back with him favorable impressions of the country between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Another interesting subject discussed by the Governors was the matter of a club badge. It was suggested by the President that there ought to be some way of identifying the members of the club while touring. An esprit de corps among them is in many ways beneficial. While there is generally a friendly feeling between automobilists, there should be a sort of free masonry among the members of the club. It makes club membership more desirable and a spirit of sociability is created. Mr. R. P. Schwerin left for New York Wednesday morning, and while East he will decide upon a suitable design for a club badge, the same design to be used for a plate to be attached to each automobile. Members meeting on the road will thus be able to identify each other, and will be expected to render assistance in case of trouble. There will be three badges of the same design, but differing in size, one for the cap, one for the lapel of the coat, and one for the automobile. Over a year ago a committee was appointed to select a club badge and submitted several designs therefor, but the club did not seem to be sufficiently interested in the matter at that time. The Governors are now taking it up seriously, and some design will be adopted in the near future.

The Board of Directors of the Automobile Club have presented Mr. J. Kruttschnitt a petition asking him to modify the present rule which prohibits the transportation of automobiles on the regular ferry boats. This petition has not as yet been acted upon, but strong arguments have been brought to bear, and it is confidently believed that increased privileges will be granted in the near future, and as soon as the Southern Pacific lines act in the matter, there is no doubt but that the other ferry lines will make the same concessions. This will be an important gain to automobilists, for at present there is no way to reach San Francisco from Oakland between 4 p. m. and 8 p. m.

An automobile without a front axle, giving the greatest possible speed with the least possible weight, so simple in operation that a child might drive it and consuming less fuel than any other type of vehicle of its power, would seem to be almost revolutionary in construction methods, yet all this and more is claimed for a machine recently completed by the Christie Iron Works, of New York City, which has been given its first tests of speed and endurance within the last few days. Mr. Walter Christie is the designer, and his creation possesses more novel features that look like good features than anything of its kind that has been turned out in this country for a long time. Equipped with a thirty-five horse-power motor of Mr. Christie's construction, the machine has been timed over a measured straightaway mile in 55.25 seconds, which is at the rate of sixty-five miles an hour. The remarkable feature of this will be better appreciated when it is understood that the machine, in racing trim, weighs only 1,250 pounds.

Mrs. Henry Meyers, of 1802 Pacific avenue, gave an automobile luncheon Sunday in honor of her daughter. The party consisted of 20 young ladies and gentlemen, who assembled at the residence about 11 o'clock and awaited the arrival of the cars of the Mobile Carriage Co., which were used for this occasion. The trip included the Park, Ocean Boulevard, Ingleside, Cliff House and Presidio, the party returning about 1:30, when luncheon was served.

James Whitcomb Riley in a Haynes Apperson surrey.

We quote the following from a local contemporary: "Jack Winter, the well-known express agent at Truckee, Cal., has purchased and installed the first auto in Truckee, Cal. The town has suddenly become auto struck, and more machines can be sold there. No light-power cars need apply, as the district is mountainous." Now, this is all very well except for the interesting fact that Mr. Winter's machine is the very lightest that is made, being no other than the Orient Buckboard. It might almost be said that nothing but light cars need apply, as Mr. Winter's success has led to a number of orders for Buckboards being taken in that vicinity.

Mr. Byron Jackson, of this city, has just returned from a visit to the Olds Motor Works at Detroit and Lansing, Michigan. He says that the company has doubled the capacity of their factory, and will be in a position to turn out forty machines a day. They will offer to the public three models. First: the regular runabout. Second: another runabout, which will be larger and have more horse-power; and third: a tonneau, which has a carrying capacity of five persons.

JEAN'S REVENGE.

An avenger need not necessarily be a naturalist, but there are cases where he would take his vengeance more to the purpose if he knew the habits of his victim. Lippincott's Magazine tells a story of Jean, the French-Canadian gardener who was found stamping on a little mound of fresh earth and chuckling to himself.

"Ah, m'sieu," he cried triumphantly, "I am not a one to be trifled with! I am a cr-r-uel man when once I am arouse. M'sieu will remember the mole that has long time ravage the strawberry beds of madame? Every morning madame she say, 'Jean, why catchest thou not that mole?'"

"But the mole was wise; 'e was queek. Always I look and look, but never can I find heem. But at last, thees very morning, I catch heem. I hold heem tight in my hand—so—and I say: 'Aha-a-a! Is it thou, then, that has vexed madame, and ravaged her beds of the strawberry? Aha-a! You shall repent of thees wickedness.'

"Then I wonder how I shall kill heem. He must be punished as well as killed. I wonder and wonder, but at last I have the grand idea. Ah, it was cr-r-uel, m'sieu, that way I kill heem! But what would you? Did he not deserve of the worst? But he will vex madame no more. I fix heem. I bury heem alive!"

The New Year's edition of the San Francisco Chronicle is at hand this week, and it is better than ever—which is saying a great deal. For a quarter of a century the Chronicle's has been the standard annual of the Pacific Coast, but this number is the best on record. It is devoted to a consideration of the future of California, showing ways and means by which the State may gain a population of twenty millions in a century. On this theme, some of the most thoughtful men of the State, including several professors of the University of California, have contributed interesting and seasonable articles. In art work, in typography, in make-up, in all the mechanical factors of a newspaper, it is undoubtedly the best thing of its kind ever issued on the Pacific Coast.

—Few come to San Francisco without paying a visit to Zinkand's, which has done so much to establish our city's reputation as the best restaurant town in the United States. It's the favorite after-the-theatre resort.

THE PURPLE ROSE.

By Barker in The Cosmopolitan

Rose of the purple petals, I would know
The secret that has darkened every vein
And fibre of thee. Was it the dull pain
Of some strange passion in the long ago?
Was there some boon the wind would not bestow?
Some nightingale who never came again
Into thy garden? blossom, thou hast lain
All night against the dark, in nameless woe.

Sister of mine, O Rose, I know thou art!
As thus I hold thee with caressing hand,
I feel thy being with perfume expand.
I kiss thy quivering petals wide apart
And lay my lips upon thy golden heart;
For I perceive thy soul and understand.

A VISION.

By William Canton in Chamber's Journal

Grasp my hand!
Hold me fast!

For I stagger and reel
At the tumult and splendor of life rushing past
In a whirlwind of fire, dust, vapor, and thunder;
For above me and under,
Upon this side and that, all the sea and the land,
All the skies, and the gods' starry seats in the skies,
Spin and spin on the axle of time like a wheel.

O my soul in what region unknown,
Far removed beyond thought, did I see
The vast shape of a Woman who sat all alone
With the wheel at her knee!
And I saw that the wheel was rotation of time,
And the wool of her spinning
Was life—but the fleece
Was a secret withdrawn beyond winning.

HOPE.

By J. S. Redmayne in Chamber's Journal

No wintry silence—be it e'er so long—
But springtime wakes it with the birds' sweet song.
No day so drear but after frost and snow,
E'en in far North, the sweetest roses blow.
No night so long but daylight comes at last,
And the pink dawn forgets the darkness past.
No work so toilsome but the task begun
On earth is finished with the Morning Sun.
No way so rugged out, the wanderer's feet
Shall walk unwearied in the golden street.
No parting ever but the God of Love
Shall join the parted—in the land above.

TO-DAY.

By Venita Seibert in McClure's

O thou, close-wrapped, a goddess in disguise!
It needs but one determined, fearless stroke
To tear aside thy gray and homely cloak,
When lo! like splendid lamps shine thy deep eyes
On him who has the gift to recognize.
To-morrow's beauty pales beside thy face
And Yesterday sinks to her rightful place,
Forgotten stars that fade at thy sunrise!

To-morrow is a dream, she is not mine,
And Yesterday is dead and tear-wet clay—
But thou, born new each morn, deathless, divine,
Thou rulest life and fate, O great To-day!
For to the door of Opportunity
Thou and thou only holdest forth the key.

A MAXIM.

By Fannie Herron Wingate

Live for to-day! Why anxious for the morrow?
Why load to-day with burdens that you borrow?
Each day, yea, and each hour its own work brings;
That work well done may lead to better things.

A simple rule I give to you,
Though simple, good and true:
"Just do your best and trust the rest"—
That's all God asks of you.

VINCENT NEALE, Secretary.

The remarks in last week's Insurance Department of the News Letter about the organization of the Special Agents' Association of the Northwest has been characterized as untimely and indiscreet, and the objectors are mainly members of the old association. The younger blood in both the managers' chairs and in the field, are ready either to fight or secede at the early annual meeting of the parent association, which is to be held on the 12th and 13th. It is safe to prophesy that the Special Agents will carry more than one point, and that the new association will keep growing.

It seems that the News Letter is the only insurance journal in the city that had the courage to give the inside facts of the organization of the new association, the so-called insurance journals up to this writing have been silent. It appears, after further investigation, that the fight is not alone amongst the Specials, but that the real secessionists are a coterie of managers who desire to storm the Sumpter fort of the ring power which controls the Fire Underwriters' Association, and fired their first shot by the organization of their respective Specials into an independent body.

These insurgents say the rule of the big five must be broken, and if not broken in California, the new organization will smash it in Oregon and Washington.

The News Letter is not taking up either side of the what has hitherto been a private fight, but since it has been the means of giving publicity to the affair, it is willing to give both sides of the story.

If you talk to some of the managers, there is nothing in the shape of friction; the sand-paper element is eliminated, and conditions in the Association are as smooth as the surface of a mirror. Talk to the next lot, and they tell you that there will be something doing at the annual meeting.

* * *

The row is loud and deep. It seems to be a carefully well-laid plan to burst what is termed a ring, and the insurrectionists are matching their younger brains and diplomatic methods against the entrenched power of the older men and managers, who for years have dictated the policy and practice of the old association.

* * *

The outcome may create some feeling, but if it does, the finality will be a settlement of the smouldering differences between the ins and outs, which has finally flashed up into the twinkling blaze of the new organization.

* * *

To quote last week's News Letter: "Why the need of two bodies?"

* * *

Mr. Stephen D. Ives, vice-president of the Home Fire and Marine Insurance Company, has been confined to his home for some days with an attack of La Grippe.

If there be any Special Agent whose manager is in San Francisco who is not in town, it is because he is adjusting or out of mileage.

The Maryland Casualty Company of Baltimore has re-insured all of the Accident, Health and Plate Glass business of the Union Casualty and Surety Company throughout the United States, and thus added a large volume of business to that which it already had on its books. The Union Casualty and Surety Company has liquidated and is winding up its affairs as rapidly as possible. The Union's business in California is of a favorable character, and under the management of the Maryland's energetic president, can be relied upon to make a profit. The deal was made very quietly between President Stone of the Maryland and President Halls of the Union, not a breath of it getting to the public until New Year's day, when arrangements had been completed, and all the Union policyholders and the agents of both companies were officially notified of the change.

The news came as a surprise, and the sudden, though not unexpected ending of the Union made a flurry in insurance circles on California street.

In 1899 a similar re-insurance deal was effected between the two companies, whereby the Maryland took over all of the Liability business of the Union.

Among insurance men it is generally believed that the second coup would not have been so long deferred had not the Union found that it took more time than they bargained for to settle the outstanding claims on their old Liability business.

Just what the "consideration" paid amounted to in the recent deal is a matter of conjecture, but it is understood that the Maryland received a neat sum for extending its protection to the policyholders of the involved Union.

These policyholders should congratulate themselves upon having behind them the resources of the Maryland, a company with two and a half times the surplus of the Union. It is learned that it is the intention of the Maryland to push for a large business in all its lines. It is well-equipped for the effort. Its individual Health policy, the "Acme," is a popular favorite, and its "combination accident" policy is so liberal that it is the best of sellers. The office of the company's General Agent in the Haywards Building is a busy center just now in taking care of the excess business caused by the Union's re-insurance.

The News Letter prophesies a change in the management of a big life insurance company. The present incumbent has done well in the way of furnishing his offices, but failed in the way of furnishing business. The real active life man can get a chance now for a State agency of a life company, which, while not being one of the three giants, is a right close fourth.

* * *

D. Myers, one time president of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company, which was known on California street for a brief time, has been acquitted by a jury in New York of the charge of larceny from the company of some $40,000. Another indictment hangs over him, and better luck is hoped for in the next trial.

* * *

Mr. Fred Bennion has been at the top of the list for four consecutive months as a producer of business for the Conservative Life.

* * *

Mr. Harry A. Hunsaker has been appointed manager for California for the Travelers Insurance Company. Mr. Haskell will remain with the company.

UNNECESSARY REMOVAL.

Dr. H. A. L. Ryfkogel, well known as a bacteriologist, has written an exhaustive brochure on the "Sanitary Condition of Laurel Hill Cemetery." It should not have been necessary to call in the aid of a sanitary expert of Dr. Ryfkogel's standing to prove a self-evident fact. Any one conversant with the condition of the soil, the situation above sea-level, the fact that there are no springs in the neighborhood, the water of which is used for drinking purposes; that the cemetery is exposed to strong winds, knows the impossibility of contagion or infection.

The conditions of Laurel Hill Cemetery are entirely different from most burial places. When a body is buried in a grave at Laurel Hill, ample space is left below for drainage and above for aeration, reduction and absorption of escaping gases. Repeated visits were made to the cemetery for the purpose of detecting odors of putrefaction, but at no time could any such be detected.

Disinterment of bodies that have been buried from one month to twenty years were witnessed, and odors were only detected when the coffin was exposed. Decomposition in the sandy soil of the cemetery is usually complete in three years.

To meet and refute the charge against Laurel Hill Cemetery, contained in the Preamble of said Ordinance, its Trustees have, at considerable expense, had a careful examination of the cemetery lands, its methods of burial and disinterment, its location and drainage, its soil and water, its atmosphere and prevailing winds, and obtained a full report thereon. The examination by the expert and his assistants extended over a period of ten months, and they were upon the cemetery lands at all hours of day and night, and had full and free opportunity to make a thorough and unbiased examination.

Altogether, Laurel Hill Cemetery is ideal, and, further than this, it cannot be said that there is any popular clamor for a change. The action of the Supervisors in passing Ordinance No. 25 is not above suspicion, and there are those who claim that some expert on "cinch" measures has picked out the Laurel Hill Cemetery people as proper prey.

Young Physician (excitedly)—How did you know about me? Messenger—Rang all the doctors' bells till I found one at home.

Stella—Cholly hasn't any originality. Bella—Not the slightest. Why, I submitted his love letters to three publishers and they all refused them.

"Is it possible, Miss, that you do not know the names of your best friends?" "Possible? Why, of course it is. I do not even know what my own name may be a year or so hence."

Inspector—What do you see above your head when you are in the open air? Scholar—The sky. Inspector—And what do you see when the sky is covered with clouds? Scholar—My umbrella.

"Didn't I order two portions of chicken, waiter?" "Yes, sir." "Then why is there only one cockroach?"

Deacon Jones—Did Mr. Skrimper say anything about a donation for the cause? Deacon Brown—Oh, yes, he talked beautifully about it. Deacon Jones—It is almost as gratifying to hear Brother Skrimper talk about the duty of doing a thing as to have him do it. Deacon Brown—I have sometimes thought that to him it is an even greater pleasure.

"I owe my success in life to hard work," said the great magnate. But he neglected to add that it was largely the hard work of other people.

The Parson—Dis am mos' positively de mos' 'stremely juiciest chicking I eber put in mah mouth, Brer Jackson. Brer Jackson—Yes, sah, pahson; dat chicking wuz raised an' brung up on water-millions, sah.

"Gracious," sighed Mr. De Spelsey, "I wish I could acquire an appetite." "For goodness sake!" exclaimed his wife, "what do you want with an appetite? It would only give you more dyspepsia."

Bracer (tentatively)—No, he's hard. Now, with a good friend like you it's different. If, for instance, I should tell you I needed a dollar, I know I'd be welcome to it. Newitt—Well-er-I don't know that you'd be as welcome to it as it would be welcome to you.

Lucile—Were you not embarrassed when young Dr. Jones asked you for your hand? Ethel—

PARABLES IN SLANG.

A very discriminating and critical professor at Harvard has decided that slang is pernicious "only when it is used to pose vulgarity." For example, we may assume, when an English girl assures her Canadian sister that she has "bats in her belly," she is using language at once "strong and poetic." Certainly it is not vulgar to have bats in one's belly, though we should think it would be very unpleasant. The professor warmly commends such expressions as the glad hand and the marble heart, and asserts that if such phrases had been used in the story of the prodigal son, the literature of the Bible would have been even more highly commended. Let us see how the conclusion of the parable would have been touched up in up-to-date English, according to the latest approved Harvard methods:

"But the father said to his servants: Bring forth the glad rags and put them on, and put a sparkler on his hand and shoes on his feet.

"And hustle up that fatted calf and kill it, and let us feed our faces and have a jamboree."

As for the "elder son," he might have been pithily disposed of. We may picture him standing moodily in the background ejaculating "Rats!"

"I don't know now exactly how it happened," Reggie was telling his best friend over a game of billiards. "I never meant to propose, you know—that is, not just yet. I wanted to knock about a little more. But after we got home from the theatre and sat in the parlor discussing the plot of the play, I ventured out on thin ice and broke through before I knew where I was. It came as a deuce of a shock, just as I should imagine breaking through real ice would be.

"But Jessie was all ready for me. She was expecting it. First thing I knew she had me by the collar and landed me on safe ground again, but I was engaged. No doubt about that. Anyhow, I am glad I've got her. Might have lost her through some slip if I'd waited. But I don't want to read any more stuff about bashful fellows stammering out proposals. It's all too easy"

Yeast—Did you ever notice that when the question about obeying is put to women in the marriage ceremony some of them answer louder than others? Crimsonbeak—Oh, yes; I've noticed it. The ones who say "Yes" the loudest are the ones who know their husbands will never dare to ask them to obey.

An evening paper stated last week that some years ago a "Tory orator" attacking a speech of Mr. Chamberlain's, "repelled the allegation and scorned the alligator." This slip was really made some 70 years ago in the House of Commons by Joseph Hume. There is something marvelous in the effrontery with which such venerable anecdotes are now raked up and presented to the credulous public with a new dressing.

John C. Sheehan employs a large number of laborers. Most of his foremen are Irishmen, but the underlings embrace men of all nationalities. The other day one of the foremen had use for a maul on a certain piece of work. He said to a green Irish laborer who was near: "Go up where that other gang is working and bring the maul." In a few minutes the Irishman returned with about twenty-five laborers. "What did you bring these men here for?" asked the foreman. "Sure, you told me to bring 'thim all' and I brought ivery mother's son of thim I could find," was the reply.

"Yes," asserted the admirer, "she is an advanced woman. She is a credit to the age. None of the fads and foibles of latter day females attract her. Why, she is head and shoulders above dresses and bonnets and matinees, and all that sort of thing." "I don't know about the bonnets and matinees, but I saw her last night at the theatre and she was head and shoulders above her dress, just as you claim."

His Holiness, Pius X, says his remark to the dean of the diplomatic corps about not admitting to the Vatican women in low-cut gowns, was largely a jest. Even Popes do not care to dictate what miladi shall or shall not wear.

"Prince Cupid of Hawaii," whose real name sounds worse than it looks, spent a night in jail at Washington trying to convince the police that, as a delegate to Congress, he was exempt from arrest. Not "Prince Cupid" hereafter, if you please, but "Prince Stupid."

Here are the women of France offering us a bust of Washington and the Germans grumbling because we are a little slow in accepting the Kaiser's gift of a statue of Frederick the Great. Speak up, Russia and Japan.

A German editor is doing three months in jail for saying that the Kaiser's sole function was to draw $10,000 every time he signed a law. What an evil day it will be for the press of the Fatherland when the Emperor hires him a mind reader!

William Randolph Hearst, having devoted much time and type to pointing out his own likeness to Andrew Jackson, now disinterestedly advises the American people to choose as President that one of themselves who most resembles Jackson. Whom can Mr. Hearst mean?

THE NEW CITY ADMINISTRATION.

Less than ten days of our new city administration have passed and already the Mayor whom, in our inscrutable folly, we re-elected to the headship of the municipality, is defending himself against a Board of Supervisors whose first official act was to notify him and the public that there would be no more charter-smashing, no more "grafting" in the Mayor's office. And already Schmitz is in a bad way. His attempt to fill the Health Department with his henchmen, calling the move "re-organization for the sake of economy," is likely to cost him dear in political prestige. The Supervisors took prompt cognizance of the charter violations involved in this greedy grab for patronage, and followed up a vigorous denunciation by an order for an investigation, which the Civil Service Board was not slow to obey. At the same time the Supervisors adopted a report which virtually convicted one of the Mayor's pets, the Pound Keeper, of out-and-out crookedness, and then rode at a hand-gallop over his veto and took away from him the Public Pound, which had long been for him and his following a prolific source of dirty money. Schmitz had, perforce, to sit in his high place as presiding officer of the Board while all this was doing. He lost his head and his temper, and through his whiskers shouted "Liar!" but to no avail.

And this is but the prelude. The Supervisors may or may not be acting wholly with a view to protecting the city from the rapacity of Schmitz, but, at all events, the public will accept the result and ask no questions about the means. For, in truth, the Supervisors and nobody else can saddle and bridle the city's broncho of a Mayor. The charter which he professes to revere and proceeds to reverse, borne out by the reasoning and ruling of the Supreme Court gives him power ample enough to please the most extreme advocate of one-man authority in municipal Government. The Mayor has shown no delicate hesitancy about using that power. For political purposes he may truckle to organized labor, but in reality the unionism which he practices is based on a union of which he is all the officers and all the members as well. Save for such checks as the Supervisors may put upon him, he may do pretty much as he pleases for the next two years.

And the strength of the Supervisors in this issue is at once simple and irresistible. It has no hand theoretically in the spending of the city's money, and yet it has the first and the last word in making the appropriations. Early among the effects of that strength, applied in the right place, will be, we predict, a transfer of allegiance in the Commissioners from the Mayor to the Money-voting council, since without money no man and no Board will try to do the city's business. It will not be long, we repeat, before the Mayor, having filled all his places, will be able to devote most of his time to curling his beard and rehearsing the speeches that his able attorney, Ruef, writes for his public appearances.

CONCERNS SAN FRANCISCO MOST OF ALL.

How much does San Francisco, or indeed any American city, profit by the annexation of the Philippine Archipelago to the United States? The question is pertinent because this country is spending good money and sacrificing the lives of many of its people to hold these islands. The query is not propounded at this time because any objection is made to the policy of expansion, but because it seems we are neglecting to secure such benefits as ought to flow from that policy.

Under the present system of administration the United States is getting trade with the Philippines amounting to about 50 cents per head of the population of the island, and the reason why it is not more is that we have built a tariff wall around our new possessions that makes of them a foreign country. We are putting ourselves to all the expense of administration, defense and policing of the islands, and at the same time we shut ourselves out from the advantages and profit that ought to flow from the investment of the national funds.

This is the most ridiculous policy that could well be devised. We have given to Porto Rico free trade with the United States, and the result was that our business with that island at once jumped to $15 a head of the population. We have given Cuba important tariff concessions, and the same results are sure to follow. But the Philippines are left to stay out in the cold, and San Francisco is the greatest sufferer from these unreasonable restrictions on trade.

Now, this is a most important matter for consideration of all the Pacific Coast delegations in Congress. Oregon, Washington and California are all interested equally in creating the trade with the Philippines that properly belongs to us. It is a matter for united action, and a statement of the case should carry conviction. We do not doubt that Congress will act in this regard, and follow the precedents established for Cuba, Hawaii and Porto Rico the moment that a united demand comes from the Pacific Coast for a more enlightened policy, establishing more liberal relations with a territory of such vast potentialities.

THE SUPERVISORS' DREAM.

The memorial addressed by the San Francisco Board of Supervisors to Congress, asking for water rights on the Tuolumne river in the Yosemite Park, is based on a falsehood. The assumption on which the whole process of reasoning rests is contained in the following paragraph: "Whereas it has become manifest that the water supply of this city must sooner or later be increased by the addition of a supply from the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and the securing of this supply should not be delayed."

In what way have these facts been made manifest? If any such demonstration has ever been made, the people of San Francisco have never been advised of it. What does "sooner or later" mean?

As a matter of fact, every householder in the city knows that the present water supply is good and sufficient. The Supervisors know, because it has been proved to them and their engineers that the Spring Valley Water Company has made provision to increase the existing supply so that when occasion arises there will be sufficient for all the needs of 2,000,000 people. The Calaveras Valley watershed in Alameda County comprises 600 square miles. The water from that source is of equal quality with any to be found in the Sierra. It comes into the reservoirs filtered through gravel—cleansed and purified in Nature's filter. This source of supply is close at hand and materially lessens the chances of failure, owing to the bursting of pipes carrying the supply more than two hundred miles under heavy pressure, as must be the case if brought from the Tuolumne.

Congress is petitioned by the Supervisors to set aside the ruling of the Secretary of the Interior refusing to grant water rights in the National Park to the city of San Francisco. For many reasons that ruling of Secretary Hitchcock is wise, and the Supervisors in their memorial failed to meet his reasoning. In fact, Congress is petitioned to act on vague and sloppy allegations of the "sooner or later" order—allegations that the most casual examination demonstrates to be false.

There is another and a higher reason why Congress should refuse the petition. The water of the Tuolumne is needed for a more beneficial use than any to which San Francisco can put it. Half a million acres of semi-arid but fertile land in the San Joaquin Valley are dependent on the Tuolumne river supply for their development. That land is worth comparatively little in its present condition. Under a proper irrigation system its value will increase at least tenfold, and twenty acres will support a family in comfort where now they find it difficult to scratch a living on 300.

The scheme contemplated by the Supervisors calls for the investment of at least $50,000,000. Engineers estimates may be something less, but the city would be fortunate if that sum were not exceeded. It is therefore proposed to duplicate without improving the present supply at a cost greater than the Spring Valley Water Works has invested. That would be a criminal waste of capital to which a practical people like the citizens of San Francisco will never give their consent.

The whole scheme is politics—a political dream of half-baked socialists and fanatics working in combination with others who have axes to grind or private revenges to satisfy.

NOTHING WILL GET AWAY.

Mayor Schmitz announced with a flourish of trumpets that he meant to reduce current expenses of the Board of Health by $30,000 a year. The manner in which this promise was carried out offers an instructive example of present administration methods, and based on the theory that the people are all fools. Schmitz has simply cut off $2,500 a month in one place—that makes $30,000 a year—and has added $1,800 a month in another. If there has been any saving whatever it is only the difference between $1,800 and $2,500 a month. But when the end of the fiscal year comes it will be found that the appropriation is exhausted, just the same, to the last dollar. If the Mayor allows anything to get away it must be like the razor-backed hog of the South—able to outrun a nigger.

LONG-RANGE "AUDITING."

As the daylight filters into the dark and dusty places in the management of the State University, matters grow less and less pleasant for the gentlemen and others concerned. It is apparent that "pull" and politics have played an important part in the affairs of the Board of Regents. Otherwise so ordinary a thief as the miserable McKowen would not have been able to go on stealing for years, until he had transferred from the funds of the institution to the leather coin-sacks of the race-track bookmakers a sum admitted to be in excess of $50,000. One of the convincing proofs of improper influences at work in the handling of the University's business has come out in the development of the McKowen scandal. It is the employment as auditor of one J. J. Herr, who has kept on living in Southern California while drawing a salary of $300 a year for keeping his expert eye and hand on the University's finances. Long range "auditing" of that kind does not seem to accomplish much, somehow. It is not of record how such a place as Herr holds came to be given to a man living five hundred miles away. This smells obtrusively of practical politics. Even the Regents have been compelled to take notice of the delinquent Herr while checking up the sum of McKowen's stealings. We observe with satisfaction that they have shut down on his salary warrant for last year. This is not much, measured against McKowen's stealings, but it will serve at least to make the Southern California man move carefully in dealing with the next job he gets.

Meanwhile, it is no secret that there is a swarm of applicants for the place that McKowen filled with such profit to the race gambling ring. The delay of the Regents in making the appointment would seem to point plainly to more politics. Let the gentlemen of the Board be advised: the public is taking a lively interest in the affairs of the University which its money supports, and it will not hesitate to censure them if they fail to put the right kind of a man in the place of the one now in jail. It will not stand for the bestowal of the job on any mere politician or politician's pet. Neither will it take kindly to the appointment of any man who, having failed to earn a living by independent toil, subsides on patronage from friends or relatives with political influence. What is wanted is a man young enough to be keen and energetic, old enough to have been proved in his honesty. The salary is not large, but it is big enough to secure a man of that kind. No other will do.

A MESSAGE OF IMPORT.

No sounder, saner text for a sermon can be found in all the gospels of all the world's religions than the New Year's resolution of a Chicago woman's club. Here it is: "There is so much of good in the worst of us and so much of bad in the best of us, that it does not behoove any of us to say anything bad of any of us."

A trifle more of polishing and this pregnant sentence might have been brilliantly epigrammatic in form. As it stands, it comes near to being a highly condensed composite of the Golden Rule, the Ten Commandments, and the Sermon on the Mount. The more we read it, the less we think of the wits who joke and the philistines who sneer at the Lakeside City for its crude modernity and its imperviousness to refining influence. A creed like this bespeaks a culture moving itself aright in the place whence all culture must proceed—the heart. Lived up to, it would eliminate from organized society most of its malice, much of its lying; it would deliver us from the scarlet sin of hypocrisy and commit us to gentle speaking and gentle doing; it would send to the limbo of fashions forever laid aside the meaningful lift of the eyebrow and the shoulder-shrug which is even more wicked than the spoken word; it would banish the sting and the stab of the false compliment and the polite double entendre through which many women and some men wreak their ill-will; it would be the end of the "one hears" and the "they says" tittle-tattle compound of venom, envy, spite, conceit, and all uncharitableness.

We know nothing of what this particular women's club does with itself from year-end to year-end. Quite possibly it is no better in its actual achievements than any other of the leisured-class organizations, but we shall thank it for at least this one uplifted moment when it was above all pettiness and gave concrete expression to what stirs vaguely in the breasts of us all at holiday time and then is so swiftly forgotten. Even if it be by now no part of this club's propaganda, yet it cannot have failed utterly of good. Messages of such import are certain of delivery to somebody somewhere.

A PAIR OF PROFESSIONALS.

The State Federation of Labor in session at Fresno fought shy of politics and of the plan to entangle the organization in the schemes of ambitious politicians, but at the same time the body stultified itself by first voting down the minority report permitting officials of the Federation to accept political preferment and then electing Harry Knox, of the Carmen's Union of this city, to be State President of the Federation. This action was taken in the face of a distinct statement made on the floor of the convention by Knox that he expected to receive a political appointment under the municipal administration—an appointment which has since been given him by Sheriff Curtis.

Apart from this stultification of the Federation, the choice of Knox serves to illustrate the present temper and spirit of organized labor in this city. Knox is the disturbing element of the Carmen's Union, and almost persuaded his union to go on strike at the time the question of wages and hours was raised with the United Railroads last spring. It was only by the strongest representations urged by men in other unions who were convinced that the strike would have been unreasonable, unjustifiable and without public sympathy that the Carmen were persuaded to reject the counsels of violent action and accept the plan of arbitration offered by the street car company. It is an open secret that a strike on the local transportation lines was narrowly averted at that time, and it might have been better had it come, because Knox and other extremists like him would in that case have been taught a lesson that they seem to need.

The choice of Knox for President is fitly supplemented by that of G. B. Benham for Secretary-Treasurer. Benham is a professional labor agitator who, as President of the local Labor Council, attempted to use his position for his personal political advancement. Last year he incurred a vote of censure from the Council of which he is President, by writing a letter recommending Mayor Schmitz for re-election. Of course, he expected to get his reward in the shape of an easy, well-paid job under the city Government, but this attempt to use his position for personal gain was too much even for his associates, who are not usually squeamish in such matters. In consequence of this episode and others of which more will be heard later, Benham became so much discredited among the professional labor crowd that Schmitz could not see his way to appointing him to anything. Nevertheless the Federation saw fit to elect him to the second office in its gift. Knox and Benham are an interesting pair.

GREAT SAN FRANCISCO.

San Francisco does no blowing, no spectacular advertising, no "what great things I am going to do," but goes right along in commercial expansion, industrial growth and financial strength upon a solid, lasting and profitable basis. And in this mighty upward and onward movement the machinery and conveniences of business life are correspondingly improved and enlarged so that every new demand of the constantly widening channels of trade expansion is anticipated and the needed facilities ready for employment. That is the reason why San Francisco is the recognized commercial and financial center of the Pacific Coast. To be sure, nature has given San Francisco extraordinary advantages as to geographical position and boundless harbor limits—the one natural point on all the Coast for the accumulation and distribution of goods and wares from and to all parts of the commercial world—and to all this has been added the required accessorial factors such as transportation facilities, both inland and oceanic, that "reach around the world" and return to the common centre—San Francisco.

But how little is there being said about one of the most conspicuous and picturesque, as well as permanent, additions to San Francisco's expansion. What we mean is the multiplying of mighty business houses and palatial dwellings. The growth in what some call "sky scrapers" is marvelous, and what is more, they are coming to be as common and as numerous as one and two-story business houses used to be. In fact, San Francisco may already be called a "city of sky scrapers," for they are everywhere, either in a state of completion, occupied, or under construction. And what is more, tenants are ready to move in the moment they are ready for occupancy. But the city's expansion in building is by no means confined to business houses. Upon every hand all over the city, dwellings, apartment houses, hotels and flats of unusually large proportions may be seen looming or climbing skyward. And the architecture of these additions to the city's house facilities is as pleasing and attractive as their foundations and superstructures are strong, permanent and convenient. In short, San Francisco is a worthy rival of the best of the commercial centers of the East in the matter of noble and commanding edifices for business, residence and pleasure, and she proposes to keep right on growing in that as well as in all other directions of supremacy.

BUILDING THE POLITICAL MACHINE.

It is not very long ago since Mayor Schmitz told one of the officials of the city Government that he was convinced that the people of San Francisco did not believe in the enforcement of the merit system of appointments under civil service rules. Mr. Schmitz gives a pregnant example of action based on this belief by his appointment of Williams to be one of the Civil Service Commissioners. Williams has no fitness for this special function. In fact, his training has been such as to unfit him for a position that demands a wide knowledge of men and affairs. Williams is doubtless an excellent book-binder, but he knows nothing else. This appointment is simply a political job, and was inspired by the fact that he happens to be President of the Book-binders Union.

This appointment is simply a flagrant example of the use of administrative powers to build up the political machine. In the operation of such a system it is not surprising that men like Mershon get on the Municipal Commission.

Notes From the Opera

By Harold Ronald

Whatever pro and con opinions people may hold about Mme. Patti's farewell tour, there can be but one opinion about her singing of that outrageous farewell song. The fact that she sings it at all is a pitiable acknowledgment of the commercial side of this journey throughout the United States. It is an open secret that when Madame Patti steps foot upon the liner bound for home that she will be just $300,000 richer than when she landed. The reason for her singing the "Last Farewell" has not been told, but there could be no doubt about it in the minds of any one who saw Madame Patti leave the stage after singing it last Monday afternoon. Before she was out of sight of the audience, she held her hands up to her ears, as if to shut out the applause the people considerably gave her for it, and when she had reached the wings her hands were over her eyes as if for very shame. Those who bought seats on the stage saw this, and those near the wings heard her say: "There!" as she threw the music on the director's table.

The words are inane, and the music worse, and Madame Patti sings them horribly. How could she do otherwise! Why, oh why! did she keep to her contract?

Here is the story of the outrage. The man who wrote this atrocity also wrote "After the Ball." He has money, plenty of it, and is in a measure backing the management of the Patti tour.

He wrote a letter to himself, asking himself to write a song for the tour. Then he sat down and wrote as rapid a thing as ever passed through the press. Madame Patti agreed to place the farewell in her repertoire, thinking that surely nothing could be written so bad that she could not put something into it to make it acceptable. In holding to the agreement, she has made one of the mistakes of her life—a petty one, to be sure, but one that even she cannot afford to do—particularly when she is three-score years old. The author should be sentenced to life imprisonment. He need not think that Madame Patti can sing him into fame.

The story of Duss and his decoration has not been told until now. When the New York millionaire raised his baton over the New York Metropolitan Orchestra in this city every one wondered at the decoration he wore on a gay ribbon in place of his necktie, after the fashion of an ambassador from France. The critics took a shy at it, but no explanations were forthcoming, and the decoration remained a mystery. Well, it belongs to Duss all right, because he helped to pay for it; the remainder was collected among the musicians who play under him and who rest contented en route because they know that their salary is always as good as paid. Duss always squares accounts.

The decoration came about in this way. One of the "first violins" in the orchestra came to him and said that the men were desirous of making their leader a present, and he thought that it might be well to make it something that Director Duss would really appreciate, and it was thought that the best way to find out was to go directly to him. When the question was put to Duss, he said that above all he would like to have a decoration. The messenger from the men was dismayed; there was not money enough in the purse to get the ornament of distinction, and the man knew full well that his confreres had already taxed themselves to the limit of their purses. Duss seemed to realize the predicament, and said promptly and generously: "If there is not money enough on hand, I will make up the difference." This the millionaire leader did, and as his taste ran to fine designs, adequately jeweled, he had to draw his check for several hundred dollars. Who says that Duss is not entitled to wear the elegant thing?

Storm signals are up at the Tivoli Opera House. Annie Myers, the peppery soubrette of certain age, does not see why the management had to engage Eugenia Barker to sing the role of Cordelia Allen in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," and is not afraid to say so. She insists that she was already of the company and quite willing and capable to take the part. As her contract does not admit of taking issue in the matter, she has had to swallow the lumps of indignation in her throat and put on the little white breeches that Robert Pemberton, the Southern lad, must wear. At any rate, the plump Annie may comfort herself with the thought that very few women of her age or any other could don a boy's tight-fitting white suit and look like anything. In it, she is "Just too Sweet for Anything," and no one will deny her the title of the fat little l'Aiglou of comic opera.

It is not an original thing to say that an actor resembles a soldier on the firing line. In this, more than any other, professional duty claims many a sacrifice. George Osbourne, of the Alcazar Stock Company, exemplified the old Spartan when, on last Monday night, after receiving notice of the death of a son in an Eastern town, he went on with the rehearsal and at night nerved himself to give the audience the best piece of acting even so finished an actor as himself could give. The company extended full measure of sympathy, but a sense of responsibility to the public did not allow the audience to see the immense cloud of grief under which each member swayed like storm-swept ships.

Next door to the Alcazar, at Fischer's, Mr. Kolb had been under a doctor's care all night and all day, from nine in the morning until five, with a doctor in the dressing room, he heroically went through his lines. He said afterwards that when the public gave such a generous reception to the work of his team in "The Beauty Shop,"—he said to himself: "Work, damn you, work, if you die for it!"

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

The situation in the Far East is more complicated than a week ago, yet it is easier of solution. In the face of Russia's opposition, China has signed a treaty of commerce with the United States and also with Great Britain, in which those two Anglo-Saxon countries are placed upon an equal basis with the most favored nation, particularly so in Manchuria. The signing of these compacts by China is the equivalent of the repudiation of Russia's claims to either ownership or protectorate of Manchuria. This in the face of the fact that Russia is in possession of Manchuria with a large army upon the ground to emphasize her presence is significant. But what is still more audacious is a recent declaration of the St. Petersburg Government that the Manchurian ports would not be opened to the commerce of the nations. The situation, therefore, is this: China claims the ownership of Manchuria and has granted the United States and Great Britain commercial rights therein, but is unable to deliver the goods, so to speak, by herself. If, then, Great Britain and the United States want the great commercial advantages which the treaty grants they will have to strengthen China's arm against Russia. But it so happens that Japan's interests in Corea are so important and valuable that she is obliged to lead in the dislodgment of Russia in Manchuria. In assuming leadership Japan can count upon the moral support of the United States and Great Britain and a more or less active support from China. But these allies of Japan will be obliged to stand ready with something more substantial than moral support if she is likely to fail in the conflict against Russia, for Japan's failure to bring Russia to terms would mean the annulment of the new treaty of commerce and the shutting of the United States and Great Britain out of Manchuria at once, and out of other Chinese territory in the future. War, therefore, between Russia and Japan is inevitable unless Russia backs down and retreats from every diplomatic and military position she has taken upon Chinese territory. Meanwhile, the United States and Great Britain will have to keep close to Japan with plenty of moral support, and ready to substitute shot and shell for moral support should occasion require it.

Germany has officially announced that she will maintain strict neutrality in the event of a Japanese-Russian war, but the German war lord is too anxious to see himself marching away to war at the head of a great army, and Germany's commercial and territorial interests in the Far East are too extensive and valuable to be left to the tender mercies of the uncertainties of war to make the declaration of neutrality effective more than one day at a time. In fact, it is believed by many of the most astute statesmen of Europe that a Japanese-Russian war would bury the animosities of centuries between France and Germany, and that they, with Russia, would form a tripple offensive and defensive alliance against the Anglo-Saxon nations in every field of commerce, even to the extent of armed conflicts, if need be. For the present, and probably for some years, the Far East is the battle ground for commercial competition. After that South America will be the bone of contention. Already Germany is quietly establishing colonies in Argentine and other Latin-American States for a purpose that no one could mistake.

The Senate has ratified the Panama Canal treaty, and there is now nothing to hinder the French-American canal ring calling at the Treasury Department and pulling out $40,000,000 for division among themselves. The work of construction of the canal may be undertaken at any moment the syndicate decides to go ahead with a Government-backed business enterprise that can be made to last for thirty years with millions and millions of dollars flowing annually from Uncle Sam's strong box to the syndicate's pocket. The Panama Canal job is the most gigantic Government swindle that history gives any account of. In this connection it may be observed that the inside history of the "uprising" of the people of Panama, which culminated in the founding of the "Republic of Panama," has been revealed. The "uprising" was confined to eight political agitators out of a job, and the mass meeting" and subsequent "convention of the people," which proclaimed Panama's independence, were composed of those same eight patriots. They put the machinery of Government in place under the protection of the guns of a conveniently present United States warship, and in just three days from the eight's declaration of Panama's independence, President Roosevelt recognized the new Republic and immediately despatched a minister plenipotentiary thither to represent the Washington Government at the seat of the new nation. But there is more to follow if Roosevelt is elected next November. Panama is to be declared a territory of the United States upon substantially the same basis that Porto Rico enjoys. The "manifest destiny" wedge will then have entered the Central American States to split off other territory as President Roosevelt's appetite may crave more outlying possessions. However the ides of November may change the programme.

Senator Foraker's attempt to excuse the President for his haste in aiding and abetting the Panama revolutionists is lame, weak and impudent. He says the President's quick interference was to "prevent the horrors of a civil war," but the assertion is an insult to the intelligence of the people, and the President should not feel like thanking his Senatorial mouthpiece for his monstrous perversion of facts. The Republic of Colombia had a large standing army at the time of the "uprising" of the eight revolutionary leaders quartered in the other States of the Republic. The entire military strength of Panama then under arms was less than 200 men, and only a small percentage of them sanctioned the revolution. Senator Foraker, therefore, either deliberately falsified the affair or was densely ignorant of the facts. Now, as a matter of fact, and the evidence justifies the assertion, the Panama rebellion, the declaration of independence, and the officering of the new Government, were all planned and started in their execution at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York under the protection of the police of that city. All the preliminary work was done in that hotel by agents of the Washington Government and three or four Panama "Generals." Haste was then made to issue the proclamation from Panama soil, but not until United States warships had reached the spot to force Colombia into the background. In fact, the first act of the Panama Government was at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel. All this Senator Foraker knew, and he knew that not more than 100 of the Panama "army" of 200 men would have taken up arms for the new Republic, and that public sentiment in Panama was decidedly in favor of preserving the integrity of the United States of Colombia, and Senator Foraker knew, too, that the Panama revolutionary leaders were after the $10,000,000 bonus which the United States had agreed to pay for concessions; he knew furthermore that the whole scheme was concocted in Washington official circles, perfected in the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, and put into execution in Panama under the protection of United States warships. The wonder is how Foraker dared to utter such a bare-face falsehood.

AN UNFAIR BOYCOTT.

The spectacle of one businessman calmly facing the concentrated fire of unionism would be enough to stir the Americanism in any breast, one would think. Add to it the spectacle of uniformed officers of the law standing by while crowds of ruffians do their vilest to keep business away from the single-handed champion of free labor, and it is almost enough to make men doubt the efficiency of our institutions.

These things are to be seen daily and nightly on Market street. The one man pitted against all unionism is M. Johnson, keeper of a restaurant. His offense against organized labor is not that he pays less wages than it demands, not that he refuses to employ union men, but that he has put above his door the placard "This is an Open Shop," and declares that he has the right to employ and will employ union and non-union help without discrimination. For this, raucous-voiced men and women "picket" his place. "Picketing" means shrieking lies about the victim and his business, jeering his patrons, threatening them, jostling them, assaulting them if the police do not interfere—and often there is no interference.

First—Closed shop agreement forced from individual restaurants by Waiters, No. 36; Cooks', No. 44; Helpers', No. 110. No Asiatics.

Second—Partial open-shop agreement between Restaurant Keepers' Association and Waiters', No. 30; Cooks', No. 44; Helpers', No. 110, sacrificed; can employ Asiatics.

Third—Complete open-shop agreement between the five Tavern and Louvre restaurants, Waiters', No. 30; Cooks', No. 44; Helpers', No. 110. Can employ union or non-union.

Fourth—No agreement with hotels, boarding-houses and many restaurants. Not molested.

Fifth—Johnson, standing for his constitutional rights, is boycotted.

Labor union, thy consistency is great.

M. JOHNSON.

Mr. Johnson declares he will not discriminate in favor of nor against any union, neither will he compel his employes to join any. A comparison of conditions shows that he pays better than union wages by an average of 15 per cent, also gives better than union hours, six days constituting a week's work, and claims that this all proves the statements of boycotters on the sidewalk to be malicious falsehoods.

All fair-minded people ought to show their disapproval of the boycott as un-American and contrary to the principles of the United States Constitution by patronizing his boycotted open-shop restaurant at 725 Market street.

Varied Types. It is unfortunate for Mr. Chesterton that he made a reputation as a journalistic critic through his epigrams, which happened to catch the public taste as they appeared in the columns of the Daily News. His Life of Browning in the "English Men of Letters" series proves that he is not merely a writer of glittering paradoxes, but a critic with imagination, of all critics the rarest type. His new book is not only filled with stale epigrams, but the same ones are used again and again. The man who makes epigrams should have a long memory.

Mr. Chesterton is extremely modern, and adores his own century and abhors any one who would fain live in any other. It would be well for him to acquire a more finished style—and to get rid of the haste that has caused him to allow so many typographical errors in this present volume.

"Varied Types," by G. K. Chesterton. Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Sweater" Literature. "Borlase & Son," considered as a novel, is dull, but as a treatise on London's poor, the sweat-shops and the chicanery of commercial life in the neighborhood of South Camberwell, it is an accurate and valuable contribution to "sweater" literature. Borlase & Son is the firm name of a drapery emporium which stands as a type of a shopping institution known all over London, where the employees board on the premises. The conditions of life portrayed are, the author declares, absolutely veracious. Several of the characters made their first appearance in a book entitled "A Guardian of the Poor," and published in 1867 at the Sign of the Bodley Head by Mr. John Lane, but there is no connection between the two volumes.

Ponkapog Papers. Part of this little volume is devoted to short studies for essays, or mere suggestions that leave the reader to fill out. Here is one that opens the door to wildest conjecture: "Imagine all human beings swept off the face of the earth, excepting one man. Imagine this man in some vast city, New York or London. Imagine him on the third or fourth day of his solitude sitting in a house and hearing a ring at the doorbell." There is a charming study of Herrick, and a criticism of Emily Dickinson, to which her admirers will not agree. Through all these Papers runs a vein of humorous leisure that reminds one of the gentle Elia who would have enjoyed the thought that out of Ponkapog could have come so good a book.

"Ponkapog Papers," by Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

The Ultimate Moment. Those who read W. R. Lighton's story, "The Ultimate Moment," during its serial publication in Harper's Bazaar, will remember it for its unique point of view of the value of simplicity in living. The best portions of the book are the descriptions of life on the Nebraska farm, but the Omaha scenes are not so well drawn, although some of the incidents are stirring and pathetic. The inequalities of the story perhaps add to its charm by pointing out the beauties more effectively, and its style is refreshing throughout. The illustrations by A. I. Keller are exceedingly well drawn and appropriate to the text. It is published by Harper & Bros.

The Daughter of a Magnate. "The Daughter of a Magnate," by Frank H. Spearman, has already appeared in serial form in a popular magazine, and is so good that it is welcome in book form. In this latest and best story of Mr. Spearman the foundation is real railroading on the largest and most expensive scale, and in it the author shows his intimate knowledge of the great problems of engineering, tunneling mountains and filling valleys, and tells of the skill of the men whose brains have planned the bridges and the trials and daring of those at the lever and the throttle. Through the story runs the love romance of a typical American hero and heroine; but Mr. Spearman knows more of bridge building than he does of love-making.

He paints the picture of a railroad man's life in the following terse sentences: "A hundred times and in a hundred ways we gamble with death and laugh if he cheat it, and our poor reward is only sometimes to win where far better men have failed. So in this railroad life two men stand * * * luck or ill-luck, storm or fair weather, together. And death speaks for one; and whichever he calls it is ever the other must answer. And this is duty."

Charles Scribners Sons, Publishers, New York.

Letters Home. The novel of letters is unquestionably the most difficult narrative form, yet Mr. Howells manages it with delightful ease and vivacity. The individuality of each writer is well defined, without confusion of point of view or style. Each one, besides keeping up the story, liberally contributes himself glimpses of his past experience, observations on the world about him; so that from these self-revelations the reader enters sympathetically into half a dozen stories. In life, people are always coming temporarily together through common interest in an actual drama, while at the same time all are busy about their own affairs and ready to drift apart as soon as the play that has attracted them is over. The representation of this perpetual movement of life is so difficult that few novelists ever dream of trying it. Mr. Howells has shown himself accomplished in such representation over and over again, but has perhaps never come so near perfection as in "Letters Home." From the purely outside standpoint this is the best study of New York that has ever been given in fiction, and perhaps Mr. Howells is the only author who could give it.

"Letters Home," by W. D. Howells. Harper & Brothers.

In "Barbe of Grand Bayou" Mr. John Oxenham has written a thrilling melodrama, and has thrown an atmosphere of reality around it so that the story stands out as one that is exceptional in more ways than one. It is the best novel yet from the pen of Mr. Oxenham.

Dodd, Mead & Co., New York, Publishers.

Albert Lee's latest novel, "The Baronet in Corduroy," is of the usual style of historical romances. The story is in the time of Queen Anne, and Addison, Steele and Defoe are introduced to give an air of reality to the tale.

D. Appleton & Co., Publishers, New York and Boston.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP TO YOU ON THEATRICALS.

COLUMBIA—Langtry in "Mrs. Deering's Divorce." Highly enjoyable.
FISCHER'S—"The Beauty Shop." Best play since house opened.
ORPHEUM—Good show. Ten good acts.
TIVOLI—Splendid staging and catchy music.
CALIFORNIA—"A Trip to Chinatown." Very funny.
ALCAZAR—Excellent performance, "The Moth and the Flame."
GRAND—"In Convict Stripes." A melodrama of the South.
CENTRAL—"The Moonshiner." Ordinary.
CHUTES—"Deaves Merry Mannikins." Excellent.
LYRIC HALL—Burton Holmes' Lectures. Good.

The Jersey Lily has improved. Her acting is so far superior to her attempts in the same direction when she was here before that there is no comparison. Mrs. Langtry, while she does not effectually hide her age, is really better looking. If, as one writer has put it: "One grows to look like the things one looks upon," Mrs. Langtry must look upon things that are good and wholesome.

The English appreciation of what makes for crushing beauty was never an American estimate, and yet Mrs. Langtry is certainly a very attractive woman, and may to-day be classed as a splendid actress. A French philosopher has it that "women never learn anything that they have not learned ere thirty-five." Mrs. Langtry certainly has learned much more than anyone could expect, and yet she has not mastered the art of graceful locomotion. She walks in as charmingly an ungraceful manner as of yore.

It is said, in extenuation, that to walk with mis-mated feet is an English prerogative. The Lily made a splendid Lady Deering, and Mr. Truesdell's Captain Deering leaves little to be wished for in his version of Fendall's lines. The rest of the company is as good as we have seen for many a day.

Patti has come and gone, and the poor old song-bird is only a memory. The pity of it is that the lust for money should permit the exploitation of this really nice old lady of pleasant memories. People went to see Patti, not to hear her sing. And they were not disappointed, for she did not sing at all. The New York syndicate will be raking over some old ladies' home next in an attempt to discover a great attraction.

Fischer's was crowded to the doors on the first night of "The Beauty Shop," and I will predict a continuance of the same good business. The new star, Miss Helen Russell, is of the first magnitude, and, as a vocalist, easily outshines Amber. Mr. Peachey's rendition of "Obstinate Lizzie May" was good, and the chorus work excellent. Kolb and Dill are excruciatingly funny throughout the new play, and the prize-fight, with Ben Dillon as Professor Brannagan and Carl Yoho as Pugsy McGenk, is a corker. Miss Russell's entrance in her automobile costume is as stunning a thing as can well be imagined. She is a statuesque woman, and good to look upon. At the same time I'll give her a tip to change dressmakers.

Her song, "Navajo" and Strauss's Waltz Song are things that stay with you. Miss O'Ramey gave a highly artistic and finished performance as Sapho Sweeney. The music, by Miss Adah Clement, is quite pleasing, and the "Matutinal Medley" beyond the ordinary. Mr. Crawford, the playwright, is to be congratulated on the great success of a play produced under the stress of the most trying circumstances.

At the Tivoli, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" is a generally good performance. From a musical standpoint we find splendid chorus work and stirring words, but the solos are weak. As a play, it is better than the usual run of operas. The scenery is magnificent and "worth coming miles to see." "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" will have a long run, because it touches the "humanities." What it lacks in the music (in spots) it makes up, and gives you measure, overflowing, elsewhere.

Howard Thurston, at the Orpheum, advertised as "the man who mystified Hermann," does some astonishing stunts in the line of prestidigitation. All the tricks are well done, and there is an astonishing smoothness in his work. There is a black face turn in which White and Simmons are the laugh-makers. The Tobin sisters are very attractive young persons, and the Viennese dancers, Walno and Marinette, are clever in their own specialty. There are ten good numbers in this week's programme.

The Grand Opera House management has a number of good things in preparation. "One Night in June," which is the next bill, tells a beautiful story of Vermont. As there is a large contingent of the Green Mountain people in San Francisco, there ought to be a good attendance. Laughter and tears are closely intermingled, and there is an interesting plot. The scenic effects are especially fine. There is a church scene, a Vermont farm scene, and a beautiful June night. The play will be interpreted to the public by Miss Grace Turner and company. This will be followed by W. H. Turner in "David Harum."

* * *

Mrs. Langtry's engagement at the Columbia Theatre will have a change of bill during the latter part of next week, as it is announced that only the first three nights will be devoted to "Mrs. Deering's Divorce," and on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights and at the matinee on Saturday, "The Degenerates" will be staged. It will be the first presentation here of Sydney Grundy's modern society comedy, and as many have inquired as to the possibility of Mrs. Langtry appearing in it here, a series of crowded houses may be expected.

* * *

The next Columbia Theatre attraction will be "A Chinese Honeymoon." It has the biggest record as a musical piece of the present epoch. The company is large, and there is a galaxy of good names in the cast.

* * *

The Central is producing one of the old-time piff-bang-bing shows that goes with a vim. "The Moonshiners" does not lack in noise and powder smoke, and the interest does not wane from start to finish.

* * *

"In Convict Stripes," at the Grand, is drawing a crowd. It is a well-acted play, and the staging is especially good.

* * *

The Alcazar keeps up a rattling Gatling fire of good plays. San Francisco has rarely seen a company giving a more finished performance. Next week "Mrs. Jack" will be presented. This is a wildly farcical frivolity by Grace Livingstone Furniss, odd in device, and compelling laughter by sheer absurdity. Those who like George Ade's slang and Hoyt types of farce comedy characters will grow merry over "Mrs. Jack."

* * *

Theatre-goers of San Francisco will enjoy a surfeit of things, if advance agents are to be believed. Among the new attractions for the Central for the week beginning next Monday night will be that tremendous New York success, "A Bowery Girl," with its great scenic environment and its multitude of Gotham street characters. If you want to know how politics is done on the Bowery, a liberal lesson is afforded by the boss of the Fourth Ward, who is also the father of the leader of Bowery society. The cast introduces the heir to a Dutch brewery, with foaming ambitions; the unscrupulous lawyer, with an eye peeled for questionable business; the Italian padrone and the Bowery Chinaman; the lost heirless, the plug-hatted villain with a neglected wife and child; the tough girl, with original packages of slang, and the street gamins, with their Bowery vernacular. A magnificent spectacular production of "Quo Vadis" is in preparation for the week of January 25th.

* * *

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" has captured the community, and the Tivoli holds large and well-pleased audiences. The music has caught on, and "My Own United States," "Kate, my Southern Rose," and "My Honeysuckle Girl" is puckering the lips of those that whistle. Ferris Hartman continues the great favorite, and his song, "I was Quite Upset," is a great hit.

Barr and La Salle, who are said to present a most amusing skit in "The Expressman's Reception," will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week. Natalia Delgado, a daughter of sunny Spain, will be seen in the fascinating and sinuous dances of her native land, and the Girdellers will continue their wonderful acrobatic and equilibristic performance. La Drew and La Zone, "the daffy dame and the tad," will introduce new eccentricities in their act; Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs, and Deaves' Merry Mannikins will continue to amuse both young and old. The animatoscope will show many interesting and novel moving pictures, and the amateurs will appear on Thursday night. There is no more pleasant place in San Francisco in which to spend an hour than in the zoo at the Chutes.

Although there is no safer house of its size in America, the management of Fischer's Theatre has leased at a big rental an entire store on Powell street in the rear of the house, and will cut through to have a large exit from the stage and auditorium, as well as from the main entrance. This will make Fischer's Theatre one of the safest houses in America.

The Stein-Bretto family, comedy hand-jumping acrobats, who created a sensation on their first visit to this country two years ago, will reappear at the Orpheum this coming week. They perform many novel feats, not the least of which is accomplished by the woman of the troupe, who carries the three male members of the organization off the stage at one time. Harry C. Stanley and Doris Wilson will present their little sketch, "Before the Ball." Mr. Stanley does clever character work and imitates a clarionette to perfection, while Miss Wilson is talented and pretty. Kelly and Violette will return with a new lot of songs and a wardrobe that is simply dazling in its beauty. This popular duo of San Franciscans have been meeting with great success on the circuit. Irving Jones, the unique little colored individual who writes and sings his own songs, will be one of the contributors to the funmaking. Howard Thurston promises new surprises. White and Simmons, the good old-fashioned negro minstrels, will present a new act in "A Pleasant Evening's Rest," and Walino and Marinette will vary their terpsichorean evolutions. Asra, the European comedy juggler, and the Orpheum motion pictures, showing the latest novelties, will complete an unusually interesting programme.

On the occasion of the third anniversary of the death of the great Italian composer, Giuseppe Verdi, a commemoration under the auspices of the local Italian "Daily l'Italia," will be held at the Alhambra Theatre on the evening of Saturday, January 23d, the proceeds of which will be entirely given to the fund for the Verdi monument to be erected in our city. The main attraction will be the first appearance of the Rivalta Royal Italian Band, directed by the distinguished leader after whom the band is named.

OF BENEFIT TO CALIFORNIA.

The Chronicle Annual for 1904 has met with an enthusiastic reception by the public, and the mails to the East are burdened with the weight of copies going to far away friends and intending settlers. This number of the Chronicle has the merit of being timely despite the passing of time, and it is the best exposition of the advantages of California we have yet seen. Mr. Isidor Jacobs contributes one of the best articles in the number, "How Canning of California Products has Grown into a World-Famous Industry." This article is statistical, and yet not dry, and it is divided under various heads in such a way as to make it intelligible to any reader. The Chronicle Annual should be sent to all Eastern friends at the earliest opportunity.

William McMurray, who for many years has occupied the position of agent of the Southern Pacific Information Bureau, has just resigned in order to accept the appointment of representative of the new St. Francis Hotel, which opens March 1st. Perhaps few men in the West have come in contact with a wider range of travelers of all nationalities, and he has warm friends in every part of the world. While not a native son, Mr. McMurray is as enthusiastic a Californian as any man who has been born and bred in the Golden State. Through his efforts many large and important conventions have been held in San Francisco, including the recent Bankers' National Conventional. Mr. McMurray has always been very popular, and his genial spirit and natural ability insure his success in his new position.

—Few come to San Francisco without paying a visit to Zinkand's, which has done so much to establish our city's reputation as the best restaurant town in the United States. It's the favorite after-theatre resort.

The soldiers at the Presidio are trying the new, ready-made army hash, warranted to keep in all climates, to be appetizing and filling, and to be good for jaundice and sore eyes. The Germans have a playful way of marching their soldiers scores of miles on a vest-pocketful of pills, chemically concentrated food, and even if a few men die under the strain, the course of science and army reform is considered vindicated. We, with our vestiges of the Anglo-Saxon appetite, demand a more filling diet. It must not be forgotten, however, that the rations are sample rations, and so of extra fine quality. When waf comes and the soldier absolutely requires his rations, they will in all probability be found to be just as rotten as was the famous preserved beef. Unfortunately, neither the Russians nor the Japanese eat hash.

A minister earns his fee so easily by performing the marriage ceremony that he might be expected to see that he conforms to the statute. In the Pederson case at Oakland it appears that the license for marriage was issued in Oakland and the ceremony performed by Reverend J. Fuendeling of the German Lutheran Church in San Francisco. It should be well known to a minister that a marriage can only be performed in the county in which the license is issued. It is gross professional negligence on the part of a minister to allow any woman to run a risk of this kind, when a mistake may have such terrible consequences for her.

In one of Gelett Burgess and Will Irwin's latest stories there was the account of a San Francisco woman who paraded Kearny street on Saturday afternoon as the advertising agent of a certain women's suit-house. Quite a number of young men must be following that occupation in the city at present. The street corners and the cigar-stores abound in flashily-dressed, insolent youths, without visible means of subsistence, who insult women, and seem to have a pull with the police. I wonder if any promises were made to this class of loafer prior to the election. Every worthless element in the community seems to have been seduced in some way.

What a strong lot, full of personality, were those old Californians. The death of the old colored woman, "Mammy" Pleasance, with all her force and originality, recalls some of the most prominent. Senator Sharon, Sarah Althea Terry, Judge Terry, Justice Field, even Dave Neagle, they were all typical Westerners, fiery and ill-balanced, perhaps, most of them, but endowed with that most uncommon of qualities, independence. The old colored woman who began life as a cook was a remarkable character. Overbearing, self-willed and exceedingly charitable, she was quite a person in her own queer way, one of the characters of a California which is passing very fast.

It would be just in accordance with the way in which we manage our affairs if the bill for the creation of a new Federal Judge for the Circuit of the United States Courts should fail because the Californians are unable to settle on what they want. Four separate bills from four separate California legislators dealing with the creation of one office for the good of the State are a little too many. Some agreement will have to be reached or the scheme will fall through again.

Mayor Schmitz, it strikes me, is having a hard time of it trying to serve two masters. The case of John Partridge is one in point. The Mayor's statement regarding the Pound Master, as vouched for by Mr. Partridge, cannot for a moment be doubted by anyone who knows that gentleman. The Mayor in his haste to find jobs for every Tom, Dick and Harry who peddled tickets for him at the last election, has put his foot in it. He is credited with calling Partridge a liar. When it is remembered that Mr. Partridge had witnesses to the conversation referred to, and that Mr. Partridge is a respectable business man, well-known, and that his word is as good as his bond, and that the Mayor is practically unknown save for broken political promises, a politician under the influence of professional politicians, the public will not be slow to judge.

Nobody hates humbug worse than I do, but there is a limit in the mater of a wide-open town, or there should be one, even under the regime of the present Mayor. It's all very well to restore the side doors and to rebuild the partitions. The people who go to those places generally know why they go and whither; even the resurrection of the old gambling is not a matter to weep over. But some limit ought to be placed upon the cinematographs and picture shows. One of these on Kearny street makes the Galveston flood an excuse for showing a picture of scores of men and women in a disgusting state of nudity. The thing is utterly devoid of art value, and should be stopped.

Why should the tradesmen on California street chose the particular time when the crowd of commuters is greatest to run their wares out of their stores upon the sidewalk? It is funny, but not otherwise agreeable to see elderly gentlemen and demure typewriters dodging barrows and trucks, and being genially abused by hurried workmen. Of course, it must be said in defense of the tradesmen that the blocks are stupidly left unprovided with an aisle. Still, one would think some other time might be chosen for trundling their wares, along the sidewalk.

Major Charles L. McCawley, "star dancing man" of the Marine Corps, has tripped his way merrily into the social service of the Government, being relieved of all duties except helping President and Mrs. Roosevelt at entertaining. There may be no heroism about the two step, but it leads to soft snaps.

Having been buoiced by an astute bank agent into buying a sixty volume set of historical works, "Uncle Joe" Cannon paid the money, but indorsed on the check: "The books are not worth a —, and are high at that." Which didn't help his bank account, but eased his mind.

That high-priest of fakers, John Alexander Dowie, is on his way to Australia, via San Francisco. The Antipodeans are welcome to him and to all the money he is suspected of having sequestered before his "Zion City" was turned over to a receiver.

Some of our local men would give much for the ability of William F. Brown of Oakland, who was arrested for begging. He is described as a beggar and a gentleman. It is remarkable how often the two things seem to go together.

They are going to decorate the streets of Oakland with palm trees, and the Call rejoices thereat and claims all the credit. It would be just as well for the Call to wait and see the palm trees first.

And so, men are to receive at teas. Farewell, then, to the tea-party and hail the he-party.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 3

Really, I am quite proud; there are three of us in San Francisco just now, all attracting a deal of attention. We are all from England, and not one of us born there. I am here, Baroness Cedarstrom and Mrs. Langtry, and what a sensation we are creating and how we are toadied to! It is awfully flattering; still the American always recognizes the better class, as well as genius.

I was hipped the morning after New Year's evening. My man Roger had also been out, and when I rang for him, my tub was not ready, my linen was not laid out, my tweeds were not forthcoming, and my boots were still on the tree. I would have dispensed with Roger on the spot, but I did not know if I could replace him. He is an excellent servant. He once was man for an officer in the Guards; and let me tell you that is the only school for a gentleman's man. So far as I allowed him, Roger begged me to pardon him, and said I had dismissed him for the night after I dressed. He then took a walk and some American Scotch whiskey, and added that it had overcome him. My bails were off when I learned this, and I explained to him the awful effects of drinking American Scotch whiskey, which is on the average as much like Scotch as paraffine is like eau de cologne, especially in places where Roger would buy it. I found out by my headache next morning that tipping American Scotch is bad for a chap's stomach. I finished my breakfast, and then took Roger to examine some apartments at which he had looked. Things went wrong again, and I told him I ought to kick him. He did not resent it. That is where army training shows. He stands it because he knows that if I did kick him it would not hurt him very much, and would afford me a small amount of mental pleasure combined with a slight sensation of physical exercise.

He caused me to waste the entire morning viewing impossible cubby holes with higgledy-piggledy entrances, dark halls and passages, and low ceilings—really admirable places for one's nieces to play doll's house in, but hardly suitable for a Draper's Clerk and his wife.

The tub room of the best out of the lot was there for ornament and suggestion only, and no sane architect ever dreamed of any one really bathing in it. It's rather a reproach on San Francisco. It looks as if your citizens regarded their morning tub as a task and not an enjoyment. There was not a wine closet in the whole of the places we visited, nor was there a Mews within easy distance. There was, however, attached to each place an impossible fellow who called himself janitor. Not one of them knew their places. They all knew what I wanted better than I did myself, and when I explained to them that Roger would attend to me they seemed to think their prerogatives were being usurped. I can't understand why the need of a janitor in bachelor apartments occupied by gentlemen who keep their own men. The apartments I viewed all seemed to be gotten up for appearance, being adapted to the wants of those persons who desire to convey the impression that they receive a good income while having a very small one. The same shoddy effect which I have noticed so much before. There must be correct apartments here somewhere with the conveniences needed by a gentleman, a room to wash in, a room for exercising, a dressing room, a place for Roger, a spare room for a friend, a sitting, bed and smoking room for me—and without the attachment of a fellow with shiny knees and over-run heels, and smells of onions, who calls himself in three or four disgusting brogues the janitor. One of the nicest chaps I have met at your clubs says he can put me on to the right thing in a short while, a house complete, which is owned by a friend of his who is going to Europe for a run. Really, if what I have seen in the way of places (and I am tired looking at them) be a specimen of the whole lot, I am impressed that the San Francisco gentleman either does not know how to live or can't afford it if he does. When I get settled and find a right servant or two, things will be different. Of course, select society, as I know it at home in England or New York, is limited here, but I have met some gentlewomen that are peerless by their own right of beauty and grace, only lacking the ancestry, and I have met some men who, riding in the Row, would make the chaps on the walk pause and stare. You have some good horsemen here. The merchant class, I imagine, is more or less transient. At home my tradespeople keep to their shop generation after generation. Here I notice in the papers and know by the signs on the shops along your principal streets that about one in three is holding a closing out sale. Really it looks bad. The classes can't get used to their shopkeepers in a day or two, and if the shopkeepers are a flit-by-night lot, it seems there would not be much confidence between the seller and ourselves. I can't understand it. Do they not do enough trade? Are their bankers hard on the poor chaps? Or is it a game? If it is a game, it is in bad taste; it causes one to doubt the honesty of the tradesman and the stability of the city. Maybe the fellows who are retiring from business are going to start again, or maybe they desire to get a fresh location. 'Pon my word, I don't blame any of them much for wanting to get off your main street. It is disgustingly dirty and wretchedly paved, and the stone walks are half wood and it is always dusty if not muddy. Maybe that this is caused by the lack of attention of your Aldermen, but that, as my friend Kipling says, is another story.

Master of House (to applying butler)—Can you open a bottle of beer neatly? Applicant—Um, not so very, sir. You see, I've lived mostly in champagne families.

Dear Bessie: Do you bowl? If so, I am sure you will envy us the new club which was opened this week and promises to be a success. It is on the Golden Gate avenue side of Jefferson Square, and only the wives and sisters and daughters of the members, who are all clubmen—and I suppose their cousins and their aunts—are eligible for the privilege of playing the game. Greer Harrison is the President of the Club and Ed. Greenway is one of the directors, so you see it is to be very swell. And now, having the place to play, parties are being made up to enjoy it, and before long there will be one or more clubs in full swing for every day in the week.

When I bunched up all the Thursday teas last week I omitted to tell you what a charming little hostess Bertie Bruce made as Mrs. Ferd Stephenson, and her home on Steiner street is such a pretty one. Newel Drown was the motif for the pleasant affair, and helped her to receive. Another thing I omitted to enlarge upon was the Gibbons dance, which, though not large, was an exceedingly pleasant one; just enough to make dancing comfortable, and the supper was delicious.

Bridge was the game selected by Mrs. Hinckley Taylor for her card party on Wednesday, and the forty ladies who played it seemed to take to it as naturally as ducks take to water; it will be all the rage soon, you take my word for it. The buds, at least quite a number of them, were given a luncheon by Mrs. Sullivan and Alice on Thursday; Norma Castle gave a large card party in the afternoon. I went out to make my tea call at Mrs. Swift's, and found her rooms crowded. What a lovely woman she is, in looks one of, if not the handsomest of all our society dames. Pretty little Helen Bailey is having a good time and enjoying herself thoroughly. Mrs. Austin Sperry holds her first large "at home" to-day; and to-night Susie Kirkpatrick gives a "kid dance" at the Palace—something like what La Jeunesse used to be when first started.

The newly-engaged couple, Mabel Cluff and Jack Wilson, are going the usual round of being entertained by their friends. Mrs. Cluff gave them a big dinner last week; the Blacks a Patti concert and supper party; the Warfields a dinner and theatre party; and Mrs. Jack Spreckels a luncheon and matinee party to Mabel on Saturday. Their dinners this week included one at the Alexander Wilson's on Monday; Pearl Landers gives one next Thursday, and Ed. Greenway one on the 2d of February, while Jack himself will play the dinner host to thirty of his friends on the third. Mabel Hogg's tea last Friday was the medium chosen for the formal announcement of Florence Callaghan's engagement to Vincent de Laveaga, which has been suspected for some time. It was quite a pleasant tea, and the floral decorations which were chiefly red, among the prettiest of the season.

Miss Carrie Gwin had only married ladies at her card party last Saturday; there were three tables, and at the game of seven-handed euchre Mrs. Mayo Newhall, Mrs. Smedburg and Mrs. Casey won the first prizes at each of them. I devoted half an hour—all I could spare—on Saturday to the 20th Century Club Concert at Lyric Hall, and missed hearing Carrie Little sing, which I regretted, for I hear she has improved very much during her stay in Paris. She was obliged to postpone the recital she was to have given, but I believe it will take place before long.

Gertrude Smith crops up again as the "entertained" at a luncheon to which I have been asked by Mrs. Eugene Lent next Tuesday; Mrs. Ritchie Dunn gives a luncheon at the University Club on Wednesday for Polly Macfarlane, and Maud Mullins Clarke has a card party for Polly on the 21st, all married folks of the younger set. Belle Smith gives a tea on Friday, and there will be the Friday Fortnightly dance in the evening, and Fanny Harris a big luncheon on the 28th. The last of the Assembly parties comes off on the 29th, so you see there is plenty to do all the time.

I told you I thought the wedding day of Louise Harrington was to be the 6th of February, but instead it is to be on the 2d, and will be, I hear, even quieter than was her sister Mary's. By the way, the new appointment of Commander Niblack will entail a four years' residence in Honolulu, so it will be some time ere we see Mary again.

It has been quite a fad here of late to entertain members of the "Girl with the Green Eyes" company; the Jolliffe girls had a tea for two of them, Miss Emmett and Miss Bell, and Margaret Mee had Frank Deklin as her guest at a small dinner of eight. There was regret that Patti could not accept any invitations, but Mrs. Langtry is here now, and she may be induced to take what the other was obliged to decline, as her stay here is to be for some little time.

Don't you remember all the nice affairs Mrs. Girard was so constantly planning when she was at the Presidio, and what pleasant parties she gave? Well, I am so glad she is back again, and as her husband is to be the new chief surgeon when he comes back from Manila, we may look forward to lots more pleasant times. She and her daughter, Mrs. Bush, are here already, and are at Fort Mason, where Kitty and I are going out to see them to-morrow. Katherine and Edith Bull came back from their Oriental travels by the transport Sheridan which arrived this week, and which brought the new regiment that is to be stationed at the Presidio, the 28th Infantry, and about the officers the girls feel no end of curiosity.

Bessie Ames has gone from our gaze for awhile; she and Mrs. Jack Casserley left for New York last Tuesday, and Bessie at least will not be back for several weeks, as she will spend February with her sister, Mrs. Wood, in Baltimore.

The Peter Martins are here at last. They arrived last Monday, and now we shall see what we shall see! The chatter is that they are to remain here a long time—perhaps for good and all.

Only think of my nearly forgetting to tell you that the long suspense is ended, and after many false alarms the cards for the wedding of Bernie Drown and Sam Boardman are out at last. It seems that Bernie was awaiting the arrival of Stella Kane, who is to be one of her bridesmaids, the other three, Susie Blanding, Charlotte Ellinwood and Linda Cadwallader, with her sister Newell as maid of honor. The marriage will take place at St. Luke's Church at high noon on Saturday, the 30th, and a reception afterwards at the Drown residence on Jackson street.

Constance de Young will make her formal debut at a tea to be given by her mother next Saturday afternoon, the 23d.

—Elsie.

The Art Association of San Francisco will hold its annual masked ball at the Hopkins Institute of Art, on Mardi Gras, which comes this year on Tuesday, February 16th. A beautiful invitation has been designed by Albertine Randall Wheelan, and is now in the hands of the engraver. A preliminary meeting of the decorating committee, which is composed of Mr. John M. Gamble and Harry W. Seawell, has been appointed for next week to lay out the scheme of color treatment, in ornamenting the halls and dancing rooms; while Henry Heyman has been given charge of the music.

The wedding of Miss Anita Claire Walsh of this city and John T. Tyner of New York took place in the Swedenborgian Church Wednesday night, and was one of the prettiest affairs of the season. The bride is a very popular young lady and has participated in many charitable affairs in this city. The groom is a son of J. R. Tyner, and nephew of Assistant Attorney-General Tyner at Washington, and is a junior member of W. L. Growall & Company. Miss Marie Aline Walsh, the bride's sister, acted as maid of honor, and James E. Knauss as best man. The ushers were Dr. William Ellis and Dr. Harry Sohr. The wedding reception was held in the parlors of the Colonial Hotel, where Mr. and Mrs. Tyner will reside on their return from Southern California.

The little daughter of Albert L. Farr, the rising young architect, passed away on the night of the 13th inst. The sympathy of all who know Mr. and Mrs. Farr is with them in their sad bereavement. The child was one year old and one of the sweetest and most loveable of children.

Arrivals at Hotel Rafael during the past week were: A. Feist, W. L. Dreyfus, Dr. W. L. Louisson, M. A. Bremer, Louis Ferrari, R. M. Burgess, O. Holmquist, Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Hale, Mrs. F. H. Stout, Mrs. E. Smith, Mrs. Shimer, Mrs. Farr, G. F. Simonds.

The Looker-On

Jim Smith—he of the coal, coke, and pig-iron trade—now rests from his labors within the aristocratic precincts of the Pacific-Union Club. And thereby hangs a tale. Smith, be it known, is one of the big men in the commercial world. When the steamship companies, the big hotels, or the large manufactories want to increase their visible stock of fuel, they have to consider the wishes of this quiet, athletic-looking gentleman, who, in his California-street office, holds not a few of the strings whereby the output of the coal mines is controlled. He has devoted so much of his time to acquiring fame and fortune in the business world that, although a member of the Bohemian and other organizations, he has had but little leisure in which to enjoy the comforts of club life. But most of his intimates, men like Jack Wilson, R. P. Schwerin, A. B. Spreckels and others are enthusiastic club men. For a long time they importuned Smith to permit them to post his name in the Pacific-Union. He demurred, for he cares but little for the artificialities of life.

Finally, however, he consented, and his name was put up. Now, that eloquent orator and reformed politician, Horace Platt, is one of the leading lights in the big club at Union Square, and he considers it his bounden duty to scrutinize carefully the list of proposed members, and to investigate to the smallest detail the character, reputation and social standing of all men that appear asking admittance. In the old days, when Horace and Chris Buckley ran the town together—that was before Platt discovered the gross iniquities of Democracy and switched—the blind boss impressed upon all his followers the importance of finding out everything possible about newcomers in the arena, and the necessity of barring those who did not bear the ear-marks of subserviency. Platt saw nothing in the Smith physiognomy to indicate that the coal dealer would fall down and worship when Horace appeared. It is said the arbiter of the club also feared that Smith lacked that full appreciation of polished humor and graceful wit that is needed to appreciate the subtlety of the Platonian bon mots. Then, again—frightful discovery—it was learned that once in the aforesaid Smith had had his habitat south of the slot. That was enough. Platt instituted a campaign against the unsuspecting dealer in pig-iron.

"Fate tried to conceal him by calling him Smith. Ha! Ha!" said Platt. "He is fuel in which I shall temper the bright blade of my wit."

But Smith's friends are cold, ha-a-rd men. When they start in on a proposition they usually see it through. So they told Mr. Platt. They also said something about society dudes not being the whole works. Platt simply shrugged his shoulders and answered: "I fear me your friend is not to be of the select. He has lingered so long in the marts of trade, it is now too late for him to be an ornament to this organization. We want clubable men. He is only a delver after dollars."

Then the trouble began. The Smith forces girt up their loins for battle; Platt threw off sarcasms and witticisms, but they glanced from the armor of the enemy. The day for the vote of the directorate approached. By this time, it was understood that one blackball against Smith would be considered a very serious affront by his friends; and those same friends are not men who may be affronted with impunity. Platt commenced to take counsel with himself. It was apparent to him that he had started a losing game, for Horace, remembering the instructions of his political teacher, quietly quit. Smith was elected by the unanimous vote of the eleven directors.

Now, the question is: What constitutes a clubman? If education, good manners, good taste and business success do not make a man eligible to join the elect, what does? Mr. Platt, it is said, will write an essay on the subject. It will be put in the box under the cornerstone of the new club house, so that in the years to come, future historians may learn something of the advanced condition of cultured society of the present day, from the standpoint of one who has walked along every level in the social structure.

I was looking over a copy of Addison Mizner's "Cynic's Calendar," the other day. In my humble opinion, it is the poorest apology for what it was evidently intended to be that was ever perpetrated on a confiding public. Not an original idea is between the two covers. Most of the stuff is as flat as stale beer. "It's a strong stomach that has no turning," says Mr. Mizner. You can see him look around with a modest smirk; you can see him pause for applause. "A little widow is a dangerous thing," he says in another place, with the calm complacency of one who is working off a gold-brick. If the sylph-like, gentle Addison would own up and acknowledge how much of his stuff he first stole, and then spoiled by bad handling, it might make interesting reading under the title: "How I tried to be funny, and failed," by "One of the many Mizners."

What has come over Judge John Hunt? Once upon a time he turned a pretty phrase, and his bright things illuminated a club room with a brilliancy that rivaled "the bright and the balmy effulgence of the morn." But I fear tongue or pen—or both—have lost their cunning. He is responsible for the Family Club's invitation to its Christmas feast. Those invitations to Christmas jinks are usually stilted things at best. They are forced, the humor is flat, and the idea is unprofitable. But these facts do not explain Hunt's failure in this game of forcing wit. In a wild endeavor to give a flavor of Christmas-tide to the club's invitation, he dragged in that poor, unfortunate little fellow, "Tiny Tim." Not once, but thrice, was reference made to the diminutive Timothy, and "green banks" also appeared four or five times in as many lines. As a wind-up, the card-writer said: "And as Tiny Tim says in 'The Christmas Carol,' 'God bless us all, every one.'"

Now, did Hunt think the members of the Family Club were unaware that Tim may be found in the "Christmas Carol?" If he did think so, why didn't he add some information about the Carol? Did he mention the "green banks" so frequently because he is a fisherman, or did he want to go a-caroling over them? As a friend of young unfortunates, as a protector of children, doesn't John Hunt think Tiny Tim has suffered long enough? If so, why pull him out at every opportunity? I think it would be a fitting punishment if Hunt were assigned to conduct the Juvenile Court—unless he can satisfactorily answer my questions and explain his fall from grace.

Did you know that no licenses for new saloons have been issued for the past three months? And did you know that if a saloon keeper becomes the bondsman for a man under arrest, the saloon keeper is liable to lose his license? The Police Commissioners think there are about enough saloons in San Francisco, and they have decided to call a halt. If one wants to go into the saloon business these days, he must buy an interest in an established place, or wait until some liquor seller loses his license. None of them ever quit. The Commissioners have also shut down on the straw bond business. Years ago the saloon keepers in the Tenderloin made large sums of money by furnishing bail bonds. None of the professional criminals reformed in jail more than an hour or two after arrest, so complete was the machinery of the bail bond bureau. But now, the saloon keepers have been given a quiet tip that the appearance of their names upon bail bonds will be taken by the Police Commissioners as an evidence that they are trying to interfere with the successful operation of the Police Department—a reason sufficient for a refusal to renew their licenses. There is much complaint in the Tenderloin, but the Police Commissioners are on the right track.

I have been waiting for some of the daily papers to tell that old tale about the flight of John Benson to Denmark, years ago. He was mixed up in some kind of a land fraud, and suddenly decided that a trip to Europe would be very beneficial. He wandered around in Europe for some time, and while he was quietly resting in the Kingdom of the Danes, some Government sleuth came along, tapped him on the shoulder and said Uncle Sam was anxious to see him in Washington. Benson appreciated the good intentions of his Uncle Samuel, but he said he liked Denmark so much he did not wish to move—just then. The usual extradition proceedings followed, and Benson came back. That must be over ten years ago. Benson was then in business in this city. He beat out the case, and came back to San Francisco. He knows the land laws backwards, and it is probable that the present charge against him will fail of proof.

The principal of the Berkeley High School is out against the deadly cigarette. More power to him! Now, if the University authorities would start a crusade against tippling, all the school men would be afforded protection against the temptations that beset those that go down into Egypt. Benjamin Ide is an authority on the manners of the ancient Greeks; likewise, he knows things about the old Romans; therefore, he is well aware that "ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey," where the students of the humanities, the leaders of the thought of to-day, the coming apostles of the "isms" of to-morrow, cannot carry home a proper load of rich Falernian without attracting the notice of their less learned brethren. Knowing that the Benjamin of Berkeley is held in high esteem in this land of his adoption, I am confident that an edict issued by him upon the evil effects of promiscuous indulging would attract wide attention. As a student of men and manners he knows that bad examples may be set, unwittingly, by instructors in the schools who are not able to cope as bottle men with the hard-headed men of commerce whom they may meet at the festal board, and it is shocking and sad to see one filled with dead languages, ancient roots and fizz, spilling things as he makes geometrical designs in an endeavor to catch a train. Not that such things have happened. Oh, Old "Mammy" Pleasance has passed to the Great Beyond. She was one of the shrewdest women of her race. For decades in this city, she was more than a match for lawyers, detectives, newspaper men, and all whose business it was to try to ferret out the many deals in which hers was the hidden but directing hand. She was as close-lipped as a double-barred, burglar-proof safe; in habit of life she was retiring, and the many women, now prominent in society, or whose mothers may have been prominent during the past thirty years, who may have been aided by the keen colored woman, need have no fears of what she might have told. Her secrets went with her to the grave. That she befriended more than one fair struggler in the social swim, both with money and influence, is well known. To some, she gave generously in the days of her wealth, but to others she was like a leech, draining their very last dollar in pursuit of what she considered her rights. To the present generation she was best identified as the mistress of the unfortunate household of the late Thomas Bell. To the men and women of twenty-five and forty years ago she was a bright, ready-witted, sharp, bold manipulator of anything from a clam-bake to a stock deal; from a small tea in a lodging house to an attack upon a millionaire's stronghold in the Palace. Withal, she was one of the most unusual characters San Francisco has known. Certain it is, we shall never see her like again.

Financial Review.

The Western Type of Financiering.

Inflation seems to be the order of the day, and the infection has evidently spread to San Francisco, which can now point out a financier or two to visiting strangers as additional evidence in substantiation of the allegation that this city has at last outgrown the swaddling clothes of infancy, and is now bounding over the sands of time full of the redundant spirits of youth in its spring-time. We can now point to quite a number of daring efforts in the line of finance achieved here, even if we cannot boast of a right to file a patent upon the original conception process. Our leading industrials have suddenly assumed the attitude of the fabled frog who wished to attain the proportions of an ox. Take San Francisco Gas for example: it has been inflated with enough air to swell its properties from $9,000,000, in itself a pretty steep figure for a time-worn plant, up to thirty millions of dollars. Why was this done? The new management, gathered from many different walks in life to become full-blown gas experts at a moment's notice, will possibly account for this undue excess of hot air by an explanation that the money is to be utilized to acquire an additional supply of plants, etc., and for what? To supply the place of a plant which could be installed to-day of modern type at first hand for less than the over-valued old rack of patchwork which formed the nucleus of a transaction which must make the ordinary man of affairs pause and ponder over the ways of the great local financiers. Supposing some one now starts in to erect a new nine million dollar plant, what would become of the hot air in the thirty million dollar San Francisco Gas and Electric Light Company. It is not particularly strong on its pegs now, as the market shows for itself, and the fact that the whole public, outside of the few who have some stock and confidence in a management which has so far been accredited with nothing outside of a $25000 a year President, who is now earning it by doing the grand in a distant land; a list of high-salaried officials, and an output of gas which in point of quality does not speak much for the reputation of the management as gas-makers. Would it not have been better to have thrown the weight of expenses into the practical end of the business, instead of putting it out in salaries at a juncture in the history of a concern, weighted down with financial responsibilities like this $30,000,000 local exhibit in the art of unsatisfactory gas making is now, after passing through the hands of the Western financier?

Local Stocks and Bonds.

The volume of business for the week has shown some improvement in bonds, and considerable trade has been done in Spring Valley and Southern Pacific issues. In the share list, Gas and Electric and Alaska Packers have had the floor. The former is in poor condition, evidently. When the inside props are withdrawn, down go prices, and when a rally comes under the stimulus of inside buying, enough stock pours in to convince one that if higher prices prevailed, outside holders would not take any chances on the city standing the raise of interest on the inflated capitalization of $30,000,000. If such a very transparent artifice upon the part of financial jugglers were allowed to prevail, any bogus scheme masquerading as a public utility could build up its capital to any extraordinary pitch by the inflation of prices and expect permission to collect a certain rate per cent upon the amount of the alleged investment. As for the Alaska Commercial, the vagaries in that stock are not easily explained. Nothing has happened to warrant a decline in share values, and the following reactions are only natural, only on a minor scale. Spring Valley has shown a stronger tone during the past week under a very light demand. Other securities show few changes, and they are only nominal.

Dividends Paid and Declared.

The following dividends by local corporations were paid on the 11th inst.: First National Bank of San Francisco, regular semi-annual, at the rate of 10 per cent, amounting to $75,000; Marin County Water Company, regular quarterly, 75 cents per share; Giant Consolidated Powder Company, regular monthly, 50 cents per share; California Wine Association, regular monthly, 60 cents per share. The Spring Valley Water Company has declared a quarterly dividend of 63 cents per share, payable on and after January 20th. The People's Home Savings Bank (on liquidation) has Moves and Countermoves.

The first evidences of the effort that the Honorable Mark Hanna is making to secure the Republican Presidential nomination for himself reached this city last week. Letters have been received by a number of prominent Republicans, some of them members of the Union League Club and others holding federal offices, asking what the feeling is towards Hanna's candidacy, and expressing the hope that the delegation to the National Convention would go un-instructed. Copies of an Ohio paper, containing bitter attacks on the President and glowing eulogies of Mark, have reached every newspaper office in the State, and private letters have been sent to men prominent in the financial world asking them to use their influence to defeat Roosevelt on the ground that he was an enemy of capital and the great money interests of the country. So far, however, there is no sign of any break in the solid Republican column in California. Reports sent back to the Hanna boomers are that the people of this State demand Roosevelt, and that it would be political suicide to attempt to elect an anti-Roosevelt delegation to Chicago. A prominent member of the Union League told me that, while there might be some of its members for Hanna, that they were very few and were not conspicuous in their advocacy of him. The country papers have paid no attention to the literature sent them from Ohio in Hanna's interests, and the moneyed men say that Hanna could not be elected, and that the election of a Democrat would unsettle the business interests for years.

The failure of the National Committee to call for the election of delegates to the National Convention is delaying the issuance of a call for a State Convention, and it will not now be held until late in May, and probably not until June. Every one must register to vote at the primaries, and since Hanna is an avowed candidate for the Presidency, the primaries are of much more interest and importance than they promised to be when Roosevelt had no opposition.

The Democrats are at sea as usual. They do not seem to know whom they want for President, and the fight in their lines will be pro and con Hearst. Ex-Governor Budd is to be the leader of the Hearst forces, and he is a very shrewd politician. Just who will lead the opposition is not yet decided.

* * *

The Minnesota Secretary of the new Board of Corrections and Charities has already distinguished himself in a very remarkable way for an expert who was imported to teach the good people of California the principles of economy in their public expenditures. The curious will see in the Blue Book that he is put down as of "St. Paul, Minnesota," an extraordinary confession of the incompetency of all Californians, since they had to go so far to get a man for the place. Having been elected to the place through his Chicago pull, as previously explained in this column, he proceeded to bring his family out here, and then was about to present a bill to the State Treasury, amounting to some $500, for their removal. But the Board refused to allow that expense bill, although they agreed to allow another for his personal expenses, amounting to $104.05. It will be noticed that he must have come around by the Horn or via Siberia, as most people could make the trip from St. Paul to San Francisco for much less than that figure. However, the cruel Board of Examiners would not even allow him the personal account bill, and he has been forced to bear his own traveling expenses. Considering the way in which this expert has started out to save the State money, it might be well for the Board of Examiners to scrutinize carefully his financial accounts, or he will get rid of all his appropriation before he gets started at his work, if he ever does any.

The readers of these columns will recall the case of Rosa King, the poor girl who was taken out of the Feeble Minded Home by one of the trustees, who refused to return her when she pleaded to go back, and how she finally in despair committed suicide. They will remember that no investigation of the matter was ever held by the trustees of the Home, and that one of them, the Reverend Mr. Baine, charged the Attorney General's office with having delayed to inform the Board if it could get the girl back by habeas corpus a charge which the Attorney-General absolutely denied and showed that the unfortunate girl was the victim of the neglect of the Board of Managers to perform their duty. It appears, however, that the King girl and another who was taken out by the same trustee are not the only girls that have been taken out of the Home by persons who had no legal right to do so. Annie Kallaway, a Honolulu maiden, is another case to which I respectfully call the attention of the Board of Trustees of the Home for the Feeble Minded, and especially of its two clerical members—the Reverend Mr. Lyons and the Reverend Mr. Baine. This girl had been removed some time ago by an employee of the Kip orphanage. Her utter unfitness for outside life is known to Mr. Holbrook formerly of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and Sister Julia, who is well known to the charitable persons in this city as the manager of an Episcopalian Magdalen Home. I presume also that Dr. Osborne and his wife, the former Superintendent of the Home, and Dr. Lawler, can give some information about the girl, since, if I am correctly informed, they both refused to allow the girl to leave the institution. Do the trustees know where she is now or what has happened to her since she left, or who authorized her to be taken out? If they do not, they should inquire at once.

Unless all rumors are untrue, there is another scandal worse than any charged against Dr. Lawler that needs their investigation. Why should not the Governor himself give some time to this matter? Is it not his interest and duty as Chief Executive of this State to look after the welfare of the wards of the State, and he can easily ascertain the details of the case from the persons named above even if the daily papers do not publish them before this article appears in print.

If the Board of Trustees of the Home will not act, the Governor can remove them and should remove them. Their terms have expired, and he is the principal person to blame if proper trustees are not now managing the institution. We believe the Governor is too humane a man, and loves his own children too much not to protect the unfortunate children indirectly confided to his care. This is more important than finding out why a Sacramento plumber did not know the difference between sewer gas and bats.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

In my search for automobile news I dropped in to see President Hyde of the Automobile Club of California, and asked him how the club was prospering. His remarks were as follows:

"As to membership we are doing very well, indeed, as we now have over 180 on our rolls, and it will soon be 200. We are, however, somewhat particular whom we receive, and it is not every applicant who is successful. While we are not a social club, we ought not to have any in our ranks with whom we cannot associate on terms of equality. The main purpose of our club organization is to promote the cause of automobiling and to protect ourselves against hostile legislation, but incidentally we can enjoy a club run, or a dinner, now and then.

"There are not many, even in the club, who realize what a powerful agency for the protection of automobilists this club has been. When the new machines were first introduced, there was a universal prejudice against them, and the first impulse of the public was to demand legislation against their use on the country roads. Transportation companies were afraid of them, and even the country hotels discouraged them. Against these discouragements our club has made a battle. We have employed attorneys to defend our rights before Supervisors and in courts, and many an enemy of automobiling has been turned into a friend by a little judicious attention at the proper time. A person traveling on the county roads can maintain a comfortable rate of speed because this club has been vigilant and made his fight against four miles an hour when such legislation was threatened. He can travel in our city streets at 8 and 12 miles an hour, can ride through Golden Gate Park and travel on the ferry lines mainly because there has been a strong club organization to look after his interests.

"Ten men organized as a club and working in the name of the club can do more effective work than a hundred men can, working singly. I have seen the Legislature led to a radical departure in legislation in a certain case at the demand of a so-called 'club,' which was formed in the interest of one person, and numbered, all told, not more than four.

"Any person who owns an automobile or is in any way interested in the sport, ought to belong to the Club. The dollar a month is the smallest consideration. It is numbers that gives influence, and we will need powerful influence during the next few years to protect our rights and accomplish the objects of our organization. We ought to have a State automobile law, but it would be folly to attempt it until we can feel sure that we would not fare worse than we do now.

"It is a sad fact, but it is true, that our worst enemies are among the automobilists themselves. It is the conduct of a few that makes trouble for the majority, and the influence of the club is more powerful than the law to prevent the reckless speeding and handling of automobiles.

"I want to see 250 members in our club within the near future. They are here, and if the present members will exert themselves, we can have the desired number."

We have just received our first car load of the 1904 model KNOX (waterless) Touring Cars, both single and double cylinder types which are now on view at our show rooms where we would be pleased to receive you and demonstrate their superior qualities and simplicity.

The KNOX (waterless) GASOLINE AUTOMOBILES are known the world over for their simplicity, easy operation, durability and easy riding. We are always glad to demonstrate the above to any one.

THE NATIONAL AUTOMOBILE & MANUFACTURING CO.

134-146 GOLDEN GATE AVENUE. SAN FRANCISCO.

The Mobile Carriage Company, automobile house and garage, having a frontage of 137:6 feet on Golden Gate Avenue, 120 feet on Gough and Jefferson Park, and 137:6 feet on Elm avenue.

This is considered one of the largest and finest exclusive automobile houses in America. Great care has been taken and much expense incurred to secure model construction in every way. The salesroom occupies a space of 45 feet on Gough street and 90 feet on Golden Gate avenue. Posts are placed in the dividing line between the salesroom and the garage, and the whole roof is trussed on these posts. This arrangement gives the garage space an L shape of 50x137:6 feet and 50x90 feet without a post or obstruction of any kind. The building is being constructed of glass so far as possible, using only posts and columns on the outside sufficient to support the roof and windows. The color of the exterior is to be of pure white. The offices are to be surrounded by brass railings and the posts dividing the sales department from the garage are to be connected by artistic chains. The ladies' and gentlemen's parlors and waiting rooms are to be provided with the most artistic equipment and furniture.

The building will be completed and occupied between February 15th and March 15th. The directors are as follows: J. A. Marsh, president; H. C. Tilden, Livingston Jenks, C. K. Harley and C. L. Tilden.

Mr. H. E. Skinner has severed his connection with the H. E. Skinner Company. The company will disincorporate and start under a new name, while Mr. Skinner, with his two sons, intend opening up a new establishment under the firm name of H. E. Skinner & Sons. The new firm will carry all makes and latest models of fire arms, sporting goods, etc. Mr. Skinner has been identified in this city for many years in the sporting goods line, and is well-known throughout the Pacific Coast, being one of the most popular men in this line of business in the city. During the past 30 years Mr. Skinner has made many friends among sportsmen, always ready and willing as he is to give them pointers as to the different qualities of ammunition and fishing tackle, used in different sections of the State for various species of game and fish.

Many of his friends have not heard of the change which has taken place, and will be informed through these columns in the near future as to location of his new establishment. It is safe to say that Mr. Skinner is one of the best posted men in the country on game laws and the different materials used for hunting and fishing in the various lakes and hunting reserves, and has always been ready to impart information valuable to the sportsman.

An interesting exhibit at the automobile show in Paris was the Renard trackless train, consisting of a number of passenger vehicles drawn by a 60 horsepower tractor. The tractor is not exhibited, but the method by which the rear wheels of the cars are mechanically driven is shown. An overshaft, universally jointed wherever necessary, runs the entire length of the train, and communicates the drive to under-inclined and universally-jointed propeller shafts on each vehicle. The drive is through spur gearing contained in a gear box set in the frame of each car.

Latest type of Freak automobile construction.

The Renard Automobile Train

The Flexbi

Another machine exhibited at the Paris show was the Flexbi. This car has four steering wheels carried on spindles set at the ends of a cambered frame rocking centrally on the fixed driving axle of the car. The steering spindles are connected to an articulated steering gear, so that when the wheels are deflected each takes the angle necessary to the curve desired. The longitudinal rocking of each side member permits of any wheel passing over obstacles without lifting the car. The steering center of the wheels are in the hub centers.

Ormond-Daytona Beach, Florida, has the reputation as the fastest speed course for autos in America.

Nestman, in a Stevens-Duryea, clipped off a mile in 57 1-5 seconds, making a new world's record for cars of 1,000 pounds and under. He also drove this machine five miles in 4:57 3-5.

Charles Schmidt, on the Packard Gray Wolf, covered the mile in 50 2-5 seconds, and five miles in 4:21 3-5.

Schmidt also covered a mile on this course (wind blowing) in 46 2-5 seconds, or two fractions from the world's record on a straight-away track, same being held in France.

The times developed at the meet were the fastest yet made in America, and it is expected that before the Florida tournament is over the world's records from one to five miles will be held in this country.

ALL SAINTS NIGHT.

By Clara A. Matson Dolson in Good Housekeeping

It was the night, the very one,
O saints, that I forgot;
Back to me came my little son,
And woe! I knew him not.

How could I dream the small feet bare
Were those that, snowy shod,
We shut from out the light and air
To find their way to God?

The candles that I gave to light
That darksome road for him,
He did not bring with him last night,
And my left eyes were dim.

I shut the door against the child
I would have died to kiss;
What if those feet, by earth defiled,
Their backward way should miss?

If any child again might come,
Though he in tatters dressed,
I'd take him in my empty home
And rock him on my breast.

A SOUTHERN TWILIGHT.

By Clinton Scollard in Smart Set

A little shallow silver urn,
High in the East the new moon hung;
Amid the palms a fountain fung
Its snowy floss, and there, above,
With its impassioned unconcern,
A hidden bird discoursed of love.

I felt your hand upon my arm
Flutter as doth a thrush's wing,
Then tighten. Sweet, how small a thing
Draws kindred spirits heart to heart!
More was that hour's elusive charm
To us than eloquence or art.

THE TRUANT.

By Charlotte Becker in the Smart Set
O moonbeam, tell me, have you seen,
Upon your ghostly way,
Perchance, a little flower o' dream,
That I lost yesterday?

"Aye, I have seen your treasure, child,
And safe from harm it lies.
I met young Love within the wood,
Your dream-flower in his eyes!"

A SONG.

By Louise Mack in Pearson's
My heart is empty, empty,
Swept clear of love and pain.
I'll hie me to the lilac,
I'll woo the rose again.
I'll wander in the starlight,
And lie among the leaves,
And dream to the night-raindrops
That beat about the eaves.

My heart is empty, empty,
Swept clear of love, and you,
Who stole me from my lilacs,
Stole stars and lilies, too.
You stilled the sighing forests,
You broke the wind's control,
And I forgot the sunsets
When you were in my soul.

My heart is empty, empty,
It holds no more of you.
Oh, enter, winds and sunsets,
Starlight and rose and dew.
Ah, faithful ones, forgiving,
You bend to me once more,
Though you have guessed the secret
That hides in my heart's core.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Fire Underwriters' Association of the Pacific is now history. It was called to order Tuesday, the 12th inst., at 10 a. m., and concluded its business affairs on Wednesday, the 13th, at 5 p. m. The following was the programme:

10:00 a. m. Tuesday—1. Reports: Secretary-Treasurer, Calvert Meade; Executive Committee, W. H. Gibbons; Library Committee, Arthur Brown. 2. President's address: Whitney Palache. 3. Our Library: J. P. Moore. 4. Petroleum and its Relation to Fire Underwriting: Albert W. Gunnison.

2:00 p. m. Tuesday—5. Is the Rate Adequate: Herbert Folger; 6. Manufacturers' Cost of Replacement: William Maris; 7. Adventures of a Daily Report: R. C. Medcraft.

10:00 a. m. Wednesday—8. Safeguards in the Use of Statistics: Professor Carl C. Plehn; 9. The Theatre Hazard: W. S. Duval; 10. The Fire Hazard of Electricity: Prof. C. L. Cory.

2:00 p. m. Wednesday—11. (a) University Work in Insurance, (b) Co-Insurance Clause: A. W. Whitney; 12. The Fire Hazard of San Francisco: H. McD. Spencer; 13. Reports of Special Committees; 14. California Knapsack: George F. Grant, Edward Niles; 15. Election of Officers.

The papers read were of more than ordinary merit. Herbert Folger was thoroughly in touch with his subject. Medcraft's Adventures of a Daily Report was a thoroughly interesting contribution, and the papers of Mr. Duval and Mr. McD. Spencer both evidenced that an enormous amount of study and care had been expended in preparation. The Knapsack, as usual, was full of good things, and Messrs. G. F. Grant and Edward Niles as editors are justly entitled to all the encomiums passed on the result of their efforts.

The principal officers elected to serve for the ensuing year were: Mr. J. L. Fuller, president; Mr. A. W. Thornton, vice-president; and Mr. Calvert Meade was re-elected secretary. Mr. Palache, the retiring president, becomes in the usual order of things the Chairman of the Executive Committee. Grant and Niles retain their editorship and business management of the Knapsack. The attendance of the members was large and their attention in proportion.

The smouldering fires of conflict were successfully banked by a thin coating of the ashes of policy, and only in one or two instances did it threaten to leap into flames. The Association departed from its custom, which it has been understood for years should pertain, in not electing any officer to any position in the direct line of promotion unless he resided in San Francisco. This time it took Mr. Thornton from the Northwest and made him vice-president, with an alacrity that bespoke a programme. This verifies the intimation given in a previous edition that the Northwestern Specials were here and prepared to vote; and their vote and their numbers resulted in Mr. Thornton's advancement. It is a wise selection, and was caused by a desire on the part of the association for amity. The Northwest Golden Gate and the Cerebus of the Northwest's

The course of this paper was criticised in the meeting, and that vigorously by one of the most respected members of the Association, who is as positive in his nature as he is forceful in his remarks. The correctness, however, of the remarks objected to was corroborated by the before-mentioned election of Mr. Thornton, and the further fact that it caused the Association to get out of the old rut and called forth the liveliest speech of the session.

* * *

The more sober business of the meeting was capped by the regulation banquet at the Maple Room of the Palace. The dinner committee in the discharge of its duties, covered itself with glory and filled some of the guests with indigestion. There was a friendly spirit (other than that in the bottles) around the board, and as the glasses clinked, one could feel rates higher, losses lower, and business improving. The remarks, the jokes, and the guests were all in perfect good taste, even if some of the latter were not dressed for the occasion. It was a love feast, with the sad experiences cut out.

* * *

Mr. Palache made an ideal toast-master, and kept the gathering full of life in a manner which compels the acknowledgment of his ability as a presiding officer.

* * *

The Indiana Appellate Court, says an exchange, has declared that the Northwestern Insurance Company must pay three checks, each for $10,000, to Mrs. Kate Kidder, and one which the company stopped payment when the creditors of the milling company, of which her husband had been president, made a claim to the insurance money on the ground that the premiums had been paid with the money of the milling company. The court held that as the company had issued checks and taken up the policies it was stopped from refusing payment because the issuance of checks was an independent transaction. This is republished because it is a point which is novel and is worthy of note by the profession.

* * *

C. A. Mills has left the Union Central.

* * *

Thomas H. Bowles, at one time general agent of the Mutual Life in Wisconsin, and who tried to burglarize himself into a position with that company, in an official capacity, is reported to be now State agent for the Equitable for Michigan.

* * *

The directors of the Royal Exchange Assurance Company declared an interim dividend of 4 per cent, tax free, payable on January 6th.

* * *

The insurance press states that another effort has been made by outside parties to secure a controlling interest in the Hanover. The company's stockholders received letters from one F. E. Baker, who signed himself "Syndicate Agent." It has been hinted that Theodore H. Price, who at one time tried to secure a controlling interest in the company, is behind Baker in the present move. There seems to be little chance that the outsiders will win.

OBITUARY.

John A. Muir, one of the best-known railroad men of this Coast, passed away at Los Angeles on the 8th. Muir held standing, in the opinion of the railroad world, only second to H. E. Huntington. He began his railroad career as a telegraph operator at Rocklin, now famous as the cradle of many celebrated railroad men. He made rapid strides in his chosen profession, finally succeeding to the position of Division Superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company. This he held until 1902. Upon the accession of Mr. Hays he severed his connection and became associated with Mr. H. E. Huntington's Los Angeles Railway System. He leaves a widow and six sons.

When Samuel Cutler Bigelow, a well-known banker of San Francisco, died the other day (January 7th) one of the old school of financiers was lost to the world. Mr. Bigelow had reached the ripe old age of 80 years. He still looked forward to longer life, and a pathetic incident in his taking off was that he had just finished a fine new mansion which he did not live to enjoy.

In their 1904 calendar just received, N. W. Ayer & Son have adhered to their popular conception of a business calendar, but have changed the design and coloring. The size is the same, about fourteen by twenty-eight inches, with large readable dates, but the clay modeled design printed in sepia tints gives more prominence to their well-known motto, "Keeping Everlastingly at it Brings Success"; not a bad thing, by the way, for business people, and most other people, to have before them throughout the year. It is generally conceded that this advertising agency annually expends more money for advertising than any other concern of the kind, which fact lends interest to their utterances on the subject. Requests for this calendar addressed to their Philadelphia office, accompanied by twenty-five cents to cover cost and postage, will be taken care of for the present. Last year the supply lasted barely ten days.

2:00 p. m. Tuesday—5. Is the Rate Adequate: Herbert Folger; 6. Manufacturers' Cost of Replacement: William Maris; 7. Adventures of a Daily Report: R. C. Medcraft.

10:00 a. m. Wednesday—8. Safeguards in the Use of Statistics: Professor Carl C. Plehn; 9. The Theatre Hazard: W. S. Duval; 10. The Fire Hazard of Electricity: Prof. C. L. Cory.

2:00 p. m. Wednesday—11. (a) University Work in Insurance, (b) Co-Insurance Clause: A. W. Whitney; 12. The Fire Hazard of San Francisco: H. McD. Spencer; 13. Reports of Special Committees; 14. California Knapsack: George F. Grant, Edward Niles; 15. Election of Officers.

The papers read were of more than ordinary merit. Herbert Folger was thoroughly in touch with his subject. Medcraft's Adventures of a Daily Report was a thoroughly interesting contribution, and the papers of Mr. Duval and Mr. McD. Spencer both evidenced that an enormous amount of study and care had been expended in preparation. The Knapsack, as usual, was full of good things, and Messrs. G. F. Grant and Edward Niles as editors are justly entitled to all the encomiums passed on the result of their efforts.

The principal officers elected to serve for the ensuing year were: Mr. J. L. Fuller, president; Mr. A. W. Thornton, vice-president; and Mr. Calvert Meade was re-elected secretary. Mr. Palache, the retiring president, becomes in the usual order of things the Chairman of the Executive Committee. Grant and Niles retain their editorship and business management of the Knapsack. The attendance of the members was large and their attention in proportion.

The smouldering fires of conflict were successfully banked by a thin coating of the ashes of policy, and only in one or two instances did it threaten to leap into flames. The Association departed from its custom, which it has been understood for years should pertain, in not electing any officer to any position in the direct line of promotion unless he resided in San Francisco. This time it took Mr. Thornton from the Northwest and made him vice-president, with an alacrity that bespoke a programme. This verifies the intimation given in a previous edition that the Northwestern Specials were here and prepared to vote; and their vote and their numbers resulted in Mr. Thornton's advancement. It is a wise selection, and was caused by a desire on the part of the whole association for amity. The Northwest secured its recognition, and Mr. Meade his re-election by this sop to the Cerebus of the Northwest's new organization.

The course of this paper was criticised in the meeting, and that vigorously by one of the most respected members of the Association, who is as positive in his nature as he is forceful in his remarks. The correctness, however, of the remarks objected to was corroborated by the before-mentioned election of Mr. Thornton, and the further fact that it caused the Association to get out of the old rut and called forth the liveliest speech of the session.

The more sober business of the meeting was capped by the regulation banquet at the Maple Room of the Palace. The dinner committee in the discharge of its duties, covered itself with glory and filled some of the guests with indigestion. There was a friendly spirit (other than that in the bottles) around the board, and as the glasses clinked, one could feel rates higher, losses lower, and business improving. The remarks, the jokes, and the guests were all in perfect good taste, even if some of the latter were not dressed for the occasion. It was a love feast, with the sad experiences cut out.

Mr. Palache made an ideal toast-master, and kept the gathering full of life in a manner which compels the acknowledgment of his ability as a presiding officer.

The Indiana Appellate Court, says an exchange, has declared that the Northwestern Insurance Company must pay three checks, each for $10,000, to Mrs. Kate Kidder, and one which the company stopped payment when the creditors of the milling company, of which her husband had been president, made a claim to the insurance money on the ground that the premiums had been paid with the money of the milling company. The court held that as the company had issued checks and taken up the policies it was stopped from refusing payment because the issuance of checks was an independent transaction. This is republished because it is a point which is novel and is worthy of note by the profession.

The insurance press states that another effort has been made by outside parties to secure a controlling interest in the Hanover. The company's stockholders received letters from one F. E. Baker, who signed himself "Syndicate Agent." It has been hinted that Theodore H. Price, who at one time tried to secure a controlling interest in the company, is behind Baker in the present move. There seems to be little chance that the outsiders will win.

OBITUARY.

John A. Muir, one of the best-known railroad men of this Coast, passed away at Los Angeles on the 8th. Muir held standing, in the opinion of the railroad world, only second to H. E. Huntington. He began his railroad career as a telegraph operator at Rocklin, now famous as the cradle of many celebrated railroad men. He made rapid strides in his chosen profession, finally succeeding to the position of Division Superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company. This he held until 1902. Upon the accession of Mr. Hays he severed his connection and became associated with Mr. H. E. Huntington's Los Angeles Railway System. He leaves a widow and six sons.

When Samuel Cutler Bigelow, a well-known banker of San Francisco, died the other day (January 7th) one of the old school of financiers was lost to the world. Mr. Bigelow had reached the ripe old age of 80 years. He still looked forward to longer life, and a pathetic incident in his taking off was that he had just finished a fine new mansion which he did not live to enjoy.

In their 1904 calendar just received, N. W. Ayer & Son have adhered to their popular conception of a business calendar, but have changed the design and coloring. The size is the same, about fourteen by twenty-eight inches, with large readable dates, but the clay modeled design printed in sepia tints gives more prominence to their well-known motto, "Keeping Everlastingly at it Brings Success"; not a bad thing, by the way, for business people, and most other people, to have before them throughout the year. It is generally conceded that this advertising agency annually expends more money for advertising than any other concern of the kind, which fact lends interest to their utterances on the subject. Requests for this calendar addressed to their Philadelphia office, accompanied by twenty-five cents to cover cost and postage, will be taken care of for the present. Last year the supply lasted barely ten days.

The Greater Love

They had been school chums, and unlike most girl friends, their regard for each other had outgrown their short frocks. Hetty Lester was the daring spirit of the two. Tall, dark-skinned, black-eyed—like Susan in the play—with hair bluey-black as a raven's, she looked like a Spaniard, and was known to all the pupils at Chilcote High School as "the Gipsy." She was the leader in mischief and the mouthpiece in complaint. Whenever an expedition was planned or a difficulty had to be faced, Gipsy was always in demand. Most of the girls feared Gipsy, but all of them liked her; she, on the other hand, held their likes and dislikes in cool indifference. When she accepted the role of leader—which was pretty generally whenever a leader was required—her orders were issued without the slightest reference to their wishes, and they had to obey them, or Gipsy, with a grin of her gleaming teeth, left them to shift for themselves.

Out of the whole school she formed but one attachment, and this was more like the passive acceptance of a blind, dog-like worship than a warm-blooded return of the attachment which pretty Alice Marchant bestowed on her. Alice was a contrast to Gipsy in every way. She was as decidedly blonde as Gipsy was brunette, and she was as timid, trustful and yielding as Gipsy was strong, self-willed and self-reliant.

The affection which Alice bestowed on Gipsy was a source of wonderment to the other girls, who would have thought it much more natural had she been repelled by Gipsy's brusque and wayward manner. But friendship of a strong and lasting character is most frequently found between those of contrasting dispositions, and this well-known fact must be held as accounting for the fast and firm friendship which had sprung up between them.

Gipsy's relatives were much better off than those of Alice, and after the school days were over her time was mainly devoted to holiday making. She remembered her little friend with sufficient interest to write her lengthy accounts of her continental wanderings and her many holiday jaunts. They were sources of the greatest delight to Alice during the period while her parents were anxiously debating the question of her future; for Alice's father was but a poor country parson, and it was necessary that she should choose a profession.

The choice was at length made, and Alice opened a "Translations, Correspondence and Typewriting Bureau" in Leicester street. It was a decision arrived at in accordance with her own wishes, and when she was fairly installed as proprietress of the two rooms which constituted the bureau, she pluckily set herself to work up a clientele. In this endeavor she was loyally assisted by all her old school chums who had connections in London, for they recommended the new venture to their acquaintances, and by this means helped "Gipsy's friend," as she was generally called, to a promising start.

Gipsy wrote to the bureau several lengthy letters in the few months following its starting, and then there was silence. A silence for nearly a twelve-month, during which Alice prayed for her wayward friend, and wondered what she was doing. And then one day a stranger called at the bureau and asked to see Miss Marchant. Alice had succeeded so well by this time that she employed two lady clerks, and did not see callers herself unless by appointment.

"The lady said her business was personal, Miss, and she has sent in this message." The clerk handed a scrap of paper as she spoke. Alice looked at the paper. On it was scrawled in pencil:

"Gipsy."

A moment later her quondam friend was shown in, and Alice impetuously rushed into her arms. It was the old dog-like, blind devotion, the old unthinking gladness at her presence. It was the same ecstasy a faithful dog might show at the return of a loved master. And then, when the first greetings were over, Gipsy had a terrible story to tell, which sent her poor little friend into a shiver of apprehension and dread.

"I have no one to rely on, Alie, but you," she said, when her story was told. "It is no use advising now, for it's all done and over, and it's no use blaming either, for, God help me! I should have to do it, if the past year had to be lived all over again. I wanted to make a sacrifice for his sake to prove how passionately I loved him."

There was a moment's silence.

"Where is it?" asked Alice, in a terrified, husky whisper.

"At my rooms."

"And you want me to keep it?"

"I can think of nothing else, Alie, and I can think of no one but you to help me. My people have no idea of what has happened. You know what they are, and I simply dread to think what exposure would mean."

"Oh, Gipsy, Gipsy, how sorry I am. I could blame you very much, but that I pity you, my poor Gipsy, so much more. But he——"

"He loves me, Alie. We are simply injured by fate. If he could he would marry me. If I could only marry him, heavens! how happy I should be. You will help me, Alie?"

"Yes, Gipsy, I will."

* * * * *

Business grew apace at Alice's bureau, and then came the great story of her life.

He was a lawyer with a growing business, and he made her acquaintance by a chance visit to the bureau when he brought some documents to be copied. The work was rather particular, and he saw Miss Marchant about it. Conversation drifted from the work in hand to topics in general, and Alice chanced to mention Chilcote High School.

"My sister was at school there," said he.

"Your sister!" exclaimed Alice; and then, remembering his name, "Not Gipsy, surely?"

But it was Gipsy. The fact led to a closer acquaintance, the acquaintance to intimacy, and intimacy to love; and then the demon "Rumor" interposed his poisonous head.

"God knows, Alice," said he, "I love you as I do my life, but I love my honor even more. I have written to my mother about you, but I have only written what my love for you dictated. Why cannot you see yourself the anguish this is causing me, and come to my rescue by telling me everything?"

"Show me the letter," she said, stonily.

It was an anonymous letter, the poignard of the civilized assassin. It read:

"Has Miss Marchant confessed to you that she has a child nearly two years of age? Is she a widow? Who is its father? Ask her."

She looked at the cowardly epistle a moment; then at him.

"Gerard," she said, "it is true that I am rearing a child, but its history is a secret, and I cannot tell it even to you, nor even to save myself. But I swear to you that it is not my child, and that I have not sinned as you suppose in act or thought."

"But you must tell me the truth."

"I cannot."

"Even though it parts us forever?"

"Even though it parts us forever."

"So be it."

A month passed—a month of such anguish and suffering as Alice never thought the human heart could endure, and she had to face all the terrible years to come without a hope or consolation, save in the thought that she had spared her friend, and saved her lover the humiliation of learning his sister's shame. And then one morning she had a visitor; a dear, white-haired old lady, in whose sweet features the traces of recent suffering appeared to be ineffaceable.

"I am Gerard's mother," said she, "and I have come to ask you to forgive him. Hetty—Gipsy you call her—could not bear to see you and him suffer for her sin, and she has confessed the truth to us. How noble of you to suffer so much for a friend! God has taken one daughter from me, but He has given me another. I, his mother, beg you to forgive my son."

"And you will forgive Gipsy, too. Ah, yes, you will; together we will read the stories of sin and forgiveness in the old Book, and learn something from them. Perhaps we shall learn there the lesson of mercy, which is greater than all the wisdom of the world."—London Free Lance.

SHE READ MY PALM.

She read my palm, and from her eyes
I would have sworn that she was wise.

"Fear not," said she, "though long you drop,
Some day you'll shine way at the top."

For weary years I toiled away;
I worked by night, I strove by day.

Yet fame and wealth seemed just as far Ahead of me as any star.

All else I bore, nor thought to grieve,
Until my hair began to leave.

Oh! then I wept and cursed the day
That palmist maid had crossed my way.

When at the glass I chanced to stop—
Behold! I shone upon the top.

Bookkeeper—That new messenger spends all his time reading such books as "The Boy Bandit," The Proprietor—I can see his finish. The Bookkeeper—Where. The Proprietor—On Wall street.

Nurse—You'd better not go out of the house after dark again, Johnny. The bears might get you. Broker's Son—Huh! I ain't afraid of 'em. My pa says it's the bulls what are making the trouble now.

"How did your nephew's wedding pass off?" "Just splendid." "Were there any contretemps?" "I don't think so. I didn't see any. You see, we had the church thoroughly cleaned up just before the wedding took place."

Ernie—No, she isn't going to marry Claude, after all. Ida—But they say he can quote Emerson and Browning. Ernie—Yes, but the other man can quote sugar and steel.

"They say that Henry was awfully frightened when he reached the altar." "I don't wonder. Did you see the way the bride had her hair dressed?"

Cumso—Well, young Frisbie will make his way in the medical profession. Cawker—Has he got a good start? Cumso—I should say he had. He was such a prime favorite in the college that they made him surgeon to the football team.

All social items, announcements, advertising or other matter intended for publication in the current number of the NEWS LETTER should be sent to this office not later than 5 p. m. Thursday previous to day of issue.

"Citizen" Train has pulled out for the other shore.

The book trade notes a falling off in the Japanese demand for bear stories.

Friction among the directors is making things warm in the National Ice Trust.

With the Boers colonizing Montana, there will be even better times for Oom Clark.

It's a lucky town that has managed to escape a Carnegie library and a Hearst newspaper.

If you think it true that "the soft answer turneth away wrath," just ask the telephone girl.

In this tough season for actor people everybody in the "perfish" is walking—except the ghost.

Hetty Green's rent is $19 a month. The luxurious tastes of the very rich may well alarm the socialogists.

"High finance" in the gas monopoly has caused it to fill its stock with hot air and its pipes with cold poison.

William J. Bryan is crouching right next the Hearst barrel, gripping firmly a brand-new bung-starter.

Governor Vardaman, of Mississippi, says the negro's curse is education. We thought it was the color of his hide.

"Flinch" is the latest ladies' game at the East. We hear that it is not played with a hat pin, and leaves no black-and-blue marks.

There is no ground for alarm in the report that the eyeglass trust has advanced prices—the announcement is entirely speculative.

When he faces more than four of his fellowmen, Hearst is tongue-tied and his knees knock with fright. He proposes to let his money do the talking.

Professor Gayley of Berkeley, sometimes called "Gayley, the Troubadour," has slapped co-education on its pretty wrist, barring out women from some of his lectures. Having read some exemplars of the Gayley English, we congratulate the ladies in the case.

Duke, the tobacco magnate wears a celluloid collar—probably for the same reason that he puts chopped straw into some of his brands of cigarettes.

A boycotted restaurant man has been arrested for kicking a camera out of the hands of a pestiferous union picket. He should be fined for not kicking the picket.

An anxious mother wants the Oakland police to find her son whom she describes as "very polite and red-headed." Come to think of it, that is an unusual combination.

It is not surprising to learn that a woman figures largely in the Mountain Copper litigation. There's always a woman in it—even at the bottom of a copper mine.

Mayor Schmitz's choice for the head of the City and County Hospital may not wipe out the evils, but his presence will tend to subdue the newspaper critics. He is an unreformed prizefighter.

"Elijah" Dowie came to town in a palatial private car, sought the seclusion of the best rooms of the Palace and ate a lunch that cost $7.50 a plate while "those devils" of reporters cooled their heels outside. Now we understand why the press loves Dowie so.

That sad wag, Colonel J. "Ham" Lewis, greeted Perry Heath merrily at Washington the other day with "Hello! You rascal." The postoffice and the telegraph companies refuse to let us know Heath's reply.

A linguist with a Teutonic name is suing millionaire Charles T. Yerkes for $300 for translating a Persian prayer woven into a $150,000 rug. He had to stand on his head to earn the money, and now he must get down on his knees to collect it.

That West Virginian professor of literature who killed himself because a newspaper criticised his writings harshly, did not know when the gods were being good to him. Many an author pays for all the "roasts" he gets.

A fly-by-night sheet of New York, devoted to socialism and labor unionism, describes "Big Bill" Devery as "a calm, cool, collected, firm, dignified, courteous, frank, bright, intelligent a sturdy and earnestly patriotic American." Devery can't talk much, but evidently his money can.

The regeneration of wicked New York goes forward a-whooping. Now come the "Daughters of the Faith," including women of the best families, who will not stand for low gowns, divorcees, bridge whist, or any of the joyous beverages. And they do say, too, that the Tammany tiger is as meek as a reformed tom-cat!

THE WATER-FRONT SCANDAL.

Governor Pardee will do well to give his early attention to the scandals that are ripening in the State Board of Harbor Commissioners. Politically the Governor is responsible for this Board's management of the city's waterfront. Personally, as well as politically, he is responsible for Commissioner Spear, now President of the Board. Governor Pardee appointed Spear, and he has tolerated "Johnnie" Mackenzie, whose appointment was one of the worst things charged up against the Gage administration. Both of them are professional and practical politicians. Both seem to be working the waterfront for all it is worth, and if there is anything in the way of "graft" that they do not know about, it is a thing with no prospect of profit in it.

The News Letter has already called attention to President Spear's proposition to take away the ferry news-stand privilege from a firm which has held it for nearly twenty-five years and give it to his brother-in-law, John F. Rooney, whose best job heretofore has been a clerkship in a wholesale grocery store. Spear suffered a set-back when the tenants offered $1180 a month for the concession against $600 bid by brother-in-law Rooney. He refused to permit the introduction of a resolution of acceptance, crying out that the bid was "absurd"—that nobody could afford to pay such a sum. At last week's meeting Spear put in and then accepted Rooney's bid of $1200 a month, blocking a higher bid from the tenants by notifying them that there could be no auction of the privilege. It is plain that though there really is a brother-in-law Rooney, he is only the figurehead for Spear and Mackenzie.

Another dirty piece of business begins to show itself with regard to the public scales on the waterfront. Nominally the holder of this privilege is one Lortzen, better known in crooked politics as the "Banjo-eyed Kid." He is not big enough to hide the figures of the "business men" of the Board—Spear and Mackenzie.

Yet another putrid spot in the Harbor Board's affairs is in the handling of the "privileges" granted to fruit hucksters, whose wagons were driven off the down-town streets by the Board of Public Works. How much they pay for being allowed to do business on the State's property and to whom they pay it are matters upon which the Governor might enlighten himself and the public.

Beyond these things is the fact that the Harbor Board's payroll is stuffed with useless employees—men who would not know how to work if they wanted to, men who know nothing about the waterfront except where the secretary's office is, and that only because it is the place where they get their pay for doing nothing. It is significant that a number of the men who draw fat salaries for little or no work are Democrats, kept in their places by the sinister influences that have made the Harbor Commission a refuge for active and broken-down job-hunters. Perhaps the most flagrant case of all is that of Percy Henderson, for whom was created the snug berth of "Auditor" at $200 a month. The grim humor of this appears when it is understood that after the alleged stuffed salary roll is paid, after supplies that are not needed—and, as claimed by some, often not delivered—are bought at a stiff percentage above the highest market price, after the favored contractors have had their rake-off, there is so little left for permanent improvements that they can be had only by discounting the Board's revenues. Moreover, if there were any real auditing to do, no sane person would select a man like Henderson to do it. The intimation is strong along the front that Henderson's activities are confined to keeping shippers and shipmasters and holders of privileges from overlooking the fact that the "business men" of the Board must live somehow.

When Spear, Mackenzie, et al., are questioned about these things on behalf of the public, they reply, "What are you going to do about it?"

Now, speaking for the people of the State, the News Letter asks Governor Pardee: "What are YOU going to do about it?"

BEMIRED RESPECTABILITY.

It is time somebody told to the California Club ladies who are going to run the Bulletin for a day, to their husbands and to the public, a few unpleasant truths. This "woman's edition" scheme is quite in keeping with the policy of the most depraved of newspapers. It is a bad-faith bargain by which, in exchange for a cloak of respectability to hide its naked vileness, the Bulletin promises out of its ill-got revenues a small sum toward building the ladies a clubhouse. The victims of this piece of trickery might with equal propriety, take charge for a day of almost any uptown bar-room on a similar guarantee. There are few drinking places that do not stand higher, in point of morals, than the Bulletin; there are few saloon-keepers who are not of better repute than the Bulletin's owners. We can understand how a group of respectable women might be imposed upon in this fashion, because, happily, such women know little about the baser things of the city's life. But what are their husbands, fathers and brothers thinking of that they permit their women-kind to be deluded into such a contaminating alliance, even for one day?

Harlotry is too polite a term for the Bulletin's business. In politics, in public and private affairs, where there is a corrupt dollar to be had, it is now on the one side, now on the other—it has not even the decency to stay bought. The merchant who refuses to advertise in it knows what measure of abuse and obloquy to expect; the candidate for nomination, election or appointment who will not pay its price is sure of it rancorous hostility; its unclean and itching hands are laid upon every citizen who has a lawsuit to prosecute or defend, whose business or private life has been touched by scandal or misfortune.

It is a matter of common knowledge that no sporting event of consequence comes off here, no prize-fight is conducted, without either substantial payment to the Bulletin or endurance of its malignant attacks.

Besides payment in cash, there is only one way for people of standing to get even fair treatment from the Bulletin, and that is by personal association with and consequent social advancement of its managers. Most people who are forced to this alternative prefer to pay the money. Bad as the Bulletin is, according to the not too exalted standard of newspaper morals, it is no worse than the men who make its policies. They are of the kind who, for money or for social advantage, rejoice over the wanton assailing of law-abiding citizens and fulsomely bepraise the cowardly wielders of pistol and "black jack"; they are of the class who make heroes of adulterers and martyrs of women caught at their scarlet sinning. And it is into an office which houses a policy like this, which is infested by men like these, that a company of respectable women is to go!

One man, husband of a lady prominently mentioned in connection with the "woman's edition" scheme, is reported to have withheld his permission until it was promised that her portrait would not be published with those of the others trapped by the Bulletin's bunco game. This was a mere compromise with conscience. A braver, wiser man would have refused altogether, inasmuch as no woman who respects herself or wishes others to respect her, can afford to have anything to do with the disreputable Bulletin or the disreputables who run it.

NO HEREAFTER FOR THE SINNER.

A reverend gentleman of this city, Dr. John Phillips, addressing his brethren of the cloth at the Congregational Association, announces that there is no future place of punishment for the wicked. Their souls, if indeed they have souls, are simply extinguished, blotted out, annihilated. Obviously this is a comfortable belief for the sinner, but it does not appear commercially sound, or part of the platform, shall we call it, of the church. If the wicked are permitted to believe that there is no hereafter for them the inducement to hire a pew becomes slender and not persuasive.

Twenty years ago his brethren would have tried the reverend gentleman for heresy, and would have almost torn him limb from limb in the name of God. To-day they smile with tolerant patronage of an amiable weakness which cannot do any harm and may amuse an idle moment. Why this change? Simply because the churches no longer base their appeal on the nameless terror of the Great Perhaps. They have become clubs and places of entertainment.

"Our guess doll netted us over $400. No one guessed the name and I still have the doll," said the Reverend Mr. Scaddleberry.

"It must have had an odd name. What was it?"

"I didn't name it at all," returned the reverend gentleman, with a face that beamed with pious regard for its owner's clever business sense.

With such harmless diversions do the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers amuse themselves. There is just as good money in guess dolls as in preaching hell-fire.

FUNCTIONS OF THE MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION IN POLITICS.

The people of San Francisco have been given in the current month an inside view of the methods of building a political machine. They have seen the political ring at work without the smallest disguise and in direct violation of law, creating that machinery by which they hope in the future to manipulate and control the primaries that will constitute the delegates to the party conventions. The clean sweep of minor officials made by the Board of Health in direct contravention of the charter was candidly described under oath by the President of that body as simply "a turn of the political wheel." It did not appear to Dr. Ward, so far as his testimony showed, that he considered it a matter of much importance that the charter in letter and spirit positively prohibits the use of municipal offices as wheels in the political machine. In fact, Dr. Ward testified that he had not concerned himself about the charter provisions in this regard at all.

As we have said, there is no disguise about the methods in use other than the petty and transparent subterfuge of abolishing certain offices classified by the civil service rule, and re-creating the same offices under other names, for which no classification has yet been provided by the Civil Service Commission. The only possible conclusion from this action is that the Board of Health had a guilty knowledge that they were breaking the law, and sought to screen themselves behind a quibble on names.

We rejoice to see that the Merchants' Association, acting through its President, Frank G. Symmes, has taken advanced ground in this matter. The Association is fully aware that the spirit of civil service rules and the merit system has not been honestly observed in the past, but the body has waited in a conservative and temperate manner until some definite example of lawbreaking was afforded—one that could be proved beyond question in a court of law. That example is given by the Board of Health in making a clean sweep of civil service employees with the single purpose of creating a political machine.

Directly and indirectly there are something like 2,000 workers dependent on the Board of Public Works. The Board of Health controls some 300 active political partisans. These form the nucleus of the machine. With these and the police and fire departments under general control, it can be seen how formidable may become the organization that is now being built.

It is this kind of politics which the charter was expressly framed to prohibit and prevent, and that is the sense in which the Merchants' Association has acted.

AN OFFICIAL CENSOR OF MORALS.

Mayor Olney of Oakland has directed his policemen to raze out from the billboards of that charming city the written "damn." He will not even permit the half-hearted d——n which is a sort of whisper in print. It appears that the Oakland billboards are for the moment emblazoned, or shall we say painted red with a high-toned picture showing a scene from the forthcoming performance of the "Fatal Wedding" at one of the local theatres. Under this picture was inscribed the words of the heroic policeman who appears as the protagonist of the scene, and he is saying: "I am damned if I will arrest that man." It was a noble sentiment, but the official censor of morals could not stand for it all. To satisfy the Mayor's nice sense of propriety, strips of white paper were pasted over the wretched policeman's profanity, and Mrs. Grundy, who votes in Oakland, is appeased. It must have been some man like Olney who edited American history and made it look foolish in the case of Ethan Allen and the surrender of Ticonderoga. The amended version says that when the English Governor demanded of Allen: "In whose name?" the American commander replied in the stilted and ornamental phrase so appropriate on the battlefield: "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." What Allen really said was: "Come out of there, you damned old rat." That is convincing. The other is absurd. But Mayor Olney may take consolation with Bishop Taylor, who said when he was reproached for his violent treatment of plain English: "My verb has lost its nominative, but I'm bound for the Kingdom of Heaven just the same." Mr. Olney's nominative has lost its verb, but his calling and election is assured.

BARTERING THE PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION.

"Seeking the Presidency with cheek and check book" is the way a Democratic statesman is quoted as hitting off William R. Hearst's impudent pretensions to this high office. That Hearst has actually named the price he will pay for the Democratic nomination is the conclusion of one of the ablest and fairest observers of national affairs. This critic states the figure at $2,000,000—nominally his contribution to the Democratic campaign fund in case of his nomination, really his bid for the privilege of leading the party which he has done and is doing his utmost to destroy. Sometime in 1900, it is reckoned, Hearst's Presidential campaign was conceived—about the time he discovered his middle name and began to blazon it in his own newspapers and in such others as would sell him space. And $2,000,000 is only part of the price Hearst would pay. Already he must have spent a sum running into at least six figures in organizing "clubs," buying endorsements, and erecting and maintaining an immense bureau.

Incidentally Hearst has been trying hard to live down the odium that came to him for his share in the Buffalo crime. The hand of the disciple, Czolgosz, struck the blow that made McKinley a martyr, but the hand of the prophet, Hearst, still drips with the blood of the murdered President. Since then his ensanguined talons have been carefully gloved. He has touched men and things with rare delicacy. His papers have breathed unctuous good will to all men. He has stopped preaching the gospel of deringer and dynamite. He has paraphrased Roosevelt's epigrammatic advise so that it reads: "Speak softly and carry a big purse."

Hearst has the money. He has been so successful in buying the brains and bodies of men and women and all else that his caprice fancied that he has come to believe that there is nothing that is not for sale—not even the honor of the nation. He seems to have had assurances that his $2,000,000 will buy whatever honor the leaders of the Democracy own. That may be so. It took some diplomacy to keep the convention from going to Chicago, which Hearst had selected as the place for the delivery of the goods. When St. Louis was named, Hearst shrieked in his papers: "Aha! They were afraid of me!" He will send his millions and his mercenaries to St. Louis the White House. All his money will not be enough Democracy. If the convention name Hearst then and there will be an end of a party that has stood always against all that Hearstism signifies; if it shall tell him to go home and devote himself to the joys of his numerous firesides, Democracy will once more symbolize the national aspirations of a vast body of intelligence and patriotic Americanism. The virtue of Democracy will be the issue at St. Louis.

Hearst may be able to buy the nomination, and then begin his march at the head of his rabble of purchasable labor leaders, bridge-burners, bomb-throwers and boycotters. But he cannot buy his way into the White House. All his money will not be enough to purchase national forgetfulness that he is still the Hearst of the Sausalito orgies, the Hearst who for all these years has given his days to public and his nights to private debauchery, busy polluting the spirit of the press and the morals of the people when he has not been cuddling amorously with such as the "Sassafras Sisters." He cannot gild himself so thickly as to hide the leprous immorality of his life as man and boy. No amount of gold will make an eagle of this vulture.

AN EXAMPLE OF LABOR UNION METHODS.

The evidence produced in the United States Circuit Court in support of the petition for an injunction to restrain the striking miners at Hodson, Calaveras County, from committing acts of violence against men in the employ of the Royal Consolidated Company, offers a striking example of union methods. The testimony produced shows that a reign of terror exists at Hodson, the creation of the miners' union, and there is so little concealment about this condition that the affidavits filed on behalf of the strikers show but little respect for the court. It is in evidence that Charles Wilson, a teamster, was forcibly taken from the barn of the company by 25 of the strikers, who led him to a pond and there ducked him by way, presumably, of "peaceful argument," to convince him that it was not healthy to work for a boycotted employer. In reply to this testimony the strikers have filed an affidavit deposing that Wilson went voluntarily with his captors and adding that "thereupon one of the affiant's companions suggested to Wilson that inasmuch as he had opposed his fellow-workingmen, he, Wilson, could show his sincerity better by washing himself clean of all past acts by walking into an adjoining pond of water, which Wilson thereupon did, without any force or threat made toward him whatsoever."

Comment is unnecessary on this sort of evidence.

ON DANGEROUS GROUND.

It seems to the impartial observer that the Senate of the United States is venturing on dangerous ground in the case of Reed Smoot, the Senator from Utah. The action of the body is obviously inspired by a loud popular clamor, which, on examination, does not appear to be intelligent. It is not alleged in any part of the indictment that Smoot has committed a crime. It is proposed to make him an outlaw on moral grounds because he is believed to hold opinions favorable to polygamy. It is not clear how those opinions are to be brought home to Smoot and if it should prove that he is guilty in this regard it is scarcely in accord with American ideas that a man should be punished for the opinions he holds. In fact, if Senators are to be excluded from their seats on purely moral grounds, it may be feared that the exclusion act might cover many besides Smoot. The Senate has involved itself in the old-fashioned confusion between sin and crime, which has caused thousands to be burned at the stake because of their heretical opinions. But it seems rather late in the day to go back to that.

Retrospect on William the Witless

Editor News Letter—According to the revelations of a lady-in-waiting at the German Court, a Mme. von Eppinghoven, those that dubbed the present Emperor of Germany "William the Witless," were not very wide of the mark. He is described as a man who is almost afraid of his shadow, a man haunted by the fears of hereditary disease and cursed with the sores of ancestry. The Hohenzollern blood shows its Divine origin in many ways. "They that the Gods love they first make mad." There is a Divine running ear and a Divine shriveled arm, a Divine temper which swears at the "help" and damns all republics. This divinity calls himself "the anointed of God" and the German Empire the "ally of God."

In one of his prolonged flights in the realms of the daffy it seems that William conceived the brilliant idea of forcible and armed interference in Cuba, in behalf of Spain, just prior to the late unpleasantness between the United States and the Dons. This was prevented by the cool-headedness of the Chancellor of the empire. The revelations of Mme. von Eppinghoven throw a new light on the movements of Admiral Von Diederichs of Manila fame. It can easily be conceived where the Admiral obtained the courage to insult so repeatedly the Americans in general and Admiral Dewey in particular. "Like master like dog!" A Chancellor's well-timed interference, it would seem, saved us the trouble and expense of administering a lesson to the Teutonic race, for it was well known in Austria and in Germany that the Kaiser did look with disfavor on our policy in Cuba and the Philippines.

It will be remembered that an Austrian corvette arrived in the harbor of Manila at a time when relations between Dewey and Von Diederichs were just a little strained. The corvette was a training ship, and instead of stopping to secure anchorage from the ranking Admiral (Dewey) it passed on up the bay until it had attained a position opposite the only Austrian war vessel in the harbor, and there proceeded to anchorage.

In a few minutes an officer from the Olympia presented the compliments of the Admiral, and this was the message which brought the corvette back to salute the Olympia and the American flag:

"Was it intentionally that the usual salute was omitted or was it through ignorance of custom?"

No explanation was expected, and the only possible apology was made. The corvette received her instructions as to anchorage from the American naval commander, and it was "damn the republic" from the Kaiserin Augusta down, and the Austrians and the Germans drowned their sorrows in Teutonic beer.

Mme. Von Eppinghoven's stories are classified as lies and as lese majeste. There are many, no doubt, that have doubted the truth of the statements made by those that have returned from Manila. There are but few who are willing to believe that the German Admiral placed his best gunners at the disposal of Jaudenez, and that the guns at Malate were placed in position by German officers. There are but few willing to believe that the German Admiral landed a whole ship-load of flour, on the pretense of helping his starving countrymen, and then sold the flour through a Swiss firm to the Spaniards at the rate of twenty-seven dollars a sack.

Further than this, there are but few who would be willing to believe that when an American, a Mr. Brown, agent of a Milwaukee beer firm, having obtained leave (through Mr. Wildman, then Consul-General at Hong-Kong) to travel on the Kaiserin Augusta from Hong-Kong to Manila, he was subject to all sort of indignity, and told that he must remain in the limit of his cabin, as the United States and Germany were on the verge of war.

There are few of us, if the records were not in existence, that would give credence to the story that Von Diederichs despatched the Kaiserin Augusta to Hong-Kong, after the fall of Manila, against the express wish of the American Admiral and contrary to all the rules of international courtesy. And this was why Berlin had the news before it reached Washington.

There are some people who will deny all these things, but there are thousands of men who will remember them, and these are the men who took Manila and the men who marched to Peking.

There are but few, even in the army, who have access to the "dossiers" of the Intelligence Department. It is in these confidential reports that our relations with a country that has no love for us, and that is ruled by an Emperor who has a mania for devouring republics when he is not busily engaged in throwing a fit or making some compact for the amusement of himself and God, are to be found. Hoch der Kaiser! —Bec-de-Fer.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Events in the Far East the past week have given birth to peace rumors that seem, at first glance, to be founded in fact, but since all of them come from St. Petersburg or other Russian sources, there is a suspicion in military and diplomatic circles that the Russian Government is merely presenting another side of her accustomed perfidy and hypocrisy. The signing of a treaty of commerce with the United States and England by China was a severe jolt to Russia's plans, for the treaty recognizes China's and not Russia's ownership and jurisdiction of and over Manchuria. For months Russia had fought against the signing of this convention, and the belief was pretty general that China would yield to the St. Petersburg pressure. But in that Russia received a greater defeat and a more severe diplomatic shock to her ultimate purpose than the sinking of a whole squadron of her battle-ships would have inflicted, for the compact openly and positively binds England and America to China's cause in Manchuria. Naturally, Russia would scheme for more time, and she is doing it under the guise of a "peace sentiment" proclaimed from the throne, but all that is contradicted by the rushing of troops to the disputed ground, and the "rush" orders for commissary stores from the United States and other countries to Port Arthur for inland distribution. The Japanese Government is placing little or no faith in Russia's peace promises, and is rushing preparations for an armed conflict, which all nations admit is inevitable, unless Russia backs down and relinquishes her hold upon Manchuria. That is the situation at this writing. Certainly Russia's new diplomatic play is likely to postpone an overt act on her part until Viceroy Alexieff's demand for 300,000 troops and more than 100 warships is complied with, which the Russian war and naval departments are hurrying to do. But will Japan be inclined to wait for the arrival of Russia's re-inforcements? That is the one great question of the hour.

A Mexican high in official and social life is anxious about his country because of Yankee aggressiveness. He reasons that at the present rate of absorption of the agricultural, commercial, industrial, mining and transportation agencies of the nation by Americans, together with the steady increase in marriages between Americans and Mexicans, the time will come when Mexico will be so thoroughly Americanized that it will become a part and parcel of the United States as naturally as it is natural for an apple to fall to the ground when ripe. Well, our Mexican friend reasons logically, but because Mexican Texas became an American State with more than 3,000,000 in half a century, it does not follow that the same results are likely to obtain in old Mexico at the same or one-tenth that ratio of "Americanization," as he calls it. Still, should such results as he fears ever obtain, Mexico would be the gainer. There is no doubt about that.

Some time ago the powers ordered the Sublime Porte to pour a lot of the oil of peace upon the wild human billows in Macedonia, Bulgaria and the other troubled waters in the Near East, but the troubled human waters refuse to be quieted. They want war—bushwacking war—and they announce that they have no notion of letting up on the Turk until he relinquishes all authority over them. But, as a matter of fact, the relinquishment of Turkish authority is exactly what they do not want. They are essentially a people who love the life of the free-booter, the highway robber, and the all-round criminal, and Turkish rule is the excuse for keeping up bands of wandering robbers. No, the life and the salvation of most of the inhabitants of that region is Turkish rule and Turkish brutality. It is their stock in trade in their "national independence" business. Law, order and honest avocation do not appeal to them. This every missionary who has preached to those people knows well; so do the powers, and that is why the powers do not interfere. It is dog fighting dog, and in time both dogs will be killed by their own teeth.

The creditor nations of Colombia have recognized the Republic of Panama because the United States has agreed that Panama shall pay her pro rata of Colombia's national debt, and also settle with individual creditors. The $10,000,000 which Panama gets for canal concessions are not, however, to be diverted from the pocket-books of the patriot revolutionists. Money for debts abroad will be raised by taxation. Boiled down, it simply means that the United States agreed to become collector for foreign creditors of Panama, and in part of Colombia, in consideration of recognition by foreign nations of the independence of the Republic of Panama, and give her a small horn to toot in the concert of the powers.

Fully, if not more than half of the Jews in the world are Russian subjects, and like the Armenian subjects of the Sublime Porte, they are the bankers and the force behind the great commercial enterprises. They, as well as the Armenians, are the business brains of their country, and it is jealousy of their thrift and business sense that is at the bottom of their persecution, and not because they are Jews or Armenians, but that is the excuse. It so happens, too, that when the Czar or the Sublime Porte wants to float a loan, the Jew or the Armenian is the first one to be invited to finance the scheme. Ingratitude is the basest feature of the human heart, and Russia and Turkey have more of it than all the other nations together.

The Transvaal country is enjoying a degree of prosperity and internal tranquility that is not only surprising but exceedingly satisfying to the Boers. In fact, the Boers now fully realize that British administration of their national concerns means national protection, national as well as individual prosperity, and the development of the country's vast resources with the Boers themselves the chief beneficiaries. Unlike our treatment of the Filipinos, the Boers were given prompt protection from land sharks and wandering "promoters," and every proper encouragement was given to them to build up their country upon a solid basis for their own good and advantage. The consequence is that practically the entire Boer population is glad that events brought them to the high level of identity with Great Britain's mighty family of colonies.

A CONDITION OF ANARCHY.

Readers of the daily press of San Francisco do not get any idea of the conditions of anarchy and flat rebellion that prevail in Cripple Creek, Telluride and other Colorado towns, whose population is chiefly made up of members of the Western Federation of Miners. We do not get the facts from a cowardly press, because the newspapers, so-called, fear to give those facts lest they themselves should undergo the terrorism exerted by organized labor everywhere, terrorism that is the chief and almost the only method in use by the unions to compass their ends.

Some of these facts, however, are given in a statement issued by the Colorado Mine Owners Association and printed in the Congressional Record of January 13th as part of the proceedings of the Senate on a resolution calling for an investigation of industrial conditions in Colorado. These facts are sufficiently striking and even astonishing, as to call for notice. The conditions in the mines for a period of ten years are summed up in the following paragraph:

"No parallel can be found for it in the labor history of the world unless it be in the Molly Maguire organization, which maintained a reign of terror in the Pennsylvania coal fields prior to 1877. During times of comparative peace the career of this organization has been marked by nocturnal assaults and secret assassinations, while now and again they have broken out into open warfare amounting to insurrection. Whenever a mine owner has assumed to stand against their aggressions or to employ as laborers men not members of this organization, his life and his property have been forfeit. Criminal, cruel, untiring, militant, political parties have obeyed their behest, honorable judges have been retired to private life for decisions to them obnoxious, courts have yielded to their dictates, and sheriffs and other peace officers, often selected from their own number, have been their willing agents. When an executive has been found big enough and brave enough and patriotic enough to rise above political expediency and take a firm stand in favor of law and order and the preservation of those rights guaranteed by the Constitution, as did Governor Steunenberg, in Idaho in 1899, and as Governor Peabody is doing in Colorado to-day, protests such as that embodied in the resolution under consideration have gone up from certain quarters, either inspired by sympathy with the acts and purposes of this organization or with the hope of obtaining some political advantages through them, or, as we trust is the case with the present resolution, by ignorance of the facts which have engendered the condition."

By way of further specifications in support of these general charges, the statement goes on to tell how in 1901 during the strike at the Smuggler-Union mine in Telluride, an armed body of union men attacked the mine and killed and wounded several persons, taking forcible possession of the property. Manager Collins of the mine was shot in the back and killed as he sat at his library table with some friends.

This cowardly assassination does not by any means stand alone. On November 21, 1903, while Charles McCormick, superintendent, and Melvin Beck, shift boss, of the Vindicator mine were going into the sixth level, an infernal machine was exploded, by which both men were killed.

If space permitted, these specifications of crime could be extended at considerable length, but for the present these will suffice by way of indication of the alleged law-abiding and peaceful methods of organized labor.

The Story of a Soldier's Life. Lord Wolseley tells the story of his early military career from 1853 to the conclusion of the Ashantee campaign in 1873. It is to be hoped that in time he will write of the more recent events and of his connection with the Boer war. In writing of the Crimea—that endless succession of blunders—Lord Wolseley asks: "What about that civil government of ours which sent an army to the Crimea without any means of carrying either food or wounded men? If the curses of brave men affect the future life of those who have injured them, many members of the cabinet that sent us to the Crimea must now have uncomfortable quarters somewhere." Neither does he spare the Generals and their aides who, in the battle of Inkerman, showed their incompetency: "I was shown the graves of many gallant leaders who had fallen at Inkerman, the battle where we were surprised and our army only saved from destruction by the timely arrival of French troops to help us. Good heavens! What Generals then had charge of England's only army, and of her honor and fighting reputation! They were served to a large extent by incompetent staff officers as useless as themselves! Almost all our officers at that time were uneducated as soldiers, and many of those placed upon the staff of the army at the beginning of the war absolutely unfit for positions they had secured through family or political interest. There were, of course, a few brilliant exceptions, but they made the incompetence of the many all the more remarkable."

The work is full of entertaining personalia, and while not a great military biography, is a straightforward view of a soldier, vigorous and ingenuous; the language is dignified and the narrative is stamped with patriotic fervor and the enthusiasm of military glory.

"The Story of a Soldier's Life" (Scribner's), by Field Marshal Viscount Wolseley.

The Sailor King. This is not a tale of the sea, but a moving panorama of the courtiers, poets, writers, players, women famous for beauty or talent, beaux, wits and club gossips of Great Britain in the time when William the Fourth was king.

One chapter deals with the theatre—Macready, Fanny Kemble, Edmund Kean—and the first production of "The Hunchback." Another tells of the struggle in the House of Lords before the passage of the "Reform Bill," that saved the country from the revolutionary wave of '48. Although much of the material in these volumes is familiar to the general reader, and the lack of an index is a serious defect, there is not a dull page in the work.

"The Sailor King: William the Fourth: His Court and his Subjects." By Fitzgerald Molloy. 2 vols. Dodd, Mead & Company, New York.

Those that admire the great Russian writer, Tolstoy, will no doubt welcome "Esarhaddon." This is, in a measure a parable of the Kichinef atrocities. It is also, by means of a published correspondence, a record of personal opinion by the sage of Yasnaya Polyana. Needless to say, the opinion, as expressed in this compilation, does not agree with the published reports of the Russian Government.

Funk & Wagnalls, New York. Price, 40 cents.

The Macmillan Company announces in a late bulletin these books: "London in the Time of the Stuarts," by Sir Walter Besant, $10.50 net. This volume is uniform with "London in the Eighteenth Century." Fully illustrated from contemporary prints and portraits, and containing a map. Macmillan's Pocket American and English Classics. Poems by Edgar Allan Poe, edited and annotated by Charles W. Kent, 25 cents net. The Yellow Plush Correspondence James's Diary. The Great Hoggarty Diamond, etc., by William Makepeace Thackeray, with illustrations by the author and John Leach. $1.00.

There is another volume (this by Blanche M. Burbank) published by A. M. Robertson. It is called "Reed Notes," and is full of ambitious verse. Some of it, indeed, most of it, is good. Witness ye:

September in a warring mood

Has hung a signal in a wood—

A maple branch as red as blood.

Earth's grief, like Rachel's, soon will sound

Through naked boughs, a wail profound

For her dead children in the ground.

A. M. Robertson, San Francisco. 75 cents.

"The Testimony of the Suns and Other Poems" is a bit of recent verse by George Sterling. It is a voice singing in the desert. What a pleasure it must be to an overweighted mind, the mind of a busy business man, to find solace in song. Mr. Sterling is good at versification, and if he finds one-half the pleasure in phrasing and meter the reviewer finds in reading his verse, he can safely count that he has attained his end. He plays upon a lute of silver without a rift.

W. E. Wood, Publisher. Price, $1.25.

A book that should be tabooed and kept from children is "The Rover Boys on Land and Sea." It is one of the Rover Boy's Series, and if this is a sample of Mr. Winfield's work, as a writer for young people, the quicker the reviewer reads him out of business the better. The tale is an impossible one, loosely put together, and will give boys a wrong impression of life. It is poorly printed on poorer paper, and is no credit to the publisher's discrimination or workmanship.

The Mershon Co., Rahway, N. J. Price, 60 cents.

"Proverbs of the People," by Lorenzo Sosso, is at hand, and the reviewer is disarmed at the outset by the preface of the author, in which he lays no claim of originality. Marshall Douglass is the designer of the ornamental pages, and A. M. Robertson is the publisher. It is a bundle of aphorisms and proverbs charmingly modernized, and the book is a bibelot that will ornament any study table.

The News Letter is in receipt of "Municipal Reports 1901-1902," from Charles W. Fay, Clerk of the Board of Supervisors. This report is exhaustive in detail, and is of inestimable value to any one interested in the city's welfare. The binding of this volume is a piece of art work, and reflects great credit on the municipality.

A rub at the Post St. Hammam will do you good.

Dear Bessie: How on earth all the dances are to be enjoyed, as they deserve to be, next week is something of a problem, for there will be one every night, and then there are a lot of other affairs, such as luncheons and teas, to fill in the hours of the afternoon. Would you believe it is six years since the "Borel ball," which some people talk about as though it were the only one which had ever taken place in this little village? Well, it was a pleasant affair, and the reason why it has not since been duplicated is that the family spent two years in Europe soon after, and since then have been in mourning. But now there is another one on the tapis, this time to be given in the new ballroom at the Palace, and of course all who are asked are delighted, and will be on hand, you may be sure. But let me begin at the beginning and tell you a little of what is on the bills for next week.

Frances Harris, whose engagement to Mt. Stunt is considered an assured fact, though not yet formally announced, gives a tea on Tuesday, and in the evening the Barry Colemans give a dance in Century Hall for Lucy, and Christine Pomeroy. On Wednesday night there is the Borel ball at the Palace. Mrs. John Simpson will give her first large entertainment this season on Thursday, and instead of a tea as usual, it is to be a euchre party, and a large one; and in the evening takes place the ball which Mrs. Homer King is to give in honor of Miss Herrick. On Friday night comes the Assembly dance, and on Saturday the two weddings. Don't you think we shall be tired by Sunday?

I managed three of the teas last Saturday. At Gertrude Palmer's, which was given for Polly Macfarlane, Hattie Currier announced her engagement to Walter Hale, and was of course the center of a congratulating throng all afternoon. From there I went to the Livermores, which was a telephone gathering and extremely pleasant. Then Betty, Mollie and I finished up at Mabel Craft Deering's, where we had a jolly time, and shall I tell you why? She had a lot of men to help in receiving and doing the agreeable to the women, and you should have seen some of those dear fellows how they did lay themselves out and seemed delighted to do it, too. And now mark my words, her example will be followed, and hereafter men, when they can be got, will be a feature of the receiving parties at teas, and how much more pleasant it will be for all concerned.

We have all been kept pretty busy this week with functions, both large and small, and "at homes" nearly every day in the week, which take up much of one's time to do. Theatre parties have also been quite the vogue during Mrs. Langtry's engagement, and I have had to refuse becoming an item in several from sheer inability. Did you ever know such dear people as the Huntingtons? They do so love to entertain, and they do it so delightfully. This week they had a lovely dinner dance on Monday night for Helen Bailey—a dozen to dinner and about fifty more for the dance afterwards. There is to be another in two weeks, when Margaret Newhall will be the honored one.

Then on Tuesday there was Mrs. Lent's luncheon for Gertrude Smith. Julie de Laveaga Welch made her initial bow as a hostess on Wednesday, when she gave a tea at the Welches; it was quite a large affair. Mrs. Ritchie Dunn gave a luncheon at the University Club for Polly Macfarlane, and Mrs. Foote was also a luncheon hostess on Wednesday, and in the evening the Gaiety Club had their dance at Christine Pomeroy's. The card party given by Maud Mullins Clarke on Thursday was for Polly Macfarlane, and yesterday Belle Smith had a tea. I was asked to join a party to go to Del Monte last night for the ball which the officers of the 15th Infantry gave there in honor of their Colonel, and Mrs. Warde, but had to decline, and oh, was I not sorry! But I had promised to go to the Friday Fort-nightly. To-day Constance de Young has her coming out tea, and for to-morrow Mrs. Jack Casserley is to treat her friends to a musical tea, something a little out of the common run of such affairs, and no doubt it will be enjoyable. There has only been one wedding this week, that of Caroline Rixford and Covington Johnson, and it was a very quiet home affair, on Monday afternoon, only relatives and connections being among the guests, but those of Mr. Johnston were quite numerous, including all the Pringles, Campbells, Averys, Mrs. Meezes, etc. Bishop Nichols officiated, and the bride, who was robed in white satin, had her cousin, Katherine Rixford, for her sole attendant; Covington Pringle was his uncle's best man. But next week there are to be two, and both on Saturday—Bernie Drown's at St. Luke's and Jacqueline Moore's in Oakland, and as luckily the hours do not conflict, I shall be able to do them both. Jacqueline is to be married at the Church of the Advent at three o'clock; it will be a lavender wedding, with a whole string of attendant maids—eight in all. Bernie's is to be at noon, and I hear the church decorations are to be something exceedingly fine, but the home reception will be very limited in size. What a stunning bride she will make! She is so popular, and has such hosts of friends, I hear that the presents are so numerous they completely fill a large room.

Mrs. Eleonor Martin has been doing the honors for Mrs. Peter in what she calls a quiet way, but you know what her quiet way means. Her telephone tea last Friday had all the elements of a more formal affair, and the coming dinner will be a fine one. I understand Mrs. Peter has been favorably impressed, and thinks life here for awhile may not be so bad after all—but not for a continuance; oh, dear, no!

Among other dinners of the near future is the one which Mrs. George Boardman gives next Monday night for her son, Sam, Bernie and the whole of their bridal party. By the way, I wonder if Frank Winn will arrive in time for it? You know he is coming down to be Sam's best man, and Sophie told me at the Woods' tea last Tuesday, which was a very pleasant one, that there were to be a whole lot of them before the dances next week. Apropos of dances, the Chesebroughs are to have one on the third of February; the last of the Greenway dances comes off on the twelfth, and is, I hear, to be even better than either of its predecessors, if that can possibly be. Mrs. Joe Grant, who is spending the winter at the Palace, gives a big dinner that night, so that all her guests, of whom yours truly expects to be one, will have to do will be to walk from the dining room into the ball room. Won't that be grand? Mrs. Tim Hopkins is also to have a big dinner early in February.

Alice tells me that Mrs. Horace Hill, who gave a luncheon party last week—her first appearance as a hostess since her return from her long visit East—intends to have a dinner dance ere the season ends, which is pleasant news to hear. Mrs. Coolidge, who gave so many pleasant parties at the Presidio, and later at her home on Van Ness Avenue, last year, has again entered the field with a card party given last Monday afternoon, when the popular bride was played.

There have not been many arrivals or departures of late to note; Miss Jennie Flood has gone East on one of her periodical trips over the road; and Eleonor Davenport is back from her rambles in Oriental countries, and will have so much to tell of all she saw and enjoyed, of which she gave a faint taste in her letters, I am impatiently waiting for time to get to see her.

—Elsie.

Automobile parties are very numerous at Del Monte, enjoying the beautiful, oiled roads. A few of those present last week were; L. F. Douglass and party, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Holton and Mrs. Harry P. Miller, San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Chase, San Francisco; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Moore, San Francisco. Special trains with tourists from the East have commenced to arrive. One very fine party reached Del Monte last week, consisting of Commodore and Mrs. E. T. Gerry, Mr. Peter G. Gerry, Miss Gerry, Newport, R. I.; Dr. Robert C. James, New York City.

List of arrivals this week at Hotel Rafael: A. Feist, W. N. Drown, A. McBean, W. A. Sexton, Mrs. F. D. Madison, Mrs. John Partridge, W. Detring, J. E. Tomin, A. F. Chamont, A. Cavalari, E. J. McLaughlin, J. J. Garland, H. H. Rosseau, Harold Bolle, M. Welcker and wife.

and unstinted in its denunciation. It is always the exception that proves the rule. The public has long ago acknowledged the sterling merit of United States District Attorney Woodworth, but it remained for the Solicitor General of the Treasury Department to give this praise in official form. In his report for the fiscal year ending June, 1903, it is found that Minnesota heads the list for the year, the United States District Attorney's office having collected $34,000 in fines, forfeitures and penalties in cases wherein the United States was plaintiff. The Northern District of California, Mr. Woodworth's office, stands second, with $29,000 collected. During the fiscal year 1901-1902 Mr. Woodworth collected $70,000. The Seventh District of New York comes third, with $28,000.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, the volume of business in Mr. Woodworth's office—that is, the number of cases disposed of—trebled, notwithstanding that the collections fell below those of 1901-1902.

Johnny and Emma Ray, popular entertainers, will begin a limited engagement at the Orpheum this coming week. They promise something entirely new and are assured of a rousing welcome: Cordua and Maul, who give a most wonderful exhibition of hand balancing on the double wire; Duffy, Sawtelle and Duffy will appear here for the first time in a comedy sketch entitled "Papa's Sweetheart"; Oliver T. Holden, lyric tenor, formerly with the Castle Square Opera Company, and Miss Winifred Florence, soprano, who is a niece of the late W. J. Florence, will present a romantic comedy operatic sketch, "The Fairy of Killarney."

In next week's offering, "The Masqueraders," at the Alcazar, Henry Arthur Jones has contributed a vital and virile drama of the emotions even more convincing than his "Dancing Girl," "Judah" and "The Middleman." He has torn the mask from fashionable English society and revealed the people of his story all very real and human, in the nakedness of their natural impulses and passions.

What promises to be the most brilliant of the series of professional matinee performances yet given by the students of the Paul Gerson School of Acting, will take place at the California Theatre Friday afternoon, February 12th. Among the many novelties to be offered will be the first performance in the West of the third act from Ibsen's "The Doll's House," and which will serve to introduce the gifted young California actress, Miss Mabel Duffey in the part of Nora. "The Jade," a one-act comedy by Ada Lee Bascom, will have its first presentation in this country. This little playlet made a genuine success in London, where it was played all of last season. "The Mouse Trap," a one-act comedy by William Dean Howell, is another offering; also the first presentation in the West of a scene from Lord Lytton's beautiful play, "The Rightful Heir." A fantasy in one act by Ada Lee Bascom, entitled "Bacchante," will have its first performance in this country, and will prove a decided novelty. Owing to the length of the programme, the curtain will rise promptly at two o'clock.

There is joy in the camp of the automobilists, and among those who drive good horseflesh. This joyful feeling has been brought about by the opening of a new hotel, The Anona, at 2910 San Bruno Avenue. The opening occurred on the evening of December 19th, and was attended by many lovers of good cheer. Among those present at mine host Gillet's board were: Colonel A. H. Crane, Harry Patrick, C. S. Lahanier, R. D. Kennedy, Harry Corbett, A. L. Schubert, M. A. Miller, E. K. Earl, D. L. O'Brien, Major J. Bean, A. L. Crane, Fred Purdy, W. G. Long, George Shaw, C. W. Muller. There was speech making an address by the Honorable Harry Mulcrevy and a good supper and dancing. Dr. Milo J. Gillete deserves all the success promised the house.

The news that the conduct of the United States Marines at Seoul is unsatisfactory will not come as any surprise to those who have observed the deterioration in the conduct of all arms of the service in San Francisco. I am a friend of the United States Army and Navy, but as such am obliged to state that the condition of the streets leading to the Presidio from the city is disgraceful in the early hours of the morning. It is no excuse to say that garrison towns are always so, for they are not. Soldiers may be expected to get drunk, but not to go straggling over the streets after midnight. Their resorts are well known, and a corporal's guard to gather them in before midnight would confer a favor not only on the citizens but the soldiers themselves. Much more might be said on this subject, but it will be taken up later.

The eternal feminine must be plotting some new mischief. These constant collisions with burglars are getting to be monotonous, and, as the professors would say, are rising to the importance of social phenomena. Two school-teachers find a burglar in their room and let him go—happy burglar. An attorney's wife catches a burglar in the house and swats him—happy attorney, for he gets an ad. Free? I don't know, but I have my doubts. A singer, engagements perhaps slack, whacks a highwayman with her umbrella in classic Berkeley—again an ad. and her picture. All this happens in one week. When we seek for the common factor in these cases by eliminating the variables, we find, we blush as we find, advertisement. Can this be it?

In Oakland they are troubling their heads about the disposal of the city garbage. I fancied that that question had long been settled, and that most of the Oakland garbage found its way into the Oakland restaurants. Such an aggregation of poison-shops were never collected under the term restaurant. Ambrose Bierce used to say that one could never get anything decent to eat in the town, and things have not improved since his time. There are an everlasting number of people in Oakland who are keen to look after the souls of its people. Won't some one pay some attention to a less dignified but very necessary part of the ordinary human?

A certain Robert Goldman of Oakland has been acting as Governor of Bockloc in the Philippines. He went out to the islands intending to farm, but has returned dissatisfied. Quite right, Mr. Goldman. The only thing worth farming in the Philippines is the revenue, and that can be done better here:

Our island possessions it's useless to roam—
For real paying graft, there is no place like home.

Mrs. Martha E. Bowers, who is charged with murdering her husband, has either too great a sense of humor or too little. She testifies: "My husband and I were like two big kids. I always loved him. He was always a sickly man, suffering from liver and kidney troubles. He had bad night sweats." This is just the sort of man that a young woman could love. The amount of affection producible by means of liver and kidney troubles, not to speak of night sweats, should be of a quality which the muse of Swinburne would toil painfully to describe.

The Stanford students do not like good music. Only about two dozen of them turned up to a classical concert and the long-haired are wailing. Of course the vast majority of healthy, husky young animals which constitute the student body of the University do not care for the classical concert. It would be the merest humbug on their part to pretend that they did. If we subtract from the ordinary concert audience the fashionable, the pretentious and the merely imitative, we shall find that the Stanford two dozen were after all a pretty good average, and there is nothing really to complain about. Who would exchange a healthy kid for a Grosvenor Gallery esthete?

Professor Gayley is holding separate classes for men, but declares that he is not opposed to co-education, whereupon the wise spinster remarks:

Too much you protest, doctor dear,
'Tis all prevarication.

No boys! It surely must appear
There's no co-education.

Trades unionism has still further terrors in store for us. According to an affidavit presented by Judge Maguire in the Circuit Court a non-union man voluntarily gave himself a bath in a pond to purge himself of the sin of non-unionism, and as a pledge of future good behavior. If all the trades unionists turn Baptists, the prospect will be appalling. The walking delegate as a minister of grace would be the crowning touch of American humor. There is one thing, however, to be said in favor of the innovation—it will necessitate an occasional bath.

"Easy come, easy go," must be the idea of Mrs. Gardner Howell, who has howelled herself into notoriety because her husband stayed away one night. Now everybody knows, and the lady must be immensely pleased with herself. But her husband? Four days' courtship was all the work he had to do. Now he must recognize the truth of the proverb which the Germans sum up so tersely in the expression "billig und schlecht."

I wonder what is getting into the youngsters. The pilfering at the Berkeley High School has grown to such an extent that strong measures have to be taken to put it down. I have already called attention to the same feature in the State University, and our political life shows the same tendency. The Forty Thieves are here all right, but where is Ali Baba with his boiling oil? An imprisonment or two might straighten matters out.

Professor George Lemuel Ayres will go down in California history as a pedagogue who could not stand punishment. His wife, a Santa Rosa society girl, practiced physical culture upon his corpus vile, and used a spoon with such effect that she cut his scalp. This latter action would serve to show that it was scientific curiosity rather than vindictiveness which impelled her. She was looking for the professor's brains.

The Actors' National Protective Union has resorted to egg-throwing as a re-inforcement of the genial boycott. The ready employment of this particular missile shows at once the sort of offering best known to the trades union actors. They have all been recipients of the like in their time, and their use of the missile in question springs from a personal knowledge of its effectiveness.

Reverend Mark Guy Pearse of London says that we in San Francisco do not know what poverty means. When the new bond issue is done with, and the Mayor has retired satisfied, we shall be convinced in the words of the late laureate, "that a sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things."

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernald Travers, Tourist

No. 4

One of my friends at the club said to me the other evening that I was correct in my opinion of the unspeakable badness of your principal thoroughfare, and that the residents of San Francisco also objected to its ramshackle condition. This caused me surprise, as from what I had noted, I was convinced that the San Franciscan will put up with anything if he can do as he pleases.

The next day my friend escorted me to the City Hall. I met some of your Aldermen, and saw some which, thank heavens, I did not meet. Then I understood the whys and wherefores of many things. You people do things in a manner which is not an improvement on the manner with which I have been familiar in the larger places in England. There the men who go in for being Aldermen do so for the sake of the honor, and because they are well educated and desire to help to govern their city in a manner which will reflect credit on themselves and on the town or city in which they live. Here I learn that it is quite different. The better classes do not care to go in to be elected for any position, since there is not any honor in it, but only abuse, and the other class not appreciating this element go in on the make. The sums of money which have been spent on municipal street improvements in your city have cost a great deal too much, and the result is plainly and painfully noted by a stranger. Here the beautifying of your city is no one's business, and hence the ragged tatterdemallion appearance. In your shopping district, little one-floor affairs, with tumble-down back parts and plate glass fronts, exist right next door to brick and stone buildings. Ragged sunshades over the windows of your stores, with glaring advertisements on them, spoil the appearance of the street. Horrible piles of planking, nailed up like a wall around vacant premises covered with the most unsightly kind of nightmarish-colored advertising bills, show how a place can be ruined. Old men on the street, sweeping up the trash with a broom and scattering mud or dust in every direction, makes one feel sorry for the poor beggars. I saw a butcher's wagon full of beef the other morning following along behind an ash wagon, and the smell of the wagon and the dust blowing back over the beef behind was simply a lesson on vegetarianism, with an emetic sort of feeling added. Among the duties of the modern and semi-parental form of city Government is the education of the masses as well as the protection of the classes.

If your citizens do not know any better than to tolerate this kind of thing, they should be taught better. I followed the wagon for two or three squares and expected to see a plain-clothes man at least put the beef ahead of the ashes, but no, and the people going down to their shops and offices never noticed it at all. Awful, isn't it?

I have talked with some of your policemen, and I find them quite a decent lot, but not up to the English force in point of politeness or desire to accommodate the questioner, but far ahead of any in London in point of brogue. I tried one chap, an Italian, and he spoke the language. Another addressed me in good French, and I offered one man a quarter of a dollar in return for his directions, and he refused it. Maybe I should have offered him a half.

There is a similarity, however, in one point.

The pretty girl is most carefully escorted across the street here, the same as elsewhere, and the others are allowed to shift for themselves.

You are giving up your time here to making money, and that is a bad habit to become fixed upon a growing city. It takes all the attention from other things which go to make the life of a gentleman pleasant. Here you don't breakfast or lunch or dine—you just eat. Your residences are in family hotels, and the occupation of Gardener is forgotten. No one keeps a Gardener, so no need of Gardeners. The hotel life and the money making craze detract from the appearance of those who acquire it, and the city and its men put on a makeshift, slovenly air, and your better growth ceases. You make money, but you don't have homes, and when you make your pile you'll go abroad or to New York to spend it, which you wouldn't do if you builded homes and a beautiful city.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP TO YOU ON THEATRICALS.

COLUMBIA—"The Degenerates." An excellent performance.
 ALCAZAR—"Mrs. Jack." A splendidly enacted farce.
 ORPHEUM—A very good show. Many attractive acts.
 CENTRAL—A good performance of "A Bowery Girl."
 FISCHER'S—"The Beauty Shop." Continued crowded houses.
 GRAND—"One Night in June." Good.
 TIVOLI—"When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Continued success.
 CALIFORNIA—"A Fatal Wedding." Very ordinary and uninteresting.
 CHUTES—Deaves Mannikins. Good.
 LYRIC HALL—Burton Holmes. Entertaining Lectures.

"The Beauty Shop" continues the attraction at Fischer's, and the management and company are to be congratulated on the visible improvement made in "an already smooth production." The pruning that has been going on since the first performance is appreciated by the public, for the attendance continues very large and enthusiastic. Little Dorothy Crawford is to be credited with the suggestion that Dill kick Kolb on their emergence from the "thinning" and "fleshing" works of Madame Voluptia's shop. Miss Crawford is a charming maid of twelve years, and is the playwright's daughter. Her brother disputes the idea with her, and it may be that the scheme of retributive justice came from both of them.

* * *

At the Alcazar, the best stock company ever organized in San Francisco is giving a finished and evenly balanced performance of "Mrs. Jack." Miss Block is the personification of the author's ideal, and the rest of the company are so nearly letter perfect that there is room for praise only, and that unstinted.

* * *

Mrs. Langtry, at the Columbia, grows on one with further acquaintance. You find yourself catching little intonations in the rich voice, something to admire in the awkward walk, the set of the head crowned with her lovely way of dressing the hair, allures, and take it altogether, she becomes to you the embodiment of an English beauty. There is a subtle magnetism about her, a feline attractiveness, that captivates. Mrs. Langtry has one quality, and indeed this entire company possesses the same attribute, a clearness of enunciation that it is a never-ending pleasure to the audience.

The widow of Windsor's son has risen in my estimation, I used to think he had execrable taste. This was because of some male friends of his "that I have met." There are other men who have raved over the Lily of Jersey in time that is past, and I sat back, half closed my eyes in a retrospect of nearly twenty years, and I am gray and old, and I open my eyes and before me is a woman, fifty at least, and looking the ideal of Balzac's woman of thirty. And it was she who looked much the same so long ago. Mrs. Langtry is certainly a wonderful woman.

Mrs. Langtry's company deserves the thanks of theatre-goers for their conscientious work. The performance of Mrs. Deering's "Divorce" was excellent, and the same good swing and splendid acting pervades "The Degenerates."

* * *

At the Central "The Bowery Girl" is being given to good audiences, and there is fun a-plenty, a fire scene, and the usual powder smoke. This time it is a dynamite explosion.

The Stein-Eretto family, Stanley and Wilson, Kelly and Violette, Irving Jones, Howard Thurston, Wallno and Marinette, Asra and White and Simmons continue to entertain the Orpheum audiences. There is a vast amount of entertainment in the acts of this goodly company, and the house is crowded nightly.

* * *

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" has marched to some good purpose for the management of the Tivoli. The house is packed with enthusiastic audiences. Whatever shortcomings there may be in the music are made up in the acting and in the swing of the martial airs. Anna Lichter's solo, "Fairyland," is a hit, and the magnificent tableaux and scenery are a constant source of gratification to the theatre goer.

* * *

At the Grand Opera House, "One Night in June" is giving pleasure to large audiences. It is a pretty play of the old "Green Mountain State," and Mr. Holmes and his company give a very acceptable performance.

* * *

After weeks of preparation, "Quo Vadis" is to be put on at the Central. The large stage of this house lends itself easily to spectacular effects, and it is expected that the performance will give the admirers of Herschell Mayall and Thais Lawton scope for hysterics.

* * *

At the California the "Eternal City" will be put on. Fortunately this play is under the management of Liebler and Company of New York, and this surely is a guarantee of improvement over the lamentably miserable work that has been heretofore presented to the public by the local management.

* * *

A magnificent programme will be rendered at the Alhambra to-night by Rivelas' Royal Italian Band, assisted by a few vocalists, under the auspices of "L'Italia," in commemoration of the death of Verdi. The proceeds of the fund will be given in its entirety to the Verdi monument fund. The monument will be donated to the city of San Francisco, and will be an additional beauty in one of the parks.

* * *

The Alameda Lustspiel Ensemble is making elaborate preparations for Sunday night's production at the Columbia, and there is every reason to believe that the comedy will make one of the biggest hits ever known here. The lines are bright and the situations highly complicated and amusing. Seats are selling very rapidly, and a big house is assured.

* * *

A programme filled with novelties is announced at the Chutes for the coming week, one of the acts of importance being Montague's Cockatoo Circus birds that do everything but talk—and some of them do that. Koplín, Fowler and Koplín, society acrobatic marvels, will make their first appearance here, as will also Dealy and Shean, very clever and original singing and dancing comedians. Barr and La Salle will present a comedy paper tearing act, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The marionette entertainment provided by Deaves' Merry Manikins, and new moving pictures shown by the animatoscope, will complete the programme. The amateurs will appear on Thursday night. The American, Chinese and Philippine babies in the incubators are great favorites, while the baby leopard in the Zoo attracts great attention.

"A Chinese Honeymoon," which gives its initial performance in San Francisco at the Columbia Theatre next Monday evening is a clean musical comedy, different from musical comedies that have been seen here this season. It does not depend wholly on one or two characters for its success, as the company contains about twenty principals and carries a chorus of over eighty voices. The costumes and scenery are said to be the handsomest seen on the stage today. The music of "A Chinese Honeymoon" is the work of Howard Talbot, and the books and lyrics are from the pen of George Dance. A feature is the grand ensemble numbers, particularly the finale of the first act, which is the wedding scene, and the finale of the second act, "The Feast of Lanterns."

Frederick Belasco, who is now in New York securing plays for his stock companies, wires the important announcement that he will shortly make the first San Francisco production of "Parsifal," a dramatic version of Wagner's great religious opera, originally produced at Bayreuth and recently such a sensation at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The dramatization, he adds, is nearly completed. As Mr. Belasco is in daily touch with his brother, David Belasco, it seems probable that the project, when fully announced, will prove one of exceptional importance.

Kolb and Dill remain first favorites with San Francisco's lovers of stage fun, and the work of the two comedians in "The Beauty Shop" has immeasurably enhanced their popularity. Ben T. Dillon has also strengthened his hold upon the admiration of the folk who appreciate artistic versatility. His impersonation of Professor Hercules Brannigan is one of the cleverest low comedy bits ever witnessed in this city. Georgia O'Ramey loses none of her artistic charm in the unenviable make-up of Sapho Sweeney, and the Althea sisters are better than ever in their songs and dances. It is the general belief that "The Beauty Shop" will equal, if it does not eclipse, the longest run ever scored at Fischer's.

The Tivoli management announces the production of Strauss's "Gypsy Baron," after "Johnny" will have made his farewell march. The stage in the new house will lend itself admirably for this opera. The "Gypsy Baron" will prove a treat to the patrons of the Tivoli.

"David Harum," with its New York production and an extremely strong cast, will be presented at the Grand Opera House the week commencing Sunday matinee. All of the scenes are laid in Homeville, New York, and the play is divided into three acts. From appearances it is not unlikely that the play will meet with a warm reception here, and its presentation will be largely attended. Sunday matinee, January 31st, Joseph Arthur's latest success, "Lost River," will be elaborately presented.

Another new and well-known girl is coming to Fischer's Theatre shortly. She is Nellie Lynch, one of the cleverest soubrettes in America.

THE LOOKER-ON

A veteran police official was discussing crime with me the other day. Every man, you know, talks shop, more or less. The conversation had wound around from the city's remarkable growth during the past decade to the numerous crimes of high degree recently committed.

"Men in our business notice the city's growth," said the policeman. "We know that criminals are flocking here, and that high-grade malefactors are increasing in San Francisco. This is no longer a village. It is a great city, and our population is not less than 340,000. It is on the increase, too. For this very reason, there is immediate need for new laws giving the police department greater power for the suppression or detection of crime. I have been engaged in a number of cases of mysterious murder, and I have found that so many opportunities for escape are afforded assassins, that it is very difficult to prove their guilt. The hard cases are those in which people, not of the criminal class, remove others on whose lives they may have insurance, or by whose death they will be benefited financially in some other way. These murderers take very good care to destroy all evidences of their crimes, and their very first act is to destroy the body of the dead. This is most easily done by cremation in one of the local crematories.

"The papers referred the other day to the Hume case. I know nothing about this affair, except what I read; but as I recall it, it was alleged that an investigation into the cause of death was demanded. The body, however, had been cremated, and an autopsy was, therefore, impossible. The ease with which it is possible in this city to cremate bodies is of great assistance to persons who may commit murder by the administration of poison, for instance, or by some other means, which would leave no marks of violence. It is easy enough to get a death certificate from a physician looking for a fee. The issuance of a permit from the Health Office is a mere formality, and it takes not more than a day to remove all possibility of discovery by causing the body to be cremated. It seems to me that the Supervisors should pass an ordinance requiring that all bodies about to be cremated should be subjected first to medical inspection, and to an autopsy, except in cases where physicians of good standing have been in attendance for some time prior to death, and are able to vouch personally that death resulted from natural causes. Cremation is altogether too popular with heirs to large estates, and with others who desire an urn of ashes to remind them of the rapid passage of those who left their coin behind. It presents an avenue through which the most dangerous kind of criminals may practically foreclose the possibility of detection. Some of the prominent men in the police department and some of the private detectives who have been engaged in famous murder cases, have given this matter considerable attention, and do not be surprised if an ordinance along the lines suggested is soon introduced in the Board of Supervisors. The certainty of detection and punishment is the most valuable deterrent in the prevention and suppression of crime. We must have legal proofs before we can hang a man, and those proofs must be obtained before the door of the incinerating chamber is closed upon the bodies of the dead."

The Democrats now have absolute control of the Board of Supervisors. They have the fourteen votes necessary to pass bills over the Mayor's veto, and they intend, therefore, to make Schmitz as unhappy as possible during his second term. The test vote was on the pound business. The fourteen votes developed, and it is said one more might have been had if necessary. Sanderson, Eggers and Alpers are now counted with the Democrats, and Baxton may join the bunch. Sanderson is a life-long Republican, the son of former Mayor Sanderson and brother of the late Supervisor Sanderson. The Democrats did not have to ask him to come in. He joined them only too willingly. Eggers is a Crimmins man. He was opposed to the Primary League during the recent campaign, and trained with the regular organization. He was placed on the Police Committee, which handles all the big prize-fight permits. Knowing he can get nothing from Schmitz, Eggers has joined the opposition. It is said that Alpers has been promised some sort of patronage to keep him in line. He is playing a more desperate game than Eggers, for Alpers has a couple of saloons, and the Police Commissioners could shut him down almost any time if he became too objectionable in the Board. Baxton is inclined to the Democratic majority, because it is also a question of patronage with him. He can get what he wants only through the majority.

Brandenstein will be the majority leader in the Board. Braunhart wants to be, but the others preferred Brandenstein. Braunhart is a good parliamentarian, and he has many excellent ideas, but his unfortunate and frequently offensive manner makes him impossible for leadership. When Brandenstein announced at the first meeting of the Board that the Supervisors were the whole thing, and that they would take no back talk from the Mayor, he outlined a policy that will make the coming two years very strenuous for the Supervisors on the one hand and the Mayor and all his appointees on the other. Brandenstein would not hesitate to cut off the supplies by reducing the appropriations for all the Schmitz boards, if by doing so he could control the Mayor and the Commissions. It will be a very vigorous fight. One object will be to discredit Schmitz, so that his re-election as Mayor will be next to impossible. That result would cut him out as a possible candidate for Governor. Brandenstein refused the Democratic nomination for Mayor last year, but, it is said, he now thinks he sees a chance to make the Democratic nomination in 1905 equivalent to an election. He certainly has a great opportunity to show what he can accomplish.

District Attorney Byington has not yet made those changes in his staff ordered by McNab on the first of the year. The Democratic office holders are surprised. They did not think Byington had as much backbone as he has shown. He has withstood McNab for at least three weeks, wherefore men marvel. The Scotchman demanded the heads of Porter Ashe, little Johnny Greeley, Hanley and some others. He wanted them all served with the blood of decapitation hot upon them, but the axe has not yet swung. Byington sharpened the edge, but he cannot make up his massive mind for the delivery of the blow. He is in the usual Byington condition—funk. His safety is in delay, he thinks. Therefore he delays. But McNab urges danger in delay. Then Byington promises the heads on the morrow. He gathers fresh courage one night, and so far no heads have fallen. Meanwhile, the District Attorney and his staff maintain a state of armed neutrality.

Grief, the new County Clerk, deserves more than a little praise for his fortitude in withstanding the demands made for the restoration of Mahoney, Prendergast and others of the barnacle type. Crimmins could do nothing with him in behalf of the discredited men. Grief has a splendid opportunity to make a good record. He knows the business; he has competent assistants, and he can give a business administration. But—remember this prophecy—he will wander back to Crimmins before the year gets very old, or I am much mistaken.

The Union League is getting to be a big organization. If it takes over the old Pacific Union building it will have the finest quarters, and will be the most pretentious of all the political clubs of the Coast. George Pippy has been very successful as President, and deserves his re-election. Pippy, it is said, is in training for a big Federal job in the event of Roosevelt's re-election. You remember, he was quite close up when Teddy was here. Either Collector of the Port or Postmaster will satisfy Pippy. Of course, Fisk has just taken the latter job, but that does not concern Pippy's calculations. Fisk would rather go to Congress from the Fifth than continue in his present place, and now that Loud has been killed off and Wynn has been lost in the shuffle at Washington, a trade might easily be arranged whereby the Postmaster would get into the Congressional fight and leave the Postmastership for some one else. "That some one else is me," says Pippy. The rise of the President of the Union League should be an example to young men in politics. It is not so long ago when Pippy was a courtroom clerk at the City Hall. He was not a remarkably brilliant clerk; in fact, he is not, in any respect, a remarkably brilliant man. But he did his work well enough and held his job. Then he got into the law, but I have not heard much about him as a barrister. He was at first Secretary of the Union League, and was re-elected a couple of times. Then, finally, he became President, and is now in his third term. Pippy is a genial fellow, and by giving the club a good deal of his time has made himself strong and popular in the organization. But it is not all for the greater glory of the "Grand Old Party." Not if George knows it. Everything comes to him who waits. He has been waiting about long enough, he thinks, and when the big loaves and big fishes are next distributed, you will see Pippy's name prominently mentioned among the names of those that are claiming rewards for long and gallant service.

The Jefferson Square Club is the very latest. It seems to be a private corporation organized for the purpose of showing the newly rich, who can afford to ride in automobiles, just how and when to do the proper thing. It occupies the upper floors of a new building out on Golden Gate avenue, and it has all the appointments of a swell club. William Greer Harrison appears as President, and among the officers are Colonel Jo. Howell, Judge Kerrigan, Henry J. Crocker and Eddie Greenway. There are no dues and no initiation fees, but cards of membership have been issued to many hundreds of men who are considered what Horace Platt might call "clubable." It strikes me that the "club" must be a private business enterprise. I regret to see my old friend Greenway going into business at his time of life. Of course, he and Patti may not have been children together, but Eddie's top works show plainly where the passing years have exposed the bald scalp of Time. He is not as young as he used to be, and it is more than passing sal to see him chasing the elusive dollar down a bowling alley, or from a kitchen to the cashier's desk, when he might be so much more pleasantly engaged. This new club, you know, has a grill, and all sort of appointments. It may be all right, Eddie, but the selling of chops looks very much like "trade."

Every month, in the Maple Room at the Palace, a score or two gentlemen gather at an informal dinner to discuss current events. They form the Commonwealth Club. They do not parade their sayings or doings in the press, but every now and again they issue pamphlets in which are published some of the best papers read at the monthly dinners. This club numbers some of the most progressive men in town. Among them are Mr. Weinstock, of Weinstock, Lubin & Co., James D. Phelan, Professors Wheeler and Jordan, Dr. Burke, Dickie the shipbuilder, William Greer Harrison, John McNaught, William R. Wheeler, and others. For the men composing it, and the topics they discuss, it is the most modest organization of the kind the town has ever known.

"Elijah" Dowie has "came." Dowie was here years ago. In fact, upon his arrival from Australia, he builded in San Francisco his first stepping-stones to fame and fortune. He lectured at the Y. M. C. A., and succeeded in interesting a few professional Christians in his schemes for reformation, with Dowie as chief reformer, selling tickets at the gate. He has been repeatedly denounced as a faker, but as a business man he could give a year's start in a new field to most of our local merchants and then beat them out. During the past few months either he has been losing his grip or he has been calmly preparing for a grand coup. He has sent his family to Europe; his great settlement near Chicago is in financial distress, and it is said he is headed for Australia, where he expects the fatted calf to be killed upon his return home. His successors will be that new sect in New England, reported in the papers this week, whose basic principle is to grow long whiskers. Why? So they may "raise the wind."

Financial Review.

The Unpopular Gas Corporation.

A new Richard has entered the field, ambitious to control the destinies of the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company. A change of any kind could only be for the best, and there is one thing to be said for the new aspirant, Mr. C. O. G. Miller, that his experience has been such as to justify the belief that he knows something about the business and would be a practical manager. Mr. Miller expresses himself as opposed to the policy which allows a President of the corporation $25,000 per annum and grants him the privilege of touring Europe at a time when the services of every officer of the corporation is particularly needed. He evidently does not favor the introduction of men as heads of departments from other walks in life, which certainly do not suggest the most intimate acquaintance with the manufacture of gas, even if the results of their highly-paid labors up to date had not shown that very clearly, to consumers of a product which is the worst ever turned out from the gas-works in this city since they were constructed. Any citizen who is forced to wend his way home late at night from his business will corroborate this statement, if he has not already commented upon the subject, after one glance at the dismal little glare, "greenery yallery" in color, which only serves a turn in making the murky darkness visible, and the surroundings doleful in the extreme. The statement of the company's financial claim for public support will be of interest when it is filed with the Board of Supervisors in due course. The extent to which the late inflation of capital will be utilized to tap the public purse will be interesting, outlining, as it doubtless will, the intentions of the promoters to define a valuation of a concern which is only really worth what it would cost to replace the present plant by new and modern machinery, allowing, of course, for the wear and tear of years. No one, of course, can attempt to take the figures of $30,000,000 as a basis of valuation seriously, a bubble which will collapse on the first indication of a bona fide proposition to establish a new plant. That this will come in due time may be confidently expected, owing to the very marked unpopularity of the new management of the old concern. The only thing that can possibly check a movement of the kind will be a clean sweep of the present officials at the forthcoming election, and the shareholders will see that this takes place if they have a due regard for their own pockets.

Wild-Cats Begin to Peter Out.

The Federal authorities are doing some good work in rounding up the promoters of wild-cat mining schemes all over the country. The postal authorities have just put under arrest the Jaegers of Chicago on a charge of using the mails to defraud. According to the papers, more than $800,000 is involved, which will give an idea of the magnitude of the financial scoops of some of these operators. Irrespective, however, of the Government action, money is not coming in so rapidly now. It only takes time and rope enough for a wild-cat concern to hang itself, provided its members do not decamp too hurriedly in the belief that the jig is up. A mine that has no ore developed nor ore to develop, cannot pay dividends, a proposition which will not require much verification. They may materialize for a time, by robbing Peter to pay Paul, the money received from sales of stock being used to bait the trap for a constantly growing crop of fools. When this source of supply is stopped, the stockholders can whistle for their capital, let alone talk of dividends. There are a number of the wild-cat flotations nearing this stage in their career; if they have not arrived at it, and from now on there is likely to be music in the air. Quite a number of complaints are now heard from stockholders, who, filled with alarm at intimations of coming disaster, are now writing the papers from all over the country inquiring whether or no this proposition or that is safe; and if the management can be trusted.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

Business on the local Stock and Bond Exchange was particularly active in bonds during the past week, an indication that the appearance of the tax collector is about to make his annual passage across the local stage. Many transactions took place, as will be found on reference to the list. An upward tendency is noted in the Gas Company's shares, which suggests the approach of the election, and also that money is likely to cut quite an important factor in determining the result. In other quarters, the market showed some strength, and the spirits of operators have risen somewhat above the zero mark. On Wednesday last Spring Valley paid its quarterly dividend of 63 on the capital stock of the company, and the California Powder Company its regular monthly dividend of 50 cents per share.

Pine-St. Market.

Ophir came within an ace of touching $10 during the past fortnight and the balance of the market showed a material improvement. The advance was too much for the ubiquitous "knocker." However, one thing that no so-called "knocker," singularly or collectively, has ever been able to do, is to block the Comstock market for long when its activity is based upon a genuine ore development. According to Mr. Clarence Sharon, one of the ultra conservative mining men on the Comstock lode, who recently examined the improvement on the 1866 level of Ophir, says that the ore body had a breadth of 14 feet in the face of the drift, and that values ran as high as $400 per ton, the average value being $100 per ton. As it now stands, the ore body by measurement is said to exceed in value the Hardy vein in 1878, when Ophir was quoted at $60. It has, now, greater dimensions than that found in Con.-Cal.-Virginia in 1886, which sent that stock up to $65 and Ophir to $35. This statement appears in the Virginia Report, which is edited by men who have grown up with the lode and know whereof they talk.

This would indicate that, so far as Ophir is concerned, dividends are more likely in the near future than assessments, and it would not be surprising should one be declared within the coming week. The price of the stock has declined recently to more normal figures. There is nothing unusual in the flare-up, which carried the price on a spurt to the recent high figures. When a stock reacts sharply, as Ophir did, from a low basis, the public is apt to jump in and send prices kiting, taking the market for the time being out of the hands of inside operators who are generally supposed to control affairs. This, it will be remembered, was the case in 1886, when Con.-Cal.-Virginia got beyond all control, acting in such an ungovernable manner that the wealthiest broker firms on the street were placed in such a position that some of the most solvent of them would have been forced to the wall, while the weaker concerns went down like nine-pins, owing to the panicky conditions. Affairs eventually worked into such a state that the late James C. Flood had to be recalled from a visit to New York to restore the equilibrium of business by the weight of his personal and financial influence. Had it not been for his prompt and skillful action at that time, there would have been few of the most powerful operators on the street who would have survived the crisis, and that, too, on a "bull" market. Of course, as the leader goes, so follows the smaller fry, and the balance of the list now shows a corresponding decline in sympathy with Ophir. The development in Ophir justified a sharp advance in the price of that stock, and now that the market has steadied, it will undoubtedly respond in turn to the showing in the mine, and be regulated in its fluctuations by the appearance of the mine as the work of opening up the new and promising ore body proceeds. The find in itself is one of the greatest importance, and there is no telling what it may yet develop into in the course of exploration in the lower levels of the mine. One would naturally conclude that a discovery of the kind would be one of congratulation on the street, instead of being an object of attack. Friends of the Comstock will naturally hope that in dimensions it will yet open out into a veritable bonanza.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Paul Gerson begs to state that in response to numerous requests he will on January 1st open a Juvenile Department in connection with his School of Acting, and has secured the services of a teacher of experience specially qualified for this work, Miss Lillian E. Muscio. One of the features of the department will be a dancing class in charge of Signora Matildita. In order that each one may have his or her proper time and attention, the class will be limited to twenty-five. Mr. Gerson will give his personal attention to every pupil. For terms, etc., call or address the Juvenile Department of the Paul Gerson School of Acting, Native Sons' building, 414 Mason street. The fourth of the series of matinee performances by students at Paul Gerson's School of Acting will take place at the California Theatre on Friday afternoon, February 12th. A brilliant programme will be presented. The school will be assisted by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, this institution hereafter joining its artistic interests with the School of Acting.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

F. E. BECK, Manager. P. G. EASTWICK, JR., Ast. Mgr

W. R. Hearst has telegraphed Gavin McNab, asking him to come to Washington to consult about the delegation from California to the National Democratic Convention, and he has gone East accordingly. It is understood that when he returns he will bring with him a list of who are to be delegates-at-large to the Convention, and also the list of delegates from this part of the State. He will not be back for several weeks.

The announcement that Boss Murphy of New York is going to try to force Mayor McClellan on the Democratic party as its Presidential candidate raises a very interesting point of constitutional law. McClellan was not born in this country, but in Germany, though, of course, of American parents. The Constitution says only Americans by birth are eligible to the Presidency, and makes no mention of those who are Americans by virtue of the nationality. When Crisp was Speaker of the House of Congress he was talked of as a Democratic candidate for the Presidency, but he was dropped as soon as it was pointed out that he was born in England. His parents were Americans also. There is not much chance of McClellan being nominated, and still less of his being elected, as the people of the country are hardly prepared to hand over the Government to Tammany, but if he were, the question of his eligibility might have to be settled by the Supreme Court, and for months would be a subject of excitement all over the country.

The latest news of the Hanna boom is that it has not been a success, and that the Ohio Senator has concluded to keep his word and remain out of the fight. The efforts to get votes for him in the National Convention have disclosed the solidity of the West for Roosevelt, and even in his own State it is said he cannot get the delegation. The only votes he could secure would be those from the South, which once more raises the question whether the system of electing delegates is not all wrong, since it gives the South too much power in naming candidates to whom she never gives a vote. That the South should have 302 votes, or nearly one-third of the convention, is creating great dissatisfaction, and a representation based on votes cast and not on Congressional representation will be demanded by many of the Western States at Chicago this year.

While Mr. Rooney is securing, by grace of his brother-in-law, the right to the exclusive use of the depot news-stands, his brother-in-law and Johnnie McKenzie of San Jose, also a Harbor Commissioner, have formed a company with ex-State Senator Percy Henderson, who has been wharfinger to do all the weighing of freight on the State wharf property. They have formed two companies: the North-side and the South-side Scale Companies, and are collecting six and one-quarter cents for every ton of freight that goes over the scales. They have as manager of the company a thrifty politician from the last regime known to local fame as the "Banjo-eyed Kid," but who in private life is H. Lorentzen. Everybody wondered when Welch was given Henderson's job why the latter was kept on the payrolls, and a new place created for him at $200 per month. Henderson is a Democrat, and there seemed no good reason why Republicans should give political jobs to Democrats. But now the cause of the extra $2400 added to the State payrolls is evident. Charlie and Johnnie were taking care of their partner. It is said that they make nearly $200 per month each out of the scale company, after paying the kid for his services.

My Democratic friend who edits the Oakland Tribune is angry with me, and takes me to task for saying that Metcalf was Gage's candidate for chairman of the last State Convention, and declares that he was loyal to Pardee. The two statements are not as inconsistent as they might seem to be, because loyalty to Pardee seems to have meant disloyalty to every one else. Pardee himself set the example when, after pledging himself to Flint, Edson and Preston in the Palace Hotel, to stand against Gage, the latter threw them down and formed another deal with the then Governor. Metcalf was Gage's candidate, and every one knows that had he beaten Neff for the chairmanship Gage would have been nominated. Perhaps he did not want to be chosen chairman for that reason, and the Pardee forces secretly defeated him. That is a new version of what happened behind the scenes at Sacramento, and as it comes from an Oakland paper, deserves attention both by the Gageites and their opponents. It would appear from the Tribune statement that Metcalf was put forward to prevent the Gage men selecting a candidate for chairman who could win, but with the secret understanding that he was to be defeated, so as to hurt Gage's prestige. That is the only possible explanation of the Tribune's statement that Metcalf was true to Pardee and really wanted to defeat Gage. Metcalf ought to pray to be delivered from his friends and their explanation of his conduct.

Mrs. Lorimer—It's an awful care having a posthumous child!

Marian—A what?

Mrs. Lorimer—Why, one born after its father's divorce.

Mrs. Lorimer—Which of the ushers were you engaged to?

Ethel—I forget. I flirted with them both so long; but I think it is the right-hand one!

Servant—You've lost two husbands—Grippe, ma'am?

Mrs. Lorimer—Not exactly; another kind of epidemic—the law!

Marian (disposing of her wedding gifts)—It's like the death of some one, isn't it? And after they are buried, you have to sort out and put away their clothes. This is the death of my marriage and these gifts are its clothing!

Fanshaw—Oh! never mind Ethel. She never means what she sounds like!

BY THE AUTOCRANK

America again possesses the mile straightaway record for automobiles. Henry Ford on the famous (remodeled) 999 Ford machine, covered a mile over the cinder path on the ice of Baltimore Bay in the fast time of :39 2-5 seconds, which was official. He also made an unofficial record for a mile in :36 flat. The former world's record of 46 seconds was made over a year ago by M. Augieres on the Dourdan Course in France.

The Park Commissioners have at last decided to extend further privileges to automobilists. Although it has not yet been officially announced just what these privileges will be, nevertheless, whatever they are, they will be greatly appreciated by owners of the horseless vehicle. The Automobile Club of California is determined to see that these privileges are not abused. The privileges extended automobilists at the Presidio for some time were about to be withdrawn, but through the efforts of President F. A. Hyde and the Governors of the Club, and the systematic way in which they brought pressure to bear upon the reckless drivers, saved many a lover of the sport from losing the greatest pleasure in and about San Francisco—that is, driving along the excellent roads of the Government reservation.

Much interest among automobilists is being taken in the coming Automobile Show to be given by the Automobile Club of California this spring. Many members of the club, non-members and prospective buyers, are waiting to see what improvements are to be exhibited, and the new 1904 models, before purchasing.

The "Autocrank" has inquired of a number of prospective buyers as to which automobile he prefers, and from every one the answer is the same; "We are waiting for the show."

The "Autocrank" suggests to those anticipating a future purchase, and to those now owning machines, not belonging to the club, that they make application for membership to the club at their earliest convenience, as much valuable information and material assistance is given a member by a brother member. This is invariably the case where one is unacquainted with the automobile, and desires to obtain information from those who know and are not in the business. The Automobile Club is the place where one can meet enthusiastic automobilists, and receive many valuable details which would be of great help to the prospective purchaser. Besides this, material assistance can be given the inexperienced owner when he is unfortunate enough to meet with an accident on the road, or is unable to remedy a fault in the working of his machine. This assistance will be largely increased when the new club emblem (which will be introduced shortly) is attached to each member's machine, permitting the tourist to recognize another member on the road who has met with an accident.

Foreign cars are gradually entering San Francisco, and ere the summer begins, San Francisco society will be surprised to see some of its well-known horse men driving their big "buzz wagons."

Thomas Magee, Jr., has recently purchased a French Renault, which is en route to this city. Mr. Walter Hobart will return from Europe with a powerful Mors, such as is driven by Mr. George Whittell, Jr.

Mr. Peter Martin has ordered a big Panhard, which will also be here shortly.

I did not hear whether Mr. Hobart intends starting an auto-polo team or will drive his machine at the next race meet.

Ex-Governor James H. Budd has just received his 28 horse-power, four-cylinder French Mors. According to American standard, this car will rate at least 45 horse power. Ex-Governor Budd was an early automobile enthusiast. He has owned several machines and has given much attention to the automobile. As a result, he decided to pay the high price necessary to secure a French machine. He speaks highly of the Renault and De Dion-Boutong, which are precisely the same car as the French Arrow. Ex-Governor Budd has also imported a French chauffeur.

The new White Touring Car equipped with limousine body.

Mr. J. A. Marsh purchased from the Mobile Carriage Company last week a French Arrow touring car, two cylinder, 25 horse-power, American standard. Mr. and Mrs. Marsh were among the first automobilists on the Coast. When the little steam run-about appeared, they secured one of them. When it served its usefulness, it was replaced by a large steam touring car. Mrs. Marsh became proficient in the handling of both cars, making trips to the Santa Cruz Mountains, to the Yosemite and to Nevada City. It was an object of interest in the early days to see an automobile, and especially when skillfully handled by a lady. San Francisco can rightly claim for Mrs. Marsh the distinction of being the most skillful lady operator on the Coast. It is predicted that during the coming season there will be many a spirited "brush" between the French Arrow and other cars.

E. J. Phelps, President of the Minneapolis Automobile Club, sailed from Boston on the White Star liner "Republic" on January 2d, taking with him his 1904 Knox Touring car. Mr. Phelps will join his family at Nice, France, and from there, with his wife and two children, will make a tour of Europe on his new machine.

the National Automobile Company, C. A. Hawkins of the White Automobile Company, and Cuyler Lee of the Cadillac, are now in the East, where they went to attend the big shows at New York, Detroit, Chicago, Philadelphia and Cleveland, and also the race meet at Daytona, Florida. They will undoubtedly make arrangements with the various companies they represent to make large exhibits at the San Francisco Automobile Show. It is not the club's intention to give this show as a money-making proposition, but rather for the purpose of interesting non-owners and affording opportunities of studying the various makes and types of cars.

A gentleman of Salinas, who already has several automobiles in his stable, recently purchased a four-cylinder Franklin runabout, in which he left San Francisco on Thursday of last week for his home.

The National Automobile Company reports a very satisfactory business for the week past in Knox, Toledos and Franklins. They also report that they have a car of four-cylinder Pope-Toledos (the mile-a-minute car on the road), which they expect to receive the latter part of this month.

Mr. Norman W. Church, of Los Angeles, representing this company, has received the first two-cylinder Knox touring car, and reports several sales.

The Mobile Carriage Co. has contracted with the St. Francis Hotel for the exclusive right for all automobile business in connection with their hostelry. In addition to the large passenger service for the accommodation of guests, a buss line will be run from the St. Francis to all trains and boats for the accommodation of guests.

Another carload of Pierce Arrow touring cars have been received by the Mobile Carriage Company. These are in every sense the 1904 model, having the Mercedes hood and honeycomb radiators. The finish is automobile red with black stripings, and makes a very handsome appearance.

"The Anona," a new hotel at 2910 San Bruno avenue, recently opened by Doctor Gillete, is becoming the rendezvous of the owners of automobiles. It is easy of access, and there are all sorts of conveniences. It is a fine auto ride to this resort; the best of care is taken of machines, and there is an experienced mechanic always at hand to attend to the wants of the public. The accommodations in the hotel itself are very comfortable, and all who have tasted of his viands speak very favorably of the genial doctor as a boniface.

—The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

—If you want to eat the best, drink the best, and be among the best people, go to Techau Tavern, which is second to no restaurant in San Francisco. It is the favorite after-the-theatre resort, and deserves its fine reputation.

DRIFTING AWAY.

Only two lives dividing
 More and more every day;
 Only one soul from another soul
 Steadily drifting away.

Only a man's heart striving Bitterly hard with its doom;
 Only a hand, tender and bland,
 Slipping away in the gloom.

Nothing of doubt or wrong,
 Nothing that either can cure;
 Nothing to shame, nothing to blame,
 Nothing to do but endure.

The world cannot stand still,
 Tides ebb, and women change;
 Nothing here that is worth a tear.
 Nothing between but the cold world's screen,
 Nothing to lose but a heart.

"THE HEAVY MISTS TRAIL LOW UPON THE SEA."

By M. J. Savage in The Century

The heavy mists trail low upon the sea,
 And equally the sky and ocean hide,
 As two world-wandering ships close side by side
 A moment loom and part; out o'er the lee
 One leans, and calls, "What ho!" Then fitfully
 A gust the voice confuses, and the tone
 Dies out upon the waters faint and lone,
 And each ship all the wide world seems to be.

So meet we and so part we on the land:
 A glimpse, a touch, a cry, and on we go
 As lonely as one single spar in space.
 Driven by a destiny none understand,
 We cross the track of one 'twere life to know,
 Then all is but the memory of a face.

SONNET TO SILHOUETTE.

By Harvey Peake in the House Beautiful

O Ancient Dame of high degree, Grandmother many times removed,
 What is your story? Has it proved
 A blessing or a curse to me?

Was happiness your legacy?
 Or did you sin and woe bequeath?
 Did Passion poisoned tendrils wreath
 About my noble ancestry?

What disposition did you make
 Of Heart? And in long hours of night
 Heard you, at times, Soul's bitter cry?
 Speak you! And my dimmed senses wake!
 Bare all the past and make it light!

* * * * *
 By mocking Silence you reply.

THE RIVAL.

By Dorothea Moore in Century

To the church on her flowery way,
 She tossed me a coin in the throng.
 O white little bride, do you think to pay
 With this for a woman's wrong?

I picked her gift from the dust,
 Kept it close night and day;
 O white little wife, you can trust
 My hate to find out a way.

A baby's fingers, aye,
 His baby upon her breast,
 Have stolen all my hate away—
 Rest, little motaer, rest.

"Ehjah" Dowie may be very "set" in his ways, but on one point at least he has changed his mind quickly. A few weeks ago, telegraphs the Chicago correspondent of the New York Sun, "Dowie was railing at the Jews, declaring them unclean and unfit to help restore Jerusalem. To-day (December 13), in a sermon in Shiloh Tabernacle, he praised them and said that Jews are among the best people on earth." A possible explanation of this change of opinion is indicated by a check for $82 sent by the Overseer of Zion to the publishers of the "Jewish Encyclopedia" for a copy of that work, which gives a record of the tremendous service rendered by the Hebrew race from the days of Abraham to the present. Dr. Dowie received the five volumes so far published a few days before his change of view was proclaimed.

Visitor—Your church is a beauty. That handsome house next door is the parsonage, I presume? Deacon De Good—N-o. Fact is, the parsonage is some distance up town, but we intend to make an offer for one of these near-by residences soon. "The price will be high, no doubt." "Um—I think not. We shan't try to buy until after our new chimes are put in."

Insurance

The fire business of California for 1903 is given in the accompanying table. These figures speak for themselves.

The December number of the Conservative says another claimant for the original idea of Combination Life Insurance has been heard from. There is enough to go round for all the companies, so it resolves itself into the question of which can get the most of the combination pie. Mr. Tupper may not or may have originated the idea for the Conservative Life, but whether he did or not, he applied it, and the result is that the company of which he is the manager came pretty nearly leading the list for business written in California.

It will be remembered that Mr. Tupper was the author of a splendid advertising scheme which he floated by the publication of a pamphlet on Rebate, and about which he was vigorously complimented and as vigorously assailed by the insurance press.

Mr. Tupper is too brainy a man in the life insurance business to care what was said about him individually, but he enjoyed what was said about the Conservative Life, and next to Mr. Torbell of the Equitable he has demonstrated himself as good as they make them in working the press.

The fire at the Iroquois Theatre in Chicago closed up the theatres until they were inspected by the authorities and found safe. San Francisco theatres are being looked after, and it may be that on some of them the insurance companies will cancel their lines and then they will be made safe for the public.

While the resorts of the ungodly are under the glare of the limelight of municipal inspection, why not go a little further. There are churches, concert halls and other halls in San Francisco which in event of a panic in a crowded house would cause a deadly disaster. It is better to waste an ounce of prevention than administer a pound of cure, and while the mood of "safety for the public" is on, make a clean sweep and make every place of public gathering, secular or religious, Jews or Gentile, safe for those gathered or close them permanently.

The statement of the Pacific Coast Casualty for the first year of its business shows how a California company, backed with ample and unimpeachable assets and managed with ability and energy, can be made to grow. The Pacific Coast Casualty Company had a premium income for the year of almost $103,000.00. This business was secured at full rates, and the secret of its acquisition is the influence brought to bear through and by its stockholders, whose names are synonymous with wealth, financial strength and business success. The company commenced operations with a capital of $200,000 and a surplus of $50,000. It has added to the latter $8,715 as the result of the first year's business. When it is considered that this is in addition to the extraordinary expenses necessary to organization and to the placing of a new company in the field, and that it is carried to surplus as the net after setting aside an ample reserve for losses which may arise, and paying losses incurred, it is a truly remarkable feat, and one which stamps President Green as among the leading financiers and Casualty Underwriters of California. The admitted assets of the company aggregate $315,098.00, or $65,098.00 over and above the capital and surplus paid in. It is evident that the new comer in California's Casualty companies is not to be overlooked, as good, straight, hard competition by the older companies doing business on the same lines.

The New York Life, in continuance of its efforts to secure federal recognition, has asked Secretary Cortelyou, of the Bureau of Commerce, to join with the Insurance Department of New York in an examination of its affairs.

There are several Accident, Casualty, Surety and Life companies which failed to file their preliminary statements with California's Insurance Commissioner on the date prescribed by the California law. The penalty is a fine of one hundred dollars per day.

The News Letter regrets to chronicle the death of the respected father of Insurance Commissioner Wolf. As a tribute of respect, the office of the Commissioner was closed for two days.

The Fireman's Fund held its annual election of officers on the 19th. There was but one ticket, and the officers were all re-elected. The usual congratulations were extended, the usual increase of surplus and assets shown.

Whisperings from Alameda

Isn't it a caution, as our grandmothers used to say, that every one, or almost every one, is suspected of stealing, in the virtuous cities across the bay? It is not many days since the society women of Oakland instituted a crusade against those who stole purses and baubles from the guests at fashionable functions among the elite, and now the principal of the Berkeley High School, Professor M. C. James, calls the students together and rakes them over the coals for stealing from each other. It does look as if no good thing could be expected to come out of Alameda County. Mr. James, after a lecture upon the heinousness and vulgarity of such a crime, said in plain and unpoetic language that it had to stop. What the worthy professor proposes to do is not said, but it is unfortunate that you cannot go either to school, if you are growing up to know something, or to a party after you have "developed into a charming belle" without losing all your traps and fripperies.

Consternation reigns among the members of the School Board in Alameda. They are unable to keep a woman teacher, even until the end of the first term after she takes her seat in the chair of authority. And it is all their own faults. It is not long since they heartlessly and arrogantly dismissed every woman teacher who had passed twenty years of age. They held that a woman-over twenty had developed a hard expression and was not up in the latest fads of education. The Board said, too, that education signifies "to lead out," and that the more settled "school-ma'ams" had grown to imagine it meant to "drive forth." But they are meeting a just retribution, or the old teachers say they are, and of course they know, for they themselves gave that as a reason why they should have been retained. They say, calmly, and, I am sure, impartially, that they "knew everything there was to know about teaching and teachers."

It is said that every young girl teacher in Alameda is engaged to be married, and there is a prospect of empty benches staring the School Board in the face long before the Easter vacation. The youngsters are enjoying the fun immensely. And they know all about it. You can trust them for that! Every time dainty little Miss Smith blushes as Johnny Green hands her the letter that she has dropped when she heard the Superintendent of Schools coming, don't you suppose the whole infant class sees it? I do. And there is a ripple of merriment among the parents, too. It is not so long since many of them were young, and some of them were teachers, too.

Oakland society is in a fever of apprehension. The exclusives across the bay fear that they may be asked to associate with Miss Mary Agnes Redford, a little telephone girl who has lately fallen heir to a fortune of $3,000,000, through the death of a grizzled old miner of British Columbia. The miner, deep in his tough old heart, held the sentimental memory of a courtship between the girl's lovely mother and himself many years ago in the wooded wilds of the British territory upon the Sound. There was a quarrel, and the woman, in petulant anger, married another and came to California. Here she sickened and died, leaving the baby girl to the care of a cousin, a Mrs. Mary Hallahan of Oakland. In the simple home with the three young daughters of her foster mother, the child grew to girlhood. She is now sixteen years of age and as pretty, dainty and innocent as it was her mother's dying prayer to the good Lord to keep her. She is the picture of what the mother was when she turned her back on the faithful lover in the woods of British Columbia. And that is why she will be an heiress, for the miner never married and had cherished the memory of a boyish love affair through all the dreary years, and his dying wish was to endow the girl with money enough to make the world her playground if she wished.

* * *

Now that the Roman Catholics and Episcopalians are both down on the Reverend Ernest E. Baker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church in Oakland, it seems that his stay in that clannish town is only a matter of time and endurance. Already the pews of his church are more often empty than full, I am told, and I also hear that the evening special services that used to be so popular and on which occasions the big church was wont to be crowded and made as light as dazzling electric bulbs could make it, is now as dreary as a tomb. It is whispered among the naughty ones that the lights are left low so that the shadows may look like people. Well, you cannot blame him for that. Mr. Baker was always a great one to put the best possible light on everything, and a dark lantern would be the best in that event.

PROPOSED RAID ON THE PUBLIC TREASURY.

"We the undersigned respectfully petition the 58th Congress to fix the salaries of the following Government officers at the amount indicated under the column headed "Proposed Salary," to take effect December 1st, 1904:

	Present	Proposed
President	$50,000	$75,000
Vice-President	8,000	15,000
Each Cabinet Officer	8,000	10,000
Chief Justice	10,500	15,000
Associate Justices	10,000	12,000
United States Senators	5,000	10,000
Members of House of Rep'sent's.	5,000	7,500

The above is a petition being forwarded to every newspaper and magazine in the United States by an Eastern advertising firm.

The name of a publication is used, "The Sentry Box," to foster this raid on the public treasury. The claim is made that our federal officials are too modest to make a demand for a raise of salary, but that they must perforce appeal through the medium of a third party to the people of the United States. It is presumed that a certain success attained by the proponent of this extraordinary graft, in securing patronage for a cereal food, is tantamount to equal success in obtaining a raise in salary for our public servants. One of the main arguments used is that living in Washington, forsooth, is double in cost to anywhere else in the United States. Let those who set this rapid pace curb their aristocratic desires. Let the public servant live within his income. The agency which is backing this propaganda for the over-modest officials is using a club over the publications addressed in the shape of advertising patronage. The inference is that this patronage will be withdrawn unless they get in line behind the raiders and push the good (?) work along.

CUBA AND SENATOR PERKINS.

The speech of the Honorable George C. Perkins on Cuban Reciprocity has been received at this office. Senator Perkins has been the recipient of congratulations of those of all shades of politics for his consistent and continual advocacy, and the splendid speech made by him on this subject.

It may be said of him that while many may doubt the wisdom of the policy advocated, there are none who doubt his integrity and his support of any measure is a tower of strength.

The Savage Arms Company of Utica, New York, is sending out a beautiful art calendar which is a fine replica of an oil painting by Rungins. It represents a hunter and horse, with a stag in the foreground. It is one of the best examples of reproduction we have ever seen. In the same line the J. Ayer & Son advertising firm have issued a calendar which calls for commendatory mention. This is done in the colors of bronze, and represents work in relief, showing the two sides of a medal.

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

"What's the matter?" asked the rooster; "more absentmindedness?" "Yes," replied the hen; "I can never find things where I lay them."

Doctor—Well, Pat, did you take the box of pills I sent you? Pat—I did that, yer honor, but I don't feel any better; I expect the lid hasn't come off yet.

Ethel's mother told the grocer to send her a dressed turkey, and when it arrived the little miss said: "Mamma, the turkey isn't dressed at all; it's perfectly nude."

Johnny—They must have an awful big baby over at Meeker's house. Pa—What makes you think so? Johnny—Why, I heard ma say to-day that every one in the house was wrapped up in him.

She—Isn't it lovely? Papa consents. He—Does he, really? She—Yes. He wanted to know who you were, and I told him you were tape clerk at Shrimp & Co.'s, and he seemed real pleased. He—I am delighted. She—Yes, and he said we could be married just as soon as you were taken into the firm.

Schoolmaster (to Smith Major, who has paid a visit to his old school)—Yes, you big men are sometimes successful, but it is often a case of froth rising to the top. Smith Major (seizing the opportunity to pay off old scores)—But the dregs always remain at the bottom.

The millenium won't get here in our time, but that is no reason why we shouldn't try to hurry it along.

"Why did you let him get away from you?" thundered the chief. "He—er—took a mean advantage of me," replied the green detective. "He ran across the grass in the park, and—" "Well?" "Well, there was a sign there, 'Keep Off the Grass.'"

She—Oh, Dr. Pillsbury, I'm so anxious about poor Mrs. Perkins. She is in your hands, is she not. Dr. Pillsbury—She was, but I have left off attending her, for the present. She—Oh, that's good! She's out of danger, then!

The Suitor—They say that Love is blind. The Heiress—But nowadays he has a marvelous sense of touch.

The true poet has a lively imagination, and so, too, has the mere verse writer, for the latter is apt to imagine that he is a poet.

Again we hear of the incorporation of a railroad company for the construction of a line from Hudson's Bay to Argentina. There will be a branch line to Mars via the moon.

"Josiah," said Mrs. Chugwater, "have you ever seen a bureau of information?" "Yes." "What does it look like?" "You've seen a table of contents, haven't you?" replied Mr. Chugwater, somewhat irritably. "Well, it looks like that, only it's larger."

Young Ardup was looking over his accounts. "I find," he muttered, "I spent last year $165.45 for beer and cigars and $75 for clothing. I must try to get along with fewer new clothes this year!"

"You don't mean to tell me you rescued a young lady from drowning and didn't stop to learn her name." "That's what I did. My wife was there when I got the girl ashore."

"Bridget, did you hear the bell?" "Yessum." "Why don't you go to the door, then?" "Sure, mum, I'm not expectin' anny one. It must be somebody to see you."

"But you don't think he's mercenary, papa?" "Why, yes, I do! I'm afraid he regards marriage as a get-rich-quick scheme!"

"This," smiled the fond young wife as she passed a plate of dessert to her husband, "is cottage pudding. I made it myself." The man tasted of it. "I'd have known it was cottage pudding," he asserted. "You would?" she asked delighted. "Yes. I can taste the plaster and the wall paper. What did you do with the shingles and the bricks for the chimney?"

"Ah," she sighed, "the great men are all dead." "But the beautiful women are not," he answered. Then she looked up soulfully into his eyes and told him she had said it just to be contrary, and not because she thought it for a moment.

Benedick—A man naturally requires a helpmate. I tell you, the young man in business who is not married is seriously handicapped. Sharpe—Quite so! He is at the mercy of his creditors, being unable to put his property in his wife's name.

Towne—I could scarcely refrain from laughing at Dumley's fiancée when she remarked that he was so versatile. Browne—Well, he is rather versatile. Towne—What? He's a regular idiot. Browne—Yes, but he's so many different kinds of idiot.

You pay five times too much for lamp-chimneys.

MACBETH.

If you use a wrong chimney, you lose a good deal of both light and comfort, and waste a dollar or two a year a lamp on chimneys.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

Husband—I really think you you might have had that ball dress made a little higher in the neck—to say nothing of the back. Wife—I'll have it changed if you wish, but this stuff costs $10 a yard.

"Then the reverend gent wanted ter know if we wuz a law-abidin' community." "And what did you say to that?" "I said of course we wuz law-abidin' and we'd lynched many a feller that wasn't."

"What's the crowd doing down at the courthouse?" inquired the stranger. "Oh, they're trying the case of Mose Johnson," replied the Southerner. "Why, that was the man they lynched yesterday, was it not?" "Yaas, but to-day some of the boys got teched with a foolish curiosity to know whether he was innocent or guilty, suh."

Gull—That man you introduced me to was telling me how rich his people are. Newitt—Who? Hot-tayre? Oh, that's his way. Gull—He says they'll be famous in the financial world if they don't suffer a change of fortune. Newitt—Well, there won't be any change in their fortune unless he changes his mind.

"I spent a week in New York recently, but it was a disappointment to me." "Why so?" "Was not in a subway explosion accident all the time I was there." "Shake! I was in Chicago for three days and wasn't held up once. These big towns aren't what they are advertised to be, by a long shot."

Mr. Occident—Was there any conclusive reason why the Vigilantes should have hanged that poor negro? Quick-Drop Dan—I should say there was! There was a tree just outside the coon't cottage and one of the committee had brought a rope with him.

GERHARD MENNEN CO., Newark, N. J.

Knicker—Do you believe in a college education? Bocker—Yes; it teaches a boy's father how to take care of his money.

Lena—What made Fred act so funny when I accepted him. Emma—Oh, he's just in love with you, dear. He'll soon get over that.

"And she said there was worse to tell, but she wouldn't say what it was." "Oh, I don't believe there could be anything worse—if she wouldn't tell it."

Mabel—Did Gladys have a fashionable wedding? Maude—Very. Why, her wedding dress was nearly torn off before she got inside the church.

Mother—Now, Bobby, you must not get into any fights with the neighbors' children. Bobby—But, mamma, I've got to get acquainted with them some way.

Gyer—I hear there is to be another postal investigation. Myer—What's the matter now? Gyer—It is reported that a man in one branch of the department had a chance to acquire a few extra dollars and didn't.

"And when you have got the number of hours in a working day down to the minimum, what then?" asked the manufacturer. "Oh, then, we'll go in for a thirty-minute hour," remarked the walking delegate.

"I have looked over the whole field," said the young author, "and the only thing that pays is a good novel." "Wrong again," said the philosopher. "What pays better?" said the author. "A bad novel," said the philosopher.

"When an enemy smites me," said the pious-looking hypocrite, "I always turn the other cheek." "Why?" asked the man who knew him, "do you want your enemy to go around with both hands disabled?"

Weary Waggles—Hey! You won't git nothin' decent in dere. Dem people is vegetarians. Hungry Hank—Is dat right? Weary Waggles—Yeh, and dey got a dog w'at ain't.

How many ways can you serve meat? "Three, mum." "What are they?" "Well done, rare, and raw."

"How does the new cook strike you, my dear?" asked the head of the house as he sat down to dinner. "She hasn't struck me yet," replied the weary other half, "but I believe she would if I gave her any back talk."

Elmer (aged five)—Mamma, my stomach says it's time for dinner. Mamma—Well, dear, go and see what the clock says. Elmer (a moment later)—The clock says my stomach is ten minutes fast.

"Pa," said the boy, looking up from his book, "what does a man's 'better half' mean?" "Usually, my son," replied the father from behind the evening paper, "she means exactly what she says."

Applicant—And if we want certain changes made in the flat—Janitor—Well, when people want 'em very bad they generally move.

Nobody had any idea that germs were so good to eat until it was learned that more than sixty-million of them are to be found in an adult oyster.

"Well, Freddy, how do you like your dinner?" asked the hostess of a small guest. "Oh," replied the little fellow, "we don't have any better at home, but there is more of it."

"Madam," said the facetious boarder to the landlady, "are these storage eggs?" "I think they must be," replied the lady; "you appear to have stored away five of them."

"Say, pa," began little Willie again, "why—" "Now, see here," his pa interrupted. "I told you I wouldn't answer any more questions. Let this be the last, now. What is it?" "I just wanted to know, pa, why you don't want to answer my questions. Is it because you're ignorant, or jest because your indigestion's coming on?"

Critic—No, Mr. Smearly, you will never succeed as an artist. You can't draw. Smearly—Can't draw? What's that got to do with it? Ain't I in society.

"Did you say there were accidentals in that music?" asked Mr. Cumrox. "A great many," answered his daughter, who has musical ambitions. "Well, it's a great comfort to know that you were not doing it intentionally."

A device by which you can look down the throat and into the stomach has been invented by a Chicago man. Let's hope that it will help to check the "breakfast food" habit.

Lieutenant-Governor Willard of Virginia has out-run a rabbit in an impromptu footrace. It will be a rapid office that gets away from him after this exploit.

While we rejoice over the dying out of the feud that kept the Crocker spite fence standing, let us also bear in mind that thereby we lose one of our too few historical landmarks.

An estimable Kansan named Hoch has put away the crown of the Republican nomination for Governor with such firmness that the papers of the Sunflower State with one accord said of him: "Hoc der Caesar."

Two Kentuckians have upheld the honor of their country by thrashing four footpads in Paris so effectively that only two of the Gauls were able to run away.

An out-of-town scribe abuses shamefully an urban Colonel because of his too-abundant locks and whiskers. We suspect the scribe of hairlessness as well as malice.

A Chicago woman has been adjudged insane and there is incidental mention of the fact that for years she had smoked a package of cigarettes a day. Cause or effect?

Hearst's New York papers have been awarded the city printing. In San Francisco this is a job that only the poorest sheet of the lot will accept.

President Roosevelt and his admirers are said to be anxious to get rid of M. Bunau-Varilla as Minister from Panama. By all means. We never did care for these black-and-tan diplomats, with names that sound like some kind of flavoring extract.

Andrew Carnegie offered the American Society of Civil Engineers $1,500,000 for a new building, but when the Engineers said that there was a condition with every dollar they sidestepped adroitly. Poor, rich old Carnegie!

A scientist with a microscope has found 6,000,000 bacteria on a $1 bill. A Morganized public is not interested in the bacteria, but it clamors to know where he got the bill, not believing that there is so much money in general circulation since the bottom fell out of the Steel Trust.

The bright lads of a Pennsylvania district school tied their woman teacher hand and foot and threw her into a shed, where the temperature was around zero while they wrecked their temple of learning. Mercifully, the teacher escaped alive; and, unmercifully, so did the boys.

The "Sage of East Aurora," who has become rich, if not respected, and notorious if not famous, by an impudent manner of criticising the morals of his betters, has married the lady who was named as co-respondent when he was sued for divorce. They will honeymoon in Timbuctoo to avoid souvenirs from his disciples in the shape of eggs and brickbats.

An evening paper is fussing about an unnamed lady who is accused of trying to break into society by inviting to her "functions" people who do not know her. Why not? It is thinkable that the people who do know her might not come. And, again, society can always adjourn and call the meeting to order somewhere else—a practice not unknown in politics.

GRASPING FOR CITY PATRONAGE.

That tin angel which tops the City Hall dome should be thankful for the fact that hers is a job without a salary. Otherwise she would have been pulled down and somebody else re-classified and re-titled into her exalted place. The marionette who executes the will of the Mayor is not permitted to overlook anything that looks like patronage. As the News Letter foretold, the Supervisors have put the Schmitz combination on record as deliberate charter-smashers. It has exposed their rapacity and their chicanery, and with the same movement has done its best to keep them out of reaching distance of the public treasury. What these pilloried pillagers have had to say in their own defense has not helped them. It is no excuse for the Health Board foray to say that this Supervisor who opposes it has a mother-in-law in the pay of the city or that this other one has found municipal jobs for a bunch of cousins and friends. And if the ingenuity of Ruef has devised any better apology than that for what his creatures have done in their scramble for the trough, he has not divulged it.

The crux of the situation is the order of the Supervisors to the Auditor and Treasurer holding up the pay of those henchmen of Schmitz found to have been unlawfully appointed by the Health Board. Auditor Baehr has already shown his distrust of the Mayor's shifty Civil Service Board, and we believe that he will not be coerced or cajoled into aiding Schmitz in his scheme of misrule. The order of the revenue-voting body should and probably will suffice for him. This will throw the burden of proof upon the charter-wreckers.

While the city awaits the untangling of the puzzle it need fear no damage through lack of an active and efficient Health Board. The illegally appointed crowd will go through the motions even if they draw no pay, partly for the prospect of a decision favorable to them and partly because of the promises of the administration, and going through the motions is about all any Health Board ever does. The poor devils of men and women whom necessity drives into the City and County Hospital cannot fare worse than the inmates of that foul, mismanaged rookery have fared for years. The unregenerate prize-fighter to whom Schmitz handed the office of "deputy warden and custodian" will hardly dare to make punching bags of the helpless and poverty-cursed patients who come under his authority while his chance for a salary hangs in the courts.

Whatever the courts may do in the premises, the people look to Auditor Baehr to stand fast. If he pays any attention to the threats and persuasion of the charter-wreckers, it will be as bad for him as for them when the time for reckoning comes.

A LESSON FOR SAN FRANCISCO.

According to the Customs House returns, tabulated by the Treasury Department in Washington, the exports from the port of San Francisco in 1887—a fairly average year—were valued at $32,711,507, and in 1903 they were worth $33,502,616. From the same source of information it is learned that the exports from the Puget Sound district, including Seattle, Tacoma, and some minor ports, in 1887 were $1,770,429 and in 1903 they amounted to $32,499,828, or nearly as much as the export business of this port in that year.

Making comparison of the import trade, a somewhat similar condition is observed. In 1887, the Puget Sound import trade only footed up $347,818, while in 1903 it had mounted to $12,177,243. In San Francisco the imports in 1887 were valued at $40,707,708, while in 1903 they were reported at $36,454,283.

These figures are misleading in some degree, for the reason that for the past three years the Customs House has not included in its returns for this port the Hawaiian export and import business, which is done almost exclusively here. It is estimated that $6,000,000 in round figures should be added to the total of San Francisco exports in allowance for the Hawaiian export business, and that the import trade from the islands amounts to about $10,000,000 annually. Thus, in 1900, before Hawaii became domestic territory, the exports from San Francisco were $40,368,288 and the imports $47,869,628.

Making all these allowances, we submit that the figures still present a startling showing, and one that should be matter of grave concern to the merchants and shipping men of San Francisco. If the treasury returns are true, the port of San Francisco has made a comparatively insignificant growth in export and import trade since 1887, while in the same period Seattle and Tacoma have advanced from a negligible quantity to a position where they nearly equal our business. This city is doing a splendid business. Of its prosperity there is no question, but our good fortune has come to us almost without effort of our own. It should be far greater if our people would put more work and energy in it. San Francisco is the spoiled child of fortune, and has ever been. Long ago Bret Harte wrote that the city stands by the gateway of two continents, "serene, indifferent to fate," waiting for trade to come her way, but not putting out her hand to grasp it. Seattle is different. That city is nowise indifferent to fate, and is a natural born reacher. Therein San Francisco may learn her lesson.

'THE INFINITE VARIETY OF GRAFT.

The infinite variety of official graft was illustrated by a recent debate in Congress on an amendment to the legislative, executive and judicial appropriations' bill offered by Representative Charles B. Landis, with a view to preventing the abuse that has grown up in the departments of providing for the use of subordinate officials' horses, carriages and liveried coachmen, which are employed not on Government business, but for social purposes. In offering his amendment, Mr. Landis said that if "the horses and carriages," with their coachmen, paid for out of money appropriated by Congress, were lined up on Pennsylvania avenue (Washington) they would extend possibly from the White House to the Peace Monument."

Of course, no specific appropriation for any such purpose has ever been made by Congress, but Mr. Landis explained how the thing was done in these words:

"The expense that is now borne by the Government in this regard has attracted the attention of the country, and unless Congress puts some limitation upon the expenditure, it promises to become a national scandal. I am informed that in the estimate made by the head of one of the Departments for the coming year, the estimate being made by a gentleman who had not in that capacity made an estimate before, there was a provision for seven coachmen.

"Had he been onto the ropes he would have had the estimate specify 'seven laborers,' and after he got them would have assigned them to do duty as coachmen. This is the way it has been done by the heads of other departments for years—'laborers' have been metamorphosed into 'coachmen,' have been equipped with silk hats and with boots and placed upon the box, where they have done service in approved fashion for persons other than those mentioned in my amendment; and unless the Congress takes some action in this matter it is only a question of time when all the assistant secretaries, all the chief clerks, all the clerks—in fact, all people on the Government pay roll, except Senators and Representatives, will be riding in carriages guided and directed by coachmen, and all the expenses paid by the Government."

Seven coachmen for one department is a pretty fair allowance. In these stylish equipages, paid for by Uncle Sam, it was stated on the floor of Congress that the wives of subordinate officials might be seen any day in Washington making their round of social calls.

NEGLECT OF PACIFIC COAST INTERESTS.

We have had occasion more than once in these columns to dwell on the need of united action among the Pacific Coast delegations in Congress touching questions that affect the industrial life of the great region west of the Rocky Mountains. The resumption of the duty on coal offers an instance in point. The coal output of the Pacific Coast States is comparatively insignificant, and what we use we are compelled to carry long distances. As if the cost of transportation of this fuel were not a sufficient burden on our industries, we are now compelled in addition to pay a duty of 67 cents a ton on every pound we use. We say advisedly on every pound, because that part of our fuel which is mined in the United States pays the duty just the same as that which comes from British Columbia or Australia, for instance. The only difference is that the 67 cents goes into the pockets of the mine owner instead of the national treasury. The duty is added to the price of the home product, because, being sold in competition with the foreign coal, any cause which increases the cost of one has a similar effect on the other.

This is a matter of very considerable importance to the industries of the Pacific Coast, and yet there was not a word of protest in Congress from any of our Representatives. What they need is a steering committee to watch the interests of this region as they are affected by legislation, and call for united action when occasion demands. As things are managed, Pacific Coast interests are permitted to go by default for want of concerted action. Under the present system or lack of system, the Pacific Coast delegation in Congress is nothing better than a fortuitous concourse of jarring atoms.

NATIONAL PEACE (?) ASSOCIATION.

There seems to be something queer about the latest element to inject itself into the local industrial situation. It was incorporated on January 6th, and christened the "National Peace Industrial Association." Some excellent and prominent citizens stand as sponsors for it, but there is a suspicion of the syndicate about its begetting. Nominally the responsible parent is P. H. Scullin, who came here unbidden from Seattle three months ago. He has described himself as being vice-president of the Carpenters' Union in the town he hails from, is the author of a labor arbitration bill which failed of passage in the last session of the Washington Legislature, and is the self-appointed eliminator of boycotts and sympathetic strikes from the arsenal of organized labor.

The aims of the Scullin scheme are beyond cavil. No sensible man will object to any bona fide endeavor to bring about peace between employer and employed. But it is the good faith of this association that we doubt. Frankly, we do not like the manner of Scullin's advent; we do not like the readiness with which Mayor Schmitz has endorsed his "Peace Association;" we do not like the choice for its presidency. "George H. Foulks, Attorney-at-Law" is the official description of the gentleman who heads the Scullin scheme. Now, this Mr. Foulks is more of a teacher in a public school than he is a lawyer. He is generally known to be one of the smaller of those handy men who do the odd jobs of the Schmitz regime. We suspect strongly that this "Peace Association" is a clever device of the false prophets of unionism; that their real object is to use it for the splitting of the Citizens' Alliance to which the industry of the country has turned for relief from its dire affliction. Organizer Scullin, with his union labor credentials, and his invisible means of support, looks to us like a gift-bearing Greek. When we see in the chair of his praiseworthy "Peace Association" a factotum of that Mayor who has so bitterly denounced the Citizens' Alliance for daring to organize against organized labor, we are reasonably certain that the gift he is preparing to hand us is a hot one.

DANGERS OF THE EIGHT HOUR LAW.

The address issued by D. M. Parry, president of the Citizens' Industrial Association of America on the eight-hour law is a valuable contribution to the literature of the labor question, thoughtful, temperate and judicious. Mr. Parry sees in the agitation for a law pledging the Government to an eight-hour day on all work done for the national administration not only an attack on the liberty of the citizen but likewise a menace to the industrial supremacy of America.

The most telling argument against the legislation demanded by the labor unions in this regard is stated by Mr. Parry in the following paragraph:

"I wish also to call attention to the fact that to the degree eight-hour legislation is effective to that degree is the ability of our industries to compete abroad diminished. This means less production in this country and therefore the employment of less labor. Again, the artificial tampering with hours of employment in private enterprise inevitably means higher prices for commodities for general consumption. The cost of production cannot be increased without a corresponding advance in prices."

In a word, the unions demand that American labor shall be shorn of 20 per cent of its productiveness, and at the same time they desire to add 20 per cent to the cost of production. That is the spendthrift fashion of burning the candle at both ends, and it must prove disastrous to American opportunities for foreign trade. This country has got beyond the point where the home market was all sufficient to absorb the national output of manufactures. We are already selling goods all over the world, but the prime condition of that business is that we can produce as cheaply or more cheaply than our competitors. How long will that condition continue if we increase the cost of production by 20 per cent? There never was a business in the world that could stand such waste.

If it be urged that the bill only affects work done for the Government, the answer is that the disguised endeavor of organized labor is to extend the restriction to all classes of work.

Hearst will never have any difficulty in determining who was his original and most enthusiastic supporter for the Presidency.

SPARE NEITHER MAN NOR WOMAN.

Molly Maguire rules in Colorado. Not since the days when that name of terror carried its mysterious menace of violence, outrage and assassination to the people of Pennsylvania has a like condition prevailed in any American commonwealth.

We had occasion recently in these columns to enumerate a few of the crimes of violence and assassination committed by agents of the Western Federation of Miners in Colorado. In these outrages the victims were men. In the latest instance the agents of the Miners' Union have attempted to assassinate a woman.

Mrs. Leonel Ross Anthony is the publisher of a weekly paper in Denver. She is outspoken and fearless, and is quite as ready to tell the truth about capital as about labor when she believes that either is doing wrong. But it seems that in Denver no man and no woman is free to write or print the truth about the crimes of organized labor. The penalty is death, to be carried out by the hand of the assassin.

Mrs. Anthony had received numerous threatening letters—anonymous, of course, as is the cowardly habit of the slinking assassin—and in these she was warned that if she continued to expose and condemn the crimes of the Colorado strikers, her life would pay the penalty. To these warnings Mrs. Anthony paid no attention, and continued to tell the truth in her fearless way.

Mark the sequel. On Sunday night, January 10th, Mrs. Anthony answered the doorbell of her house in Denver. It was quite dark, and when she opened the door, the unknown agent of the union, who came there with murder in his heart, fired two shots at her from a forty-five calibre revolver. Fortunately the shots missed their mark, and less fortunately the murderous agent of the strikers escaped in the dark.

That was in Denver, the principal city of Colorado. The police report on the crime says: "From all the evidence we can gather from the surroundings, we are of the opinion that the man who did the shooting was some one not known to Mrs. Anthony, and that it was done for revenge with intent to murder."

In the issue of her paper, the "Polly Pry," following this attempted assassination, Mrs. Anthony explains the causes that led up to the crime, and she says:

"I do not know who shot at me. Aside from the antagonism these articles may have caused, I have no personal enemies that I know of. I have never tried to injure any man, woman or child?

What is my crime?

I have dared to tell the truth about some of the labor leaders who are trying to keep Colorado in a ferment.

That is all.

I believe that the plain American working man wants to know and ought to know the truth about the leaders who own him body and soul. The truth is not always pleasant either to him who hears or him who tells, but I am going to tell it, Mr. Workingman, and if you are the honest, sensible, self-respecting man I take you to be you'll thank me for it.

There is not one daily paper in Colorado that dares to tell the truth about the labor situation in this State."

The News Letter may add that there is not one "daily paper" in San Francisco that dares to tell the truth about the labor situation in California.

UNSANITARY RESIDENCES.

How little the public gets for the $60,000 a year it spends on sanitation may be learned from the testimony of any one who has done his own "house hunting." Sinks that sicken with their stench, bath-tubs too filthy to wash a dog in, conveniences too profane in odor and appearance to be described, are to be found in outwardly decent houses in decent neighborhoods where the "To Let" sign invites inspection. Basements dank and mouldy, with rotting boards and the refuse of unclean years, and back yards that seem never to have been dry or clean, are even more common than defective plumbing.

Much of the responsibility for this state of affairs belongs to careless agents rather than penurious owners, since there are many non-resident holders of rented property and many who live here but do not take the pains to inspect what they own unless it remain too long unoccupied. The one class must depend and the other chooses to rely on others, generally real estate firms, to take care of the houses, looking to them to keep the income up and the expenses down. Not unnaturally, the renting agent is content to "let things slide," as long as he can keep premises rented a reasonable part of the time, and as long as the Board of Health does not bother him. And Boards of Health are generally too busy with doing politics and drawing salaries to nose around in houses about which there has been no complaint.

An easy remedy for what is an evil growing worse as houses grow older occurs to the News Letter: Let the Supervisors by ordinance make it obligatory upon the Health Board to inspect every vacated house or other building as soon as it is empty, and prohibit its further occupancy until it shall have been put into such sanitary condition as will satisfy the Board's inspectors. Prospective tenants will not hesitate to take advantage of such a regulation, either by insisting upon compliance with it before they move in or by reporting dereliction on the part of the Health Board.

This suggestion we offer not by any means as a full or satisfactory solution of the civic problem involved, but as a half-way measure that will help to make this a better city to live in while it is thrashing out its domestic difficulties. It seems to be feasible, and we think would be acceptable to all people who rent houses and most of those who own them.

AS TO OFFICIAL INSPECTORS.

The Iroquois Theatre fire at Chicago has called the attention of municipalities all over the country to the various defects in city Government. The lack of protection to the public is apparent in many directions, and in San Francisco, as in other cities, attention has been called to the lack of proper safeguards to protect the thousands who daily use the public elevators. It is true there is a company engaged in insuring owners of buildings against loss, through damage suits induced by accidents. And in these particular buildings there is a rigid inspection of the service. This is a voluntary act on the part of the landlord and is a measure of self-protection.

There should be a municipal inspector of elevators whose duty it shall be to inspect all of these public conveyances. This appointment should be at the disposal of insurance companies and elevator contractors. A mere politician would do more harm than good, but an honest and energetic person who is thoroughly acquainted with insurance and buildings would be invaluable.

A step in this direction is sure to be taken after a terrible accident has occurred, and many have been maimed, crippled or killed. The city of San Francisco is guilty of gross carelessness in many directions in the care given the public. Hundreds of our elevators have not been inspected since first installed; many depend on the strength of one flimsy Manila rope, while others are utterly unacquainted with any attempt at a safety clutch. It is high time that those whom the public have entrusted with their welfare took so important a matter in hand.

There is a law on the statute books of this city making it mandatory on boarding house and hotel keepers not to turn off the gas at the meter during the night. The force of gas should remain on all the time, and the only protection afforded the consumer is to see that his gas fixtures do not leak and that the gas is used in moderation. This law was revived not long ago, just long enough to obtain "back-sheesh" from a few of the owners of second or third rate lodging houses in the poorer part of the city. Many of the fashionable apartment and boarding houses "north of the slot" are managed and owned by men and women of such avaricious nature that they hold life cheap and gas high, and to-day the law is a dead letter. This practice has been the cause of many deaths, and the law should be impartially and strictly enforced. Who is it that is so lax in his duty toward the public that one fashionable house after another flagrantly breaks the law and boasts of it? Surely some officer of this city is responsible for these deaths. Surely some one is culpably conniving with these proprietors of fashionable boarding houses to circumvent the plain intent of the law. Let each one pass it up; let us finally get to the Mayor, and ask him, in these measures devised for the public's safety, to see that the Czar-like power given him by the charter is enforced.

Defense of Kaiser Wilhelm

The editor of the News Letter regrets that the following letter was not accompanied by the name of the writer. Anonymous communications are not as a rule accepted. The subject matter, however, renders a departure, in this case, possible. However, the editor is not responsible for the statements of the contributor.

Editor News Letter: The appearance in your paper last Saturday of a certain article entitled "William the Witless," by a certain somebody hiding his little identity under the pseudonym of Bec-de-Fer, speaks for the free, wide-open policy of the News Letter. Therefore, we trust, there can be no objection to the admission of an answer to the poor scurrilities of the aforesaid Bec-de-Fer.

Taking for his stock of "spit-balls" the sensational slanders of an angered, disgruntled "Countess," published by a renegade German in New York, and the slight unpleasantness between Dewey and Dietrichs at Manila, this parietic peasant expectorates stream after stream of venomous abuse upon the German Kaiser, whom he evidently considers as a personal enemy. It has been long since we have read so disgusting a display of the inflated ignorance, the narrow conceit and brutal blackguardism of the great American jingo. As a true American, in the name of true patriotism, we protest. We call for the merciless suppression of Becs-de-Fer and those of his kidney, clamorous creatures who have too long made us ridiculous in the eyes of enlightened nations. How long this herd of the Know Nothings still survives on the kindly soil of our country!

Germany and Kaiser-baiting have been a particular sport of late with certain English and American papers. The reasons for this we need not discuss—they are obvious enough to all who can see beyond a newspaper—trade jealousies, misunderstandings, lying telegrams forged in London or Paris, and so on; but, as one interested in the good-feeling that should exist between these three great nations, we sincerely deplore it. It is, however, not the fault of the Germans—a kindly, peaceful people. If we have lost their respect and esteem it is due to our yellow press yelpers and the frenzied fanatics they inoculate with their virus—the Becs-de-Fer. We know about this thing. We have studied both sides.

We know about that Manila madness and the rabies it engendered in the minds of the mob. Now and then it breaks forth, as in this case. The truth of the matter, seen from three sides, American, German and Spanish, and not through the hot haze of the high-strung hysteria of the time, was as follows:

Dietrichs did not "insult" the Americans, nor afterwards concede to them any "omitted" form or ceremony. The Germans stood firmly upon their rights—they were there to protect the interests of their countrymen from perils incident to war. After Dewey's cheaply-won victory over the ancient tubs of Spain, the victor Americans, jubilant, drunk with gore and overbearing, as is usual with victors, made themselves very disagreeable to the foreign vessels in the bay, particularly to the German. This was to have been expected from the usual American boast of being able to "lick anything afloat"; the everlasting "chip upon the shoulder," etc. But here Greek met Greek; Dietrich was not to be bullied; he acted within the law. Uprises on his haunches, daft and delirious, every howling newspaper hyena in the land, foaming for war with Germany—and the small rats and vermin of the press cease not with the cry. Is it a wonder that the Germans have lost their liking for us, that they are "a nation that does not love us?" There is just reason for that; we have met their kindly courtesies and international tenders of friendship with the most ill-bred ruffianism and the outrageous sneers of our delectable journals. We tolerate our unutterable Becs-de-Fer when they mount upon their hind legs, and, waving great lengths of ear, give vent to their brays and battle-yawps! Let us be fair, let us divest ourselves of provincialism; let us be just; let us be Americans. We cannot afford to despise the good opinion of Germany, that land that has given us so great and so good a part of our own blood.

Our foaming friend's idea of Dewey's administering a thrashing to the Germans at Manila arouses a pitying smile. There we have the jingo in all his hideousness, his base and brainless belief that other nations would calmly allow themselves to be whipped for the increase of his glory. Does this festive tooth-Tartar think that in the unfortunate event of a battle between the American and German ships that Dewey would have got off so easily, if at all, as with the degenerate sons of Spain in their helpless hulks? Does he think that the Germans shot their guns with apple-dumplings or cabbages—or heads of Becs-de-Fer? Does he think that, like the poor Spaniards, they cannot shoot straight? Does he know that the German navy is as good and as large as ours, and that, despite jingo belief, its men are better? Does he know that our ships are manned by the depraved and vice-eaten riff-raff of all nations, who desert by scores at every opportunity? Does he know, on the contrary, that the German vessels are manned by clean, sturdy, healthy and patriotic sons of the Fatherland, trained and inured to the sea from early boyhood, with true German thoroughness? But why speak of thinking and knowing with this fine specimen of the genus jingo?

It is tough truth, but in every port of the world the American sailor has the bad name of a blustering rowdy and ruffian. As for Teuton fighting qualities, the last great modern war, we believe, is not forgotten, when German arms triumphed so completely over the greatest military nation of that time—France. We rejoice that both Dewey and Dietrichs controlled their tempers; yet, had they not, an impartial critic could not but have held the outcome doubtful.

As for the launching of his hinder hoofs at the Kaiser, that, too, would cause a contemptuous smile, were it not so sad a sign of the dense prejudice and infantile ignorance concerning the personality of that much-misunderstood monarch. A monarch who, says Ray Stannard Baker (a real American) in his "Seen in Germany," "is not only a great king but a great man." We might cite Poultney Bigelow, or other Americans who have left their native ant-hills and come in contact with this wonderful and versatile ruler, or whose education extends to a knowledge of the German tongue.

The reference to scandals in the Emperor's household, to his designs on Cuba, etc., read like the maunderings of a feeble-minded Maori. The integrity and purity of the Kaiser's domestic life cannot be assailed with truth; it is too well-known; it is the clean wholesome life of the true German family. Wilhelm the Second is indubitably a genius among kings—he is truly the father of his people, and his wide sympathies, his culture, his tastes, his keen intellect, his aspirations, but above all the tremendous personal example of the man, have done more to make modern Germany the great nation it has become, than the influence of any other man save that of the Titan—Bismarck! It is not too late to recall the snapping, snarling things that were wont to dart and dash about the feet of that great man, as now they spit and snap around the heels of Wilhelm.

We hold it the duty of every one who knows better, of every American worthy the name, to let in the light, to suppress, where possible, "this coward brood who mangle as they prey"—who villify the great ones of the earth and engender animosities and hide their craven heads behind a Gallic pseudonym. Bec-de-Fer! We suggest that henceforth our furious maligner call himself Bec-de-Gaz, if he knows what that means in French. Excepting its allusion to light, it would indeed be appropriate. We delight in pricking these gas-bubbles, in destroying their bad odors of ignorance and tribal intolerance; it is a duty, a delight.

Let us clear away this rubbish and have air for a free breath or two. Let us reach out and rescue ourselves from the horrible brain disease of Bec-de-Fer, from provincialism, hatred and intolerance.

—A Countryman of Bec-de-Fer.

Mr. George A. Newhall's report to the Chamber of Commerce, as President of that institution, has been rendered. It is a long, interesting and exhaustive document. Mr. Newhall does not give himself due credit for many of the achievements of the Chamber of Commerce. Among the many benefits accruing to San Francisco through his efforts individually, may be mentioned the retention of the transport service for the United States Government, the decision to build a new customs house, and the agitation in favor of a merchant marine. Mr. Newhall is the style of citizen who is a benefit to the community, and his example, in strenuous public effort, should result in other men attempting the same course in public affairs. There are too few really good men who concern themselves seriously with affairs municipal.

Statements have been published that H. Lorentzen, who has a concession from the Harbor Commissioners for a public scales at Filbert street wharf, is in collusion with others for the purpose of graft. Mr. Lorentzen says no one is interested with him in the weighing on the city front. He pays $20 per month rent for space scales occupy, and all the business done on the scales is obtained through personal solicitation. He does not divide the receipts with Spear or McKenzie. It costs $100 per month for a clerk to attend the scales, while Mr. Lorentzen is out hustling for orders. The average weighing done over the scales when foreign shipping is moving averages 100 tons per day, so that a fair living is about all they produce. Mr. Lorentzen is a well known politician.

To those of us "who know," the following story is the howlingest joke of the year: "Strange," said Senator Foraker to Senator Lodge in the lobby Monday, "strange how sensitive Morgan is about the Panama ditch." "Yes, very. He couldn't be more so if it were his own alimentary canal."

The Dynasts.

The Macmillan Company will bring out next week the first part of Mr. Thomas Hardy's dramatic trilogy upon the career of Napoleon. This volume begins with the threatened invasion of England, and ends with the deaths of Nelson and Pitt, and the triumph of Napoleon at Austerlitz. The second part will cover the zenith of Napoleon's power; and the third his decline with the restoration of the old dynasty. The English papers have had much to say upon this ambitious drama, with its formidable catalogue of 19 acts, 130 scenes, and a cast of historical characters too numerous to mention. The deep thought, the patient research, the dignity and power of the Dynasts will appeal to those readers who have a natural love for the philosophy of history and a genuine interest in the great Frenchman's meteoric career, but it is too profoundly metaphysical to be generally popular, or to lend itself, even in a modified form, to stage production. Indeed, the author expressly states that it is intended simply for "mental performance." Nevertheless, there are passages which might be rendered with fine oratorical effect. Such, for instance, is Pitt's soliloquy after the news of Austerlitz:

"Defeated—the Allies—quite overthrown
At Austerlitz—last week."—Where's Austerlitz?
—But what avails it where the place is now;
What corpse is curious on the longitude
And situation of his cemetery! . . .
The Austrians and the Russians overcome,
That vast adventuring army is set free
To bend unhindered strength against our shores . . .
So do my plans through all these plodding years
Announce them built in vain!
His heel on Europe, monarchies in chains
To France, I am as though I had not been!

Roll up that map! 'Twill not be needed now
These ten years. Realms, laws, peoples, dynasties,
Are churning to a pulp within the maw
Of empire-making, Lust and personal Gain!"

Fanny Burney.

Although Macaulay, in his review of the "Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay," left comparatively little for the gleaners who came after him, yet Mr. Dobson's monograph, admirable in every respect, gives us, surely, the last word upon the subject, while at the same time it demonstrates the excellence of the great essayist.

It is for what she represents, more than for herself, that Fanny Burney deserves a lasting place in the muster-roll of English letters. So well does Mr. Dobson tell his story that we can see the book grow under our eyes, and the career of its author unfold before us like the plot of a well-thought-out novel. "Evelina" is a novel that will never grow old, so vitally does it touch upon the clash of classes, and so keen is its satire upon those who try to shine in the social variety show in inverse ratio to their ability to do so. But whether the reader is attracted or not by "Evelina," he will delight in Mr. Dobson's monograph, for its own sake, and will thoroughly enjoy Mr. Hugh Thomson's illustrations in this handsome edition.

tion by Austin Dobson, and illustrations by Hugh Thomson. Macmillan Company, Publisher.

"The Mother of Washington," by Mrs. Roger A. Pryor, is a beautifully written and magnificently-bound volume. It tells the story of life in colonial and revolutionary times in an entrancing manner. There are numerous pictures not before published and the reading is exhaustive, well written and interesting withal.

"Character: A Model Text Book" is a compilation of epigrammatic inanities. It is intended "For the use of preachers, Sunday School teachers, parents and teachers in training youth in the principles of conduct. Also for the use of young people themselves in acquiring a comprehensive basis for true living." The publisher says: "It will be impossible for any boy or girl who studies this book understandingly to become a bad man or woman, although they may not become great." There is a danger, however, that the reader may make a sudden break for an insane asylum after reading three or four pages, and the author and publisher should be restrained by the courts.

Hinds & Noble, New York. $1.50.

"What is a Kindergarten," by George Hansen, is a brochure which explains the idea of the modern school for "littlest tots." He calls it "the battlefield of man" and "the underground of patriotism." The book is a thorough study and should be of interest to all mothers and to all teachers.

The reviewer is in receipt of a leaflet, author's copy, "Poems of Joy," by Alice Kingsbury Croley. The outer cover bears the title "Crickets Chirping." It is a delightful little volume of verse, and should meet with a ready sale. It is published by the Owl Press, San Francisco, and is dedicated to Ina D. Coolbrith.

Bibliographers will be especially interested in the reprint of a medieval romance, "The History of Oliver and Arthur," in a quarto edition of 300 numbered copies by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. (Special Riverside Press series.) The translation by William Leighton and Eliza Barrett is made from a rare German version of the early sixteenth century, which was made from the old French, and that in turn from the Latin original of an earlier date. In the year 1518 a translation in English was printed by Wynkyn de Worde, but no copy has been preserved. The new edition follows the chief characteristics of the original, being printed in double columns of black letter with rubrication throughout, and is illustrated with numerous engravings re-drawn from the old woodcuts of the original. It is printed on hand-made paper and bound uncut, with paper label.

Society

Dear Bessie: Oh! what a week this has been, and I do not hesitate to confide to you the fact that I am on the verge of that complete exhaustion which the pursuit of pleasure sometimes—but not so very often in San Francisco—entails. We who are hardened, so to speak, have found it difficult to keep the pace, but some of the poor little buds have fallen in the race and been compelled to retire for much needed rest. The business of the week began with the musicale at Mrs. Jack Casserley's on Sunday afternoon; I took in an hour of it, having first had a cup of tea and chat with Kate Voorhies Henry. Her teas are very informal, but extremely pleasant. Alice, who was there with me, went on to Mrs. Harry Bates's tea, which she has since told me was the jolliest thing out—sissy, but very expressive. The Bender girls gave a tea for Polly Macfarlane on Monday afternoon—who talks of going home next week.

Next in line of charity affairs comes the performance at the Alhambra next Wednesday, which Mrs. McLalla is arranging for the benefit of her pet naval club house at Vallejo.

Frances Harris's tea was the chief event of Tuesday afternoon, when her engagement was formally announced, so there is another big wedding to look forward to. Gastronomy was helped along by the luncheon Mrs. Gordon Blanding gave at the University Club, and the one Mrs. Fred Tallant had for Elsie; and in the evening there was something of a division of attraction between the hop at the Presidio with the new set of officers on view, and the Coleman dance at Century Hall, where Christine Pomeroy and Lucy Coleman shared the honors. There were several luncheons on Wednesday, among them that given by Mrs. Ryland Wallace for Alice Sullivan, and Jennie Blair at the Richelieu for Gertrude Smith and Margaret Newhall, who seem to run in couples as motifs for entertainments, and later in the afternoon came the reception given Mrs. Taft at Century Hall; the J. D. Spreckels had a big dinner in the evening, from which the girls and their guests went to the Borel ball at the Palace, which was one of the best given this season.

Thursday was seemingly a card day, for there were several parties of them, including Mrs. John Simpson's, Gertrude Palmer's and the one which Bessie and Della Mills gave at the Cecil for Polly Macfarlane, and the pleasures of the day wound up with the dance at the Homer Kings. Mrs. George Pope's luncheon that day was for Mrs. Peter Martin, and was Mrs. Pope's first appearance as a hostess this season.

Mrs. Irwin's card party, which materialized yesterday, was for Mrs. Pacheco, who is here on a visit to her daughter, Mabel Tevis, and yesterday was Mrs. Eleanor Martin's second at home for her new daughter, Mrs. Peter; there were dinners galore, with the Assembly dance at night for a finish, and to-day there are the two weddings. And just here let me tell you something. I think I shall soon be telling you of another announcement, and probably the wedding of one of the sweetest and best-liked of last year's buds; in this instance it will take her away from us, and army circles will be the gainers by our loss.

Aunt Susie was among the elderly ladies invited to Mrs. Butler's card party last Friday, which she gave at her daughter's, (Emmæ Breedon) pretty little house out on Presidio Heights. Have you ever been in it? It has the loveliest view of the bay from the back windows! I should love to sit in them all day. They played seven-handed euchre, and the prizes were quite handsome. The Wagner house on Jones street has been taken by the recently arrived Mr. and Mrs. Chanslor, who have decided to remain here, and as Mrs. Chanslor is, I hear, fond of entertaining, she will be a welcome acquisition. She gave a big card party this week at the Palace, where they are at present. Apropos of cards, they are increasing in popularity as the season draws near its close; among the parties on the tapis are Mrs. Hopkins's at the Richelieu, two that Kate Dillon is to give on the third and thirteenth of February, and Mrs. Ed. Dimond gives one on the eleventh. There are yet others to be announced, and when one hears of them one is apt to think the cards have it, then luncheons pop up and seem to be in the ascendant. Among others, Mrs. Peter Martin is in line for the usual run of them; Mrs. Walter Martin has had one already for her sister-in-law; Mrs. Pope, also, had one for her sister-in-law, and Jennie Blair is to give one for her next Friday.

Mrs. Casey and Kate Dillon give luncheon parties on the ninth and eleventh of February. Music is not being neglected in the crowd of other affairs, and the Twentieth Century Club's second concert comes off at Lyric Hall on the fifteenth.

There was much disappointment felt at Secretary of War Taft's decision to hurry on East and not wait here for the review of the troops which had been planned in his honor, because reviews are always exciting affairs, and they are so very rare hereabouts. Then, too, there had been several invitations to little luncheons and "cups of tea" at quarters in the Presidio contingent upon the review which of course turned to Dead Sea fruit upon our lips when it was given up. Amy Long, who was at Piedmont during her mother's absence in Honolulu, has gone back to her home in Washington City, but I understand that both she and Colonel Long are to be here in two or three months on their way to a tour in the Orient and the Philippines. Millie Ashe Sewell is here on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Ashe, and is already the motif for entertainment. I have not seen her yet, but hear she is looking fine. The Hobarts are coming back, I hear, and it is said will soon be with us again.

The California State Conference of State Charities and Corrections will hold its third annual session in San Francisco February 21st, continuing for three days.

Mrs. H. N. Cook, now on a visit to the Orient, was in Yokohama on the 7th inst.

It was like the gaiety of mid-summer at Hotel Del Monte last Friday evening, when the officers and their ladies of the 15th U. S. Infantry gave a reception to Colonel Henry C. Ward and Mrs. Ward. The attractive halls, parlors and ballroom of the hotel were elaborately decorated with greens and the flowers that grow the year round in the surrounding grounds. The very elaborate evening gowns of the ladies and the striking uniforms of the army men combined to form a most charming spectacle. Over eighty officers were present, coming not only from the army barracks at Monterey, where Colonel Ward commands, but from all the army posts about San Francisco. The music was excellent and the special arrangements made by Manager Snell for the occasion were the cause of favorable comment from all guests. The affair was under the general direction of Captain H. A. Smith, Adjutant 15th Infantry. Among the officers and ladies in attendance were Colonel Henry C. Ward and Mrs. Ward, Colonel and Mrs. E. B. Pratt, Major and Mrs. Charles Lieut. St. J. Chubb, Major and Mrs. Wm. Lassiter, Major and Mrs. Van Vliet, Chaplain and Mrs. Joseph Clemens, Captain and Mrs. Schorffel, Captain and Mrs. Edward Lloyd, Captain John Cotter, Captain and Mrs. William N. Blow, Captain and Mrs. Willis Uline, Captain and Mrs. H. A. Smith, Captain and Mrs. William Brooke, Captain F. M. Savage, Captain C. H. Bridges, Captain and Mrs. T. R. Harker, Captain Bryan Conrad, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Sargent, Mr. Francis McComas.

The illuminated cover of the invitation to the Mardi Gras Bal Masque (at the Hopkins' Institut of Art on Tuesday evening, February 16th) is a dainty affair. It represents Art in the guise of a butterfly coquetting with a Pierrot. The Pierrot carries the tradiional guitar. The colors are a pale lavender and yellow. The third page gives a list of names of the Executive Committee, Music, Decoration, Floor and Reception Committees.

The bal masque will be a magnificent array of the chivalry and fashion of the city.

BRUTE FORCE IN FICTION

BY ERMENTINE INGLE LONG

After reading Mr. Millard's review of Jack London's last book, "The Sea-Wolf," one gets the impression that brutality, sledge-hammer language, and elemental force, are the characteristics one hopes and looks for in modern fiction. Is it, then, so much worth while to get back to primitive man? Do centuries of hard endeavor to get away from him count for nothing? At the best he is here, close under the skin, ready to reveal himself in all his primeval attributes, at the first unguarded moment. Why hark back to the animal? Is the creature so inviting, so resistless in his magnificent brute strength that one must admire, owing to the feeling of kinship overly strong at the moment?

It is conceded willingly and with enthusiasm that London's speech is powerful, that he goes straight to the point, that he deals with men and things as they are. Could he not give us that force, that virility, without the brutality which seems a salient part? Other writers have written strong books, their intensity carrying one breathlessly from cover to cover; their strength and directness calling upon the keenest emotions of the reader.

Do we want an American Zola to show us the unlovely side of ourselves? Granted that "women squealing like pigs under the butcher's knife" is strong, is that the kind of strength we want that our fiction may be enjoyable? It is true that London's style has the force and directness of Kipling's, the writer who never wastes a word, who gives you a chapter in one sentence. Kipling's strength, however, does not degenerate with brutality. He has, what London has not yet developed, a saving grace of tenderness in the inmost soul of him, which reads human nature to the core. The reasons for reading books are many; but certainly the book has not failed in its mission, whether an intentional one or not, which leaves the reader with better courage to make the desperate fight between good and evil which most of us wage in this warring experience called life. Brute force does not triumph at the end; the man in his primitive strength falls back helpless before the unconquered soul, whose indomitable spirit will not down, though body be broken.

It were a thousand pities if the "divine spark" which is undoubtedly Jack London's birthright should be dimmed in the lower levels. His strength, directness and purity of style will avail him nothing later on unless he finds the heart that beats in the midst of humanity. The analysts, who dissect one's innermost emotions and pry into the thoughts which might have been thought, are not the writers who appeal to full-lived men and women. They write for the introspectives, the motive-seekers, whose blood runs thin and cold in their veins.

Books have been written; and Gilbert Parker's "Right of Way" is one, where the interest holds to the last page. The desired qualifications are there, strength, directness, and more than all, a knowledge of the weakness and aspiration, the despair and hope of a man's soul, which catches at one's heart-strings and brings the tribute of a sigh and wish for something better in one's own ongoing.

Here is a man deliberately throwing away his soul, and then, given the chance, of fighting desperately against overwhelming odds to regain it. He comes from the battle broken and shattered, but triumphant, though victory is dearly won, and no reward follows. With such a book, the "red blood" has more than one opportunity to thrill, but beyond the thrill is the stimulus which comes from following the struggles of a fellow-being through the storm and stress of an existence sufficiently human to be possible. To find the right thing and hold fast to it, to face the "bludgeonings of chance," and not to be afraid, to stand firm against all opposition, is to possess a strength and force which is the best of incentives. It is a courage far greater than the brute force we are told is so admirable, and the man who is close to the animal shows us no way out of conditions with which we may be hopelessly struggling. The book which comes closest to us, thrill or no thrill, is the one which shows human nature as it is, and following the showing, points a way and gives an impetus to our own aspirations and the dire endeavor of daily life.

SAN FRANCISCO

American and European Plan. A Quiet Home. Centrally Located
GEORGE WARREN HOOPER, Lessee.

Poor San Francisco made her prayer,
 With a diffident, tremulous sigh,
 To a man who had promised to treat her fair,
 A big, dark man whom she called her Mayor,
 But he answered her plea with a vacant stare,
 And he winked the other eye.

Oh, the years we waste and the tears we waste,
 And the excellent things we planned,
 Belong to the trickster who knew how to lie,
 And now we knew that he knew how to lie,
 And we thoroughly understand.

The case of Attorney Hanlon, against whom one of the morning papers brought wrongful accusations, is a welcome variation of our usual forensic proceedings. The attorney is vindicated (that is very good news) for most of them are badly in need of vindication; the yellow press is sufficiently condemned—confusion to the yellow press! But Judge Troutt, delightful, urbane, rhetorical Judge Troutt! He may be a little shaky on probate, but in smooth oratory of the later classical or post-Ciceronian variety he has "few peers and no equals," as the Irish toast-master said of the late General Barnes. "Your respect for the honorable profession to which you belong, your respect for the Courts of Justice, as well as your innate moral sense, would restrain you from violating the solemn obligation you assumed when you were admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of our State many years ago," said Judge Troutt, and he never winked once.

One Gratiano managed to get himself shot in Oakland last week, and ended his life miserably in the Fabiola Hospital. Gratiano managed very badly. He should not have had the bad taste to possess a name of such merry significance if he could not make better use of it. A Gratiano dead and in Oakland. Why, the thing is absurd. He should be alive, fat, with creases of good humor in his cheeks. As well talk of a thin, teetotal Falstaff as of a dead Gratiano. It is an absurdity, a travesty not to be tolerated, and the Health Officer should be enjoined from signing a death certificate under that name.

Why should a professor of mechanics receive any more consideration than other people, and why should the President of the State University interfere and save a member of the faculty from the punishment which he would have had to undergo had he been merely an ordinary person? These questions, which are agitating the public mind at Berkeley, are not capable of a satisfactory answer. It appears to be another case of gross favoritism. If Professor Wright had not commonsense enough not to practice shooting in such close proximity to the college grounds, a little education will do him no harm in spite of his training as a specialist in mechanics. How unfortunate it is that the present regime at the University should always give the impression that there is one sauce for the goose and another for the gander?

So vermilion is to be the color of the buildings at Berkeley. It is a good idea. The place needs lots of blushing for, and as the President won't do it, it is just as well that the buildings should.

High doings in the Oakland literary set engage the attention of the public nowadays. Herman Whitaker has managed to get himself arrested for carrying concealed weapons, and his case furnishes a beautiful example of the consistency of the local police. The road which Whitaker had traveled is notorious for the number of violent attacks made on pedestrians; in fact, its reputation is so bad that the policeman who made the arrest declined to leave his beat to investigate the origin of a cry of murder which he had heard a few minutes before. He had no hesitation about arresting the writer, however. The moral appears to be that in traveling Oakland roads you must chose between being beaten to death and arrest.

..And so we are to have a combination of undertakers, grave-diggers, hack drivers, florists, and Methodist ministers, all for the purpose of putting an end to funerals on Sundays. A glance at this formidable list of employments shows the economic importance of the Grim Reaper. To abolish death would, like the abolition of alcohol, go a long way towards upsetting our trade arrangements. There seems to be some reason in this restriction of funerals on Sundays, apart from the fact that Sabbath burials tend to curate's sore throat.

Why do the Presbyterians build their new churches to look like financial institutions? Dr. Hemphill's Church would make an excellent Stock Exchange. It has all the qualities of squareness and solidity which should inspire confidence. The solidity of the Doctor's discourse may be epitomized in the structure, but a touch, a slight touch of grace would not be amiss in either. The new First Presbyterian church at Alameda is being constructed on similar lines, and would pass for a substantial bank. It is somewhat of a pity, for we have architects capable of beautiful work.

If ever a man deserved good luck it is George Sterling, and the fact that he has gained applause for his first volume of poems is one of those events which occasionally happen to brighten the gloom of this miserable world. He is a prince of good fellows, kind and modest, and possessed of genuine poetic force withal. It is pleasant to get away from the dirt and slime of our local life and find some quality which will give us a position in the world of men. If every one did as well for the State as its authors and artists, we should need no advertisement.

"We are carrying out the rules of the Civil Service, we are striving for purity," said the genial Mayor, as he flung out a number of trusted old servants of the public and thrust in his satellites. "Yes you are, like —" said the Devil, as he looked up wistful and eager. Seeing how fat the Executive was growing, and noting regretfully the evidences of his robust constitution, Satan retired discomfited, and worked off his feelings in banking his fires.

A diamond thief is said to be operating on the Oakland theatre boats. He must be a pretty bold sort of a thief, but I don't believe he can make anything. The Oakland theatre-goers travel in couples, and sit so close together that not even a pickpocket could get his hand between them. As for stealing a diamond stud out of a man's shirt bosom, that is pure nonsense—there is always something else in the way.

Oakland has passed its garbage ordinance. Amid a scene of confusion, such as that which marked the entrance of Charles I into the House of Commons, Citizen Evans protested against the rule of stinks. Dornin, however, as champion of the smells, set a policeman on Evans, and the latter talked back. Language and odors alike were worthy of the occasion.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 9

Really, don't you know, I am feeling quite flattered. I started in to tell you what I think of San Francisco, and San Franciscans, and how they could both be improved, and it seems to me that every one tumbles over the next fellow to follow out my ideas. I don't think that it is so much the News Letter as it is I, Travers. Even the public press, vulgar as it is, has accepted my ideas. The better class of Americans, if there is such, to say nothing of the residents of your town, always recognize quality and follow it and adore it, and since I am the better class, I think I may take some credit and allow the News Letter a little, that I have started the movement for the beautifying of your city. As soon as I had explained what my ideas were as to making your city pretty, your people got together and held a meeting, and really their zeal is commendable and most highly praiseworthy, and if I remain here a sufficiently long period of time, I think I can wake you chaps up. Of course they will call me into their councils and I shall tell these advocates of a city beautiful just what they should do. I can't say that I want to pose as a missionary out here, but really you have so many untamed Ingomars in your so-called social circles that I am doubtful if even English Parthenia could tame them to the point where they would recognize the necessity of not wearing fair leather shoes with a Tuxedo coat. It is all a question of ancestry. The forebears tell! I find out here amongst you folks scrupulous regard for the ancestry of horses and dogs, but when I try to find out who is who, why, no one knows. You have form, books and pedigree books, but I failed to make one of your prominent bankers understand the other day the value of De-bretons. Of course, I know that everything out West is crude and new. You have no antiquities, no good old families, and no halls or country-seats. Ivy on the walls out here is as much a stranger as is a fellow in decent society who eats his fish with his knife. By and by, if you will only settle down, I really think your charming women will make men out of you. Over in England, we say it takes four generations to breed a gentleman. I think in my own mind, I do really, that you ought to do it here in two generations. The first lot of youngsters should be learned that they can't eat with a knife or bite off the end of their soup spoon or call for champagne with the fish, or smoke on the streets when with ladies, or carry their gloves in their hands, or masticate gum in public, or leave the opera between acts to mingle the dram with the drama, or that a top hat can't be worn with a sack coat, and that Oxford shoes with ribbon bows is not the proper caper for full dress. That a Tuxedo coat is solely for a bachelor affair, and that a dress coat is imperative when you dine where ladies are present. That there is a holy commandment that you cannot wear jewelry with an evening suit any more than you could get Roger to give me my patent leather shoes in a squeaking condition; that cigarettes are simply an abomination for the smoking room, and only about two whiffs is permissible then; that scent on a man is unpardonable, and that the odoriferous effect of the hired barber chap is disgusting. When the first lot of your youngsters have learned these things, they will know a whole lot more than their fathers do, and I think that they would learn the second generation. Do you see? And the seconders would be half decent then, anyhow. Of course, I have not noted all the bad manners I have seen among your men, but I have suggested that the boy children be taught better, and I have noted a few of the coarsest, most obtrusive and unordered, as well as the most common, breaches. The really finer manners of my class can only be acquired after a long association with well-bred personages. I think you are a hopeless mess in this respect. You are too old to learn, don't you know? And I can't learn the whole lot of you, anyway. I am charmed with your San Francisco women. They are far ahead of your men in style and manners, and I am really half afraid of some of them, but the question of ancestry would save me anyway, and if I married an American, my ancestry would cut me off with a shilling. No, nothing serious, don't you know, in the matrimonial line about Travers.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

ALCAZAR—The Masqueraders. A splendid show.
CENTRAL—Quo Vadis. Good scenic effects.
FISCHER'S—The Beauty Shop. Continued success.
GRAND—David Harum. Quaint, pleasing.
ORPHEUM—Vaudeville. Strong program.
TIVOLI—When Johnny Comes Marching Home. Excellent.
COLUMBIA—A Chinese Honeymoon. Enjoyable.
LYRIC HALL—Rivela's Band. Good music.
CALIFORNIA—Eternal City. Fine production.
CHUTES—Vaudeville. Excellent.

At the Columbia, the "Chinese Honeymoon" is having a good run. The music has been likened to that of a three-ringed circus, and it is presumed that the author intended to be heard in all parts of the house. The loudness of the orchestration makes it necessary for the vocalists to strain themselves to be heard. Occasionally one of them gets the best of the orchestra. This must, under the circumstances, be a source of great satisfaction to the entire company. Fi Fi, the diminutive waitress at the hotel, is the life of the show. Mr. W. H. Clark (the Emperor Hang-Chow) has a voice in keeping with his stature. It is a cross between a megaphone and the baser notes of a syren. The stage setting is fine, and the Chinese elements in this play lend themselves very happily to beautiful effects. The "Samuel Pineapple" of Mr. Henshaw is good.

"The Masqueraders," as given by the Alcazar Company, is the strongest piece of acting in the city this week. The first and second acts lead up to the climax in the third, and the fourth is an anti-climax. The third act is tremendous in power. The play is one that makes for good moral tone, and there is just enough of the salacious in the dialogue to give zest to the performance. I have rarely seen anything better than the scene between David Remon, Sir Brice and Dulcie Larondie. Volley after volley of applause greeted this gifted trio, and it was well deserved praise. Harry Hilliard's "Montague Lushington," a most difficult part, was well carried. In the part of Eddie Remon, Mr. Maher showed a wonderful faculty for character work. Mr. Maher is a constant surprise. He is most versatile. The work of Miss Block (Dulcie) where she arraigns the immorality of man, is a piece of sustained emotional acting that stamps her as a star of the first magnitude. In the last act (which, by the way, is an incongruous end) Mr. Durkin falls a little short of the character. He is slightly too lachrymose. This should not be subject to great criticism, as the part calls for unusual emotional power and it is doubtful if the lines will permit any other construction.

* * *

David Rossi's dramatization of Mr. Hall Caine's "The Eternal City" is the go at the California. Any of the Liebler productions may be depended upon as first class. It is a pity, however, that the stage limitations are such that this play cannot be given better setting. The California is a poor place for a good show.

* * *

"The Beauty Shop" continues a prime favorite at Fischer's Opera House. Miss Helen Russell's singing is appreciated by the large audiences. Peachey is singing into popularity, and Georgia O'Ramey is a great favorite. This little girl is very clever. Allan Curtis's enunciation is improving, and it is hoped that by 1905 he will be able to speak plainly enough to be heard in the fifth row, back. Kolb and Dill continue to excite the risibilities of enthusiastic audiences. It occurs to me that it is a mistake to substitute a new play for "The Beauty Shop" while it is still enjoying such prosperity.

"David Harum" and its quaintness as a story or play, still holds large audiences at the Grand Opera House. While this play is not given with much artistic finish, yet it is most enjoyable, and Mr. N. H. Turner is a conscientious, painstaking actor.

* * *

At the Orpheum, the Rays, Johnny and Emma, are easily the king-pins. They hold their friends, and are making new ones daily. There is a roar of laughter from first to last. The rest of the company is a fine one and very evenly balanced.

* * *

Rivela's Band at Lyric Hall should draw a large crowd to-night. The Sextette renders Lucia in a fine verve, eliciting salvos of applause. San Francisco has an unusual opportunity of showing its appreciation of fine musical talent. Rivela was formerly Ellery's leader, and has culled the best of talent from the aggregation formerly under Ellery.

* * *

Johnny keeps right on marching at the Tivoli with no abatement in popularity. The house is crowded nightly, and there is the usual enthusiastic audience to welcome Hartman and the rest.

* * *

Wilton Lackaye has scored an enormous success with "The Pit" in Chicago. The receipts at the Garrick Theatre have averaged over $1300 a performance and the length of the engagement has been extended from the four weeks originally booked to nine. William A. Brady will form a second company to tour other large cities, while Mr. Lackaye divides his time between Chicago and New York. "The Pit" is coming to San Francisco.

* * *

Following "Quo Vadis" at the Central will come a revival of "East Lynne." Herschel Mayall will have the part of Archibald Carlyle, George P. Webster will portray Sir Francis Levison, and Eugenia Thais Lawton will sustain the dual role of Lady Isabel and Madame Vine.

* * *

Again the Alcazar offers a play new to San Francisco. The romantic comedy, "A Colonial Girl," to be given next week, is by Grace Livingstone Furniss (author of "Mrs. Jack"), and Abbey Sage Richardson. It was originally played with great success at the Lyceum, New York, with Virginia Harned and E. H. Sothorn as the central figures in its delightful love story.

* * *

"When Johnny Comes Marching Home" will enter upon the fourth week of a most successful run at the Tivoli Opera House Monday evening. During the extended run of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," the full strength of the Tivoli company is preparing for an elaborate revival of "The Gypsy Baron." This romantic comic opera by Johann Strauss will be staged in a manner hitherto unparalleled in San Francisco.

Ned Monroe, Harry Mack and Nellie Lawrence will re-appear at the Orpheum this coming week. They will open in their sketch entitled "The Two Senators," by Charles Howitz. The two Silvas, Stuart Barnes, Robertus and Wilfredo, Johnny and Emma Ray, and "Casey, the Fireman," will complete the bill.

* * *

"Quo Vadis" holds the boards at the Central to crowded houses. The scenic effects are exceptionally fine.

* * *

Guy Wilson and Nellie Daly-Moran promise an amusing comedy skit at the Chutes this coming week in "Who—Me?" They are said to be very clever entertainers. Dervin a renowned ventriloquist and mimic, will make his first appearance here, as will also a juvenile soprano, Florence Rayfield, known as "the little Patti." Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs, and Montague's Cockatoo Circus, and Koplín, Fowler and Koplín, society acrobats, will appear for the last times.

* * *

"Roly Poly," a new musical comedy and a satire on local society, is to follow "The Beauty Shop" at Fischer's Theatre on February 8th. It has an interesting and cleverly executed plot, with an atmosphere of jocality and song that drifts from the race track and south of Market to the final act on Nob Hill. Joseph Arthur's latest melodrama, "Lost River," will be the programme at the Grand Opera House the week beginning to-morrow matinee.

* * *

Weber and Fields and their entire New York company, which includes Lillian Russell, Ross and Fenton, Louis Mann, Peter F. Dailey, will commence a two weeks' season Monday night February 8th. During this engagement there will be Sunday night performances and Wednesday and Saturday matinees. The prices will be $2, $1.50, $1, 75 cents and 50 cents.

* * *

The next Columbia attraction will attract much attention, as it is a joint starring engagement of Louis James and Frederick Warde. These welcome players will appear in an entirely new vehicle under the title of "Alexander the Great." It is a spectacular drama, and six massive scenes are utilized as settings for this story culled from the history of ancient Babylonia.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Paul Gerson begs to state that in response to numerous requests he will on January 1st open a Juvenile Department in connection with his School of Acting, and has secured the services of a teacher of experience specially qualified for this work, Miss Lillian E. Muscio. One of the features of the department will be a dancing class in charge of Signora Matildita. In order that each one may have his or or address the Juvenile Department of the Paul Gerson proper time and attention, the class will be limited to twenty-five. Mr. Gerson will give his personal attention to every pupil. For terms, etc., call on School of Acting, Native Sons' building, 414 Mason street. The fourth of the series of matinee performances by students at Paul Gerson's School of Acting will take place at the California Theatre on Friday afternoon, February 12th. A brilliant programme will be presented. The school will be assisted by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, this institution hereafter joining its artistic interests with the School of Acting.

THE LOOKER-ON

Emile Bruguere is a militant knight. A wanderer from Germany casts a too-admiring glance upon his lady love, and—smash!—another haughty foreigner has been rolled in the dust. Whether the result will be an exchange of cards and a meeting in the early morn beneath the cypress trees, remains for time to develop. Bruguere's action is of course highly justifiable. Any man who looks too long or with too much open admiration upon what is another's is apt to get into trouble. Especially is this so at Monterey, where everything should be done with so much circumspection.

* * *

And as for Miss Shortridge, only the greatest sympathy can be expressed. Some unkind people—there are always the envious ones—have said they think she purposely egged on the row, so that she might be able to be in the reflection from the lime-light. Such a thought is unkind and unchivalrous. Moreover, it is so much the opposite of the inclinations of those who have heretofore made famous the young lady's family name that it is, of course, unworthy even a passing thought. The marriage of Mr. Bruguere and Miss Shortridge, it is now said, will be celebrated at an early date.

The young man is a very talented fellow. He will have a comfortable fortune, even if he is not interested in the hotel St. Francis, as was reported. Bruguere's money comes from his mother's interest in the Sather estate. She was a daughter of Pedar Sather, the banker.

* * *

No one has expressed particular surprise over the discovery that Lunstedt, Grand Secretary of the Native Sons, is a defaulter. His defalcation was in the very nature of things. He was repeatedly re-elected to office; he kept his end up among the boys, and thereby spent more than he could afford; he was a good fellow to country members, and he was endowed by nature with a very weak character. No one ever thought of subjecting his accounts to rigid scrutiny, and he was enabled to continue his thefts undiscovered for years. The trouble with many fraternal societies is that they seem to consider it a reflection upon a financial officer to expert his books. The way to crime is made easy, so that the defaulter's tender feelings may not be hurt. Of course, Lundstedt will not be prosecuted, and thereby an additional premium will be placed on defalcation. I wonder if the Native Sons will risk hurting the haughty financial honor of other fiduciary agents, and will actually insist on balancing their accounts? If anything wrong is discovered, "mum" will be the word.

The Lundstedt affair is so similar to McKowen's and McKowen's was so similar to Widber's, and his was so similar to Billy Vice's, and his was so similar to Billy White's of the Board of Works, one could but string out the names of the town's defaulters until a column was filled. All of them were "good fellows"; all of them went the pace; in every instance they were implicitly trusted; and in every instance, also, the very last men to suspect them were those from whom they stole. In all of these instances, also, it was shown that the defaulters had followed the very same plan. They kept false accounts, made forced balances, and thus imposed upon those who were supposed to watch them. Their books were experted in perfunctory fashion, and it was not until long continued escape from discovery had made them careless that they were found out. Were not their superiors, or the people whose duty it was to watch them, almost as culpable as the thieves, in making the thefts possible by long-continued neglect of duty in carelessly passing over doctored accounts, or taking for granted what should have been proved beyond peradventure? Let me give you a tip. Always watch the man who handles the money—particularly when he is a "good fellow."

* * *

The press reports say Livernash will hold his seat. That is characteristic of Livernash. He certainly tries to hold anything he ever gets his hands on. But what has become of our little Willie Wynn? He is said to be in Congress, representing the Fifth District of California, but no one out here can prove it. A terrible suspicion has spread in political circles that old man Cannon has suppressed our little Willie. There may be some truth in the rumor, for anyone who has met Wynn when his talking machinery was in prime condition knows that he could not be suppressed with anything less than a cannon.

The Supervisors' "roast" of the Board of Health fell rather flat. It deserved a conservative reception. Law-abiding citizens will, of course, support the Supervisors, or other public officials, when they are honestly trying to prevent or undo something illegal, but the Supervisors failed to point out anything illegal in the actions of the Board of Health. The latter Board acted in violation of the law in making some appointments but the Supervisors did not discover the illegalities. They simply made a general, condemnatory statement. I wonder if it is possible that because Supervisor D'Ancona's mother-in-law lost her job as matron; that Supervisor Payot's son-in-law lost his job as Sanitary Inspector; that Supervisor Braunhart's protege lost his job as patrol-driver; that Supervisor Alpers expects to get his brother-in-law appointed to poundmaster, and that Supervisor Brandenstein is in training for the office of Mayor—I wonder if these separations of relatives from the public crib really had anything at all to do with the righteously indignant attitude of the controlling elements in the Board?

Martin Egan, late of Oakland, will be heard from again soon. He is out in Japan or China somewhere, camped at a telegraph station, waiting for things to happen. Martin was down in Manila for the Associated Press, but was ordered to the front as soon as the rumors of war began to assume the tone of probabilities. He should prove a valuable news-man in the event of hostilities. During the China-Japanese war, Egan, who was working on a local paper, went to the Orient on a venture, and sent back some of the best stuff printed about the war. Upon his return home, he went to New York, where he was given a splendid position with the big news company. Then he went to Manila to relieve a correspondent who fell out with the army push down there, and now Egan is again at the cannon's mouth. Yet it is said that nothing good comes out of Oakland.

Another man bound for China and Japan is Harold Bolce, who was also a local newspaper man. His purpose is to discuss commercial conditions in the Orient for several Eastern publications. The eyes of the world are now turned toward the great and mysterious East, and any man who can tell an interesting tale of that wondrous land may find a ready market for his wares.

Under the new regime, the City and County Hospital will be under the direction of an interne, elected as resident physician by the other internes. This is the most impracticable scheme ever devised in the interests of "economy." It has caused astonishment among the medical fraternity, and those acquainted with conditions at the hospital, and with the management of large hospitals in other cities, criticise it as being next to criminal in the opportunities it presents for errors that will result in the deaths of those unfortunates whose lives will depend upon the judgment of a lot of medical students. It is the duty of a resident physician to give personal attention to every case in a hospital, by directing the nurses and the assisting physicians to continue the course of treatment prescribed by the visiting chiefs. The "resident" is also frequently required to undertake capital surgical cases arising from errors of other doctors, or that may be brought in from the streets. The County Hospital receives hundreds of emergency cases every month. All these patients need the immediate care of competent physicians and surgeons. With a competent medical man at the head of the institution, the unfortunates may have some chance for their lives. But what will happen when a hospital with 500 patients is absolutely controlled by a lot of boys just out of college, without any experience whatever, and who are empowered by the Board of Health to elect their most popular fellow as resident physician? Will physicians of any standing, who may assist at the hospital, submit to the direction of a youngster who is always overcome by sickness at the sight of blood, and who loses his nerve when he knows he has a hard case? The surprising thing is that a man of Dr. Ward's executive ability should have ever consented to the new plan of running the hospital. But that is not the only surprising thing at the City and County Hospital. Elbert and McQuade are also surprises. The former was superintendent once before. Those who were forced to meet him in that capacity have not forgotten it. In a few months, at the longest, Dr. Ward's Board of Health will certainly have cause to remember that they were responsible for reinstating him. As to McQuade! Language is powerless in this instance. His is the most inexcusable appointment charged against the present administration. He was known for years as the shadow and bodyguard of Martin Kelly. He deserted his old protector to follow Schmitz; not that he loved Kelly less, but that he wanted a job more. It is an even bet that Dr. Ward never saw McQuade. If he did, and then voted for his appointment, further comment is useless.

Dollmann's Cafe, at 328 Pine street, has been reopened by Mr. A. Dollmann. This popular place has been completely refitted and is being run in first-class style. It is conveniently situated, opposite the Stock Exchange, and enjoys the patronage of all lovers of good cheer. Mr. Dollmann is a caterer of ability, and his main claim to popularity is the exquisite knowledge of pleasing his patronage. A feature of the new place is a mercantile lunch served from 11 a. m. to 2 p. m. Here for 25 cents one can have the best the market affords, including refreshment. In fact, a better quick lunch could not be desired.

Pears'

Why is Pears' Soap—the best in the world, the soap with no free alkali in it—sold for 15 cents a cake?

It was made for a hospital soap in the first place, made by request, the doctors wanted a soap that would wash as sharp as any and do no harm to the skin. That means a soap all soap, with no free alkali in it, nothing but soap; there is nothing mysterious in it. Cost depends on quantity; quantity comes of quality.

Financial Review.

The Passing of Whitaker Wright.

It is hardly correct to allude to the ill-fated Whitaker Wright as a "notorious promoter of wild cat enterprises" in connection with his tragic death in London, following on the heels of his conviction and sentence to penal servitude. "Wild catting" was a sin of his early life when operating in California some twenty years ago, at a period when the Golden State was just far enough away from the Eastern financial centers to afford safer opportunities for milking the public than it does in these days of more rapid communication. There was nothing of the wild cat order about the Lakeview Consols. These Westralian mines were inordinately rich, and for years their bullion product was sufficient to justify the high prices which ruled for the shares. Where Wright and his associates make the mistake, ending with a smash in the market which enriched a bear clique and brought financial ruin and disgrace upon the management, was in not keeping as closely in touch with conditions in the mine as he should have done for the protection of himself and friends. For months before the end he was operating over a loaded magazine and unwittingly went to his fate. His pride doubtless kept him silent upon matters which would have done nothing to help him out, and would only have made him a target for the sneers of a class who never forgive some phases of the manipulator's art which, when ignored, lead eventually to ruin for all, swift and ir retrievable. The break in the Lakeview Consols which demoralized the shares was brought about by a steady and powerful bear movement of weeks in duration. That Wright was the chief sufferer showed that he was not in the bear camp, and that the bear raid was successful showed that its manipulators knew more about the true condition of the mine than he did, until too late, and then all the money he and his friends could raise was insufficient to bolster up the concern tottering upon its foundation. The financial frauds which are treated judicially on this side of the Atlantic, do not prevail in Great Britain, where justice strikes all the harder when the accused belongs to a class the members of which are expected, from their wealth or position, to know more than the criminal sprung from a lower grade of humanity. There was something of the heroic about the death of this man, dying as he did without a word of recommendation and with sealed lips in regard to matters concerning his latter day experiences in London, which bore so heavily against him. These will now lie buried in the secrecy of his tomb. The attempt to implicate other members of the directorate in criminal conduct by a portion of the English Radical press, can only be regarded as a disgraceful exhibition of a discount to the low methods of pot-house politicians, which some years ago would have been quickly suppressed by an outraged public opinion.

The majority of the directors of the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company do not like the attitude assumed by Mr. Miller, who has the laudable ambition to preside over the affairs of the company. We do not know Mr. Miller personally, but from the fact that he at least can boast of an intimate acquaintance with the manufacture of gas, and that his general reputation for business probity and experience is good, his election should certainly be ensured by a large majority of votes at the coming election; that is, if they have any regard for their pockets. There is every evidence now on hand to convince the most skeptical that any change in the managerial department will not be for the worse. After permitting the impression to get abroad by the publication from time to time in all the leading papers of the city that the President's salary was $25,000 per annum, they now condescend to enlighten people on the subject, to the effect that it is only $18,000 per annum. This reduction in figures is satisfactory even if only in a small degree, being enough to keep the wolf from the door of the lucky incumbent. That, however, has no bearing upon the promised contest for control, and the hope can only be reiterated that the coming election will result in a sweep which will put the right men for once in the right place.

Pine-St. Market. The Comstock Market is a puzzle to dealers just now, its actions being diametrically opposed to the news from the mines. It looks very much as though the bears were being rounded up for more punishment, although the growling element on the street will escape as usual. Talk is their capital, fortunately for the market, and talk is but a slow method of depressing prices when it is not backed by money. That the market is guided by a strong hand, working toward some definite issue, is apparent to all acquainted with the ways of old-time manipulators. They are evidently working some coup, encouraging as they are in every way bear attacks which are working as usual into their hands, and to the injury of the unfortunates on the outside who swallow anything they hear as Gospel. Probably some light will be thrown upon the matter before long. During the week Ophir was placed again upon the list of dividend payers, after a lapse of twenty years. The amount paid was 25 cents per share, with more to hear from.

At the annual meeting of the Giant Powder Company the old officers and directors were re-elected as follows: C. C. Bemis, president; L. F. Montegale, vice-president; C. H. Phillips, T. B. Pheby, T. B. Bishop, James Smith, and C. H. Crocker. During the past year twelve dividends of 50 cents per share were paid, amounting to $120,000. Profit and loss

DEATH OF CHARLES LYONS.

The business community of San Francisco has suffered a distinct loss in the death of Mr. Charles Lyons of San Francisco. Mr. Lyons was a gentleman of splendid presence, and was well liked by all who had the advantage of his acquaintance. He was a native of London, and he had the cultured manner of the best citizens of the English capital.

Mr. Lyons leaves a large family and thousands of friends who will mourn his loss. Although sixty-four years old, at his demise, he had the appearance of a man much younger in years, and his end is mourned as an untimely one.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

The more recent of the foreign and domestic entanglements which our self-sufficient President has involved the United States are a purpose in high political and commercial life to enjoin the Treasury from paying to the alleged Republic of Panama the bonus of $10,000,000 on the ground that it would be illegal; evidence that negotiations were deliberately broken off with Colombia for a Panama Canal treaty so as to accomplish a pre-arranged scheme for the secession of Panama and the disruption of the Colombian Republic; the creation of the office of Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of Panama, and the despatching of such representative to Panama, before Congress had conferred the necessary legal authority; the setting of unlawful precedents in all directions; the severe rebuke and vehement denunciation of the President by Yale professors and leading citizens of New Haven for being false to his great trust and defying law and trampling upon the rights of the weak; the insult to the Chief Justice and Justices of the Supreme Court by obliging them to play second fiddle to representatives of obscure and unimportant foreign Governments at the President's reception given in honor of the court; the order from the President that hereafter representatives of foreign powers will be required to appear at White House receptions decked out in all the gold lace and glittering uniforms that they are permitted to wear by virtue of their office, and the announcement in spirit, if not in words, that the Constitution and laws of the United States were never intended to circumscribe or tie the hands of a wise, brave and far-seeing statesman as is President Roosevelt. But these are not all the "strenuous" things our go-as-you-please Chief Executive has accomplished recently for his subjects abroad and at home.

The situation in the Far East is as dangerous to the peace of the nations in interest as a pine mansion would be with a dozen children playing with matches and gunpowder in the rubbish room. That war is inevitable no observer of events doubts, but where the first shock of battle will be felt is a problem which may be solved at any moment. Diplomatic negotiations between Japan and Russia have reached the point of honest pretention of the one candidly telling the other that it hasn't a particle of faith in the word, promise or integrity of the other. And a foolish Russian Prince, who is in a position of official and social life at the Czar's court, observed some days ago that "it will never do to recognize Japan as a really civilized nation and establish corresponding relations with her as are maintained between the nations of Europe." This insane thrust at Japan has stirred all classes of Japanese to a pitch of indignation that only war will satisfy. Meanwhile, Japan and Russia are rushing preparations for armed hostilities. China is exerting all her influence to postpone, at least, an armed conflict until her own internal affairs are upon a stronger footing. However, the Peking Government has given Russia to understand that in the event of war China will immediately place 200,000 of her best soldiers at Japan's disposal. England and the United States have assured Russia that they shall expect all the advantages in Manchuria that their treaty of commerce with China provides for, and the unqualified position of these two Anglo-Saxon nations in the premises is the one thing that is causing Russia to hesitate to cross swords with Japan. On the other hand, by accepting such a treaty, the United States and England recognize China's jurisdiction over Manchuria, but which is in fact under the jurisdiction of Russia by forced occupation. That is to say, the United States and England have purchased something of China, but which is in possession of Russia. Japan proposes to war upon Russia for something quite foreign to the commercial interests of the two great Anglo-Saxon nations, but such war would, if Japan won, reinstate China in Manchuria, and allow the Peking Government to deliver the goods to the United States and England as per commercial treaty. It follows, hence, that the sympathy, if not something far more substantial, of America and Great Britain will be found on Japan's side, for, and only for the reason that there will be "money in it" for them. It is pretty well understood in diplomatic circles that for the last month, anyway, every move of Japan had the approval of the Washington and London Governments before it was made. And it is also believed that it is up to Russia either to fight or agree to withdraw from Manchuria.

A new issue has arisen in far Eastern affairs. Japan has adroitly taken possession of the Strait of Korea, and under more favorable circumstances the move would be considered a sufficient cause for a declaration of war by Russia. The Strait is so located that shore and island batteries will give Japan immense strategic advantages in a general way, and in particular as to a long stretch of Chinese, Korean and Manchurian coast line; besides, with the Strait in possession, or rather commanded by Japanese guns, Port Arthur loses much of its offensive and defensive importance to Russia, to say nothing of coaling and commissary stations for Japan, which the Strait will afford close to and between the main land of China, Korea and Manchuria and Japan. Japan has not taken possession of the Strait as a temporary military necessity, but to hold for all time. No doubt Japan would not have made such a move had it not been secretly approved by at least China, if not by Korea as well, and if by Korea it becomes very clear that reports of Korea's hostility are put out to mislead Russia. In this connection it should not be forgotten that there is a racial and religious thread running through Japanese, Chinese and Koreans, and that blood is thicker than water in Asia as well as in Europe and America.

Advices from the Latin American States through commercial avenues are not reassuring as concerns the future of our trade and traffic with those countries. The bitter feeling against the United States which the shabby treatment of the Republic of Colombia by the Washington Government engendered, is growing and spreading to all classes of people. Even in high social life the "Yankee" feels a coldness and stiff politeness which is irritating, if nothing less. It is said that Spanish and German influences are adding fuel to the fire for the purpose of securing the commerce hitherto flowing to the United States. It is reported also that European creditors of the South and Central American Republics, as well as of commercial companies, have given assurance that great leniency would be extended if the major portion of the trade interchange with the United States is diverted to Europe. The policy of the Washington Government in the Panama affair seems to be a breeder of anything but favorable commercial relations between us and our sister Republics of Spanish America.

Sir Conan Doyle is renewing his attempt to enter Parliament through a Scottish constituency, having accepted the Unionist invitation to contest the Hawichburghs. Three years ago he tried for Edinburgh and was beaten—by a publisher, too. He has a stiff fight before him against one Thomas Shaw, a good scrapper. I suggest he call on Shedlock Bones and have him crack the combination. Conan Doyle's latest stories are so flat that the infusion of politics might gingerize them.

WE ARE IN OUR NEW QUARTERS

BY THE AUTOCRANK

There has been so much talk about beautifying San Francisco that it is time the Autocrank should have a word or two to say. The gentlemen who intend to improve the appearance of San Francisco could make a good beginning by introducing a little of their influence with the Board of Public Works and get them to pave Market street from the Ferry to Second street. Our main entrance to the city is a disgrace; with immense cobble-stones projecting in uneven layers, ruining many fine horses, and wearing on the axles of expensive vehicles—horseless and otherwise, and giving our visitor the impression, as he rides up Market street for the first time, that the whole city is in the same condition. A few dollars expended on this particular street would be greatly appreciated by the down-town merchants, as well as by those who have the best interests of the city at heart, and wish our guests to attain the best impression possible.

Automobiles as well as carriages are now being used in great numbers by sight-seers, and the routes covered by the chauffeurs on their "seeing San Francisco" trips are over certain streets and avenues. Invariably the visitor is taken along Golden Gate avenue from Market to Van Ness. In this locality, and even further on, the avenue is in a frightful condition. Then again our Van Ness avenue, the visitor is driven to view our grandest boulevard; here, again, especially between Eddy and Geary, the avenue is simply frightful; at the street crossings one is compelled to be strapped to the seat of his carriage or automobile to prevent being thrown out. The above are only three instances which I care to mention at this writing, but they are the most important for the street department to consider for repairs—which certainly ought to be attended to immediately; if not for the benefit of citizens, then it should be done to change the impression that is being taken abroad by the visitors of San Francisco.

To think that the demands for space in the enormous Madison Square Garden could not be met, at the greatest of all shows given to one particular line of industry, seems incredible, but such was the case at the big automobile show held in New York this week. Every available foot of ground in the big colosseum was occupied, and the show was one of the grandest successes ever held in America.

The big manufacturers could not show one-quarter of their models, and the majority less than half of them.

One hundred and eighty-five exhibitors made displays (15 of which were foreign) showing the enormous growth of the trade in the United States.

The attendance was the largest of its kind ever congregated at any exhibit given in Madison Square, the gate receipts far surpassing all expectation, and over $30,000 was taken in for rent of floor space.

The daily press of New York devoted several pages daily to it, greater space even than has ever been given a famous horse-show, and has done everything possible to promote this industry.

The big hotels of the metropolis were filled with

KNOX (Waterless) 2 Cylinder Touring Car

We have just received our first car load of the 1904 model KNOX (waterless) Touring Cars, both single and double cylinder types which are now on view at our show rooms where we would be pleased to receive you and demonstrate their superior qualities and simplicity.

The KNOX (waterless) GOSOLINE AUTOMOBILES are known the world over for their simplicity, easy operation, durability and easy riding. We are always glad to demonstrate the above to any one.

show visitors from all parts of the country, the enthusiasts were there to see all makes exhibited under one roof, affording them an opportunity to select a machine to their liking.

Such a show in San Francisco, even on a smaller basis, would afford the Western public an opportunity to become acquainted with the horseless vehicle and undoubtedly increase the profits of local dealers 100 per cent this year over that of last.

The New York Sun, in speaking of the show, has the following to say:

"Having started from 'scratch' about five years ago, allowing the mechanics in other nations of the world handicaps of from 1 to 4 years' prior start, the automobile industry of the United States has quite caught up. It has closed all intervening gaps and is now running with the 'leading bunch' on terms of even competition in the race for commercial supremacy. The fourth annual automobile show that opened in Madison Square Garden last night leaves no doubt about this. The great exhibition building is almost packed with big and little motor vehicles that equal in up to date appearance, general style and finish, the best of the foreign made cars, and that the American machines are the equal in efficiency has been amply demonstrated. This fact of the American manufacturer having caught up with the leaders in the industry abroad is the most prominent, important and interesting one revealed by the fourth annual show. The American manufacturers are no longer at school in the college of the European industry—1903 was their senior year. The present show is their commencement exercise. They have learned the foreign methods and the ideas that inspire them. They are employing them to a considerable extent, but there are abundant signs that the American industry has entered upon an independent career, which will no longer be hampered by servile imitation."

Mr. Fred A. Jacobs, one of the most prominent and popular automobilists on the Coast, who for the past two years has been connected with the National Automobile Company, has secured the exclusive agency for the Rambler automobile in Northern California. Mr. Jacobs has leased the large building at 10th and Market streets, formerly occupied by Thomas H. B. Varney & Co., and will use these handsome quarters for salesrooms and garage of the "Rambler." 1904 models of the Rambler touring cars, delivery wagons and runabouts will be exhibited at these quarters on and after February 15, 1904.

The 4-cylinder Toledo of 1904—"The Mile a Minute car."

A large number of automobile enthusiasts took advantage of the nice weather last Sunday and made runs along the Bay. A party consisting of Mr. Richard Mier, Mr. J. J. Spieker, Mr. Charles C. Moore, Mr. E. E. Stoddard, Mr. George Cameron and Mr. H. B. Taylor and guests, in their Winton touring cars left the city on the 9 a. m. boat to Oakland, taking different routes to San Jose, where a stop was made for luncheon at the Vendome Hotel, and a most enjoyable afternoon spent.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Marsh made a trip to San Jose last week in their French Arrow. While this was largely in the nature of a trial for the new machine, the course was covered in an unusually short space of time. The return trip was made in less than record time, although the road was very heavy.

On Sunday, Mr. H. C. Tilden and family joined a large number of automobilists with their French Arrow, in the usual Sunday trip to San Jose.

Mr. Thomas Magee has just brought to this city his French Renault Touring Car. Mr. Magee is one of the well-known drivers of San Francisco, but when he went East and took a few rides through Central Park and around New York City in Peter Martin's Renault Touring Car, he immediately possessed himself of this fine car. The Renault has the same engine as the Pierce Arrow Touring Car, both manufacturers purchasing their engines from the De Dion people. Mr. Magee will make his headquarters with the Mobile Carriage Company, the French automobile house on the Coast.

Mrs. Langtry, during her stay in the city, took many automobile rides in one of the elegant gasoline cars of the Mobile Carriage Company. While this lady appreciates speed when driving, yet she frequently reminded the chauffeur to "go a little slower, please," in viewing the sights of the Golden Gate.

In a letter recently received by the Pioneer Automobile Company from Mr. E. P. Brinegar, who recently attended the New York Automobile Show, we are apprised of the fact that several hundred Wintons were sold at the Show during the week. Mr. Brinegar visited the Winton factory at Cleveland, on his way to New York, also the Oldsmobile factory at Detroit, and in speaking of these plants, Mr. Brinegar seemed confident in the belief that the Oldsmobile and Winton people are in a position to make immediate deliveries, owing to their late improved facilities. Mr. Brinegar expressed himself as being more than pleased with the appearance of the two new models of Oldsmobiles, which will be on exhibition at the Pioneer Automobile Company's new garage sometime between the 1st and 15th of March. A new 1904 Winton Touring Car has arrived at the Pioneer Automobile Company's Garage, where it is attracting considerable attention.

Mr. Douglas Watson, who for the past eight months has been running a St. Louis Runabout, has just purchased a new 1904 St. Louis tonneau. Mr. Watson stated that he is very much pleased with this car, having completed several successful runs around the Bay, and on account of its extra light weight and great power has decided to take it to Europe with him next month. A carload of these new machines has arrived here.

The Jones-Corbin car which arrived a few days ago by express, has created a great deal of favorable comment, it being unquestionably the Frenchiest little car on the market. It is equipped with forward motors and double chain drive, and other French features. It is said this sporty little machine has wonderful power, and is one of the swiftest light cars on the market.

The well-known automobile experts and repairers, Lew T. Andrews and James Kuwan, have taken temporary quarters at 18 Fell street, phone South 394. They expect to have one of the best equipped repair shops in the West, when they are permanently located, and will notify the automobile public as soon as they are fitted up. Until then they can be found at the above address, and will give all work intrusted to them full attention. They are skilled workmen, and have had experience with all prominent makes of American and many foreign cars, and will undoubtedly do well in their new venture.

PIERCE ARROW TOURING CAR (French) $2,650.

1. It has a French engine and is essentially a French car.
2. The manufacturer in France pays a revenue on each horse power of engine, consequently all French engines are undervalued. The Arrow Touring Car 16 H. P. French will develop 25 H. P. American standard.
3. A horse power for each 75 pounds weight. It has lightness and strength. Easy on tires.

Political

The nominating of a Presidential candidate is creating but little excitement in Republican circles, but the Democrats are excited, and warring as though they had some chance of electing the man they may name, and would all get Cabinet positions as a result. While Hearst is getting the politicians in line very satisfactorily, he is having a hard time with the Labor vote, and even if he holds it until after the St. Louis convention, it will cost him hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Engravers' and Printers' Unions threaten him with a strike unless he consents to have his comic supplement re-engraved in every city in which he publishes a paper, and although he established the Los Angeles paper to help them fight Otis of the Times, they insist that he shall concede their demands, which means a loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year to him. If he abandons the supplement the unions will charge him with being an enemy of labor equally as well as if he refuses to have it re-engraved, and Hearst, least of all the candidates for the Presidency, can afford to be charged with being an enemy of labor, since his friendship for labor unionism is his sole stock in trade, and his only claim for being a candidate at all.

Another embarrassment is the fact that the leaders of the unions have practically unanimously refused to go into politics as a body, or in other words to extend the Union Labor Party to the whole State. Hearst's plan was to have a State labor convention, I am told by one of his managers, to be held sometime in June, and indorse his candidacy for the Presidency. Such an action would, it is thought, force him on the Democratic party so far as California is concerned, and be a strong card to play before the National Convention. But all the leaders here say very sensibly that they do not believe in the unions as unions getting into politics, because if they do it would disrupt the organization beyond question, and the union strength is not enough to accomplish anything alone, without outside aid. The plan of a State Hearst labor convention has therefore been perforce abandoned.

The scandal in connection with the news-stand at the Ferry Building grows instead of disappears, and the public is now asking why the Commissioners do not call all bids off and ask for competitive bids from any one who cares to bid? One thing is certain, and President Charles Spear might as well understand it now as later, that if his brother-in-law gets the contract under existing circumstances, the public will believe rightly or wrongly that he, Spear, is personally and financially interested in the contract. Is Spear willing to stand in that position before the public of California? Does he want the Legislature to investigate the matter, as it surely will? Can George C. Pardee afford to have his political manager connected with a scandal such as this promises to be.

Insurance

Mr. Faymonville, vice-president of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, is about to leave for the Philippine Islands to investigate the conditions there from the point of view of an expert fire underwriter. If found favorable the Fireman's Fund will enter that field.

* * *

An item in the daily press on the question of fire insurance protection, but serves to call attention to the unreliability of the Bulletin's knowledge. The item is as follows: "Ex-Fire Commissioner M. H. Hecht has sent a communication to the Fire Supervisors, calling attention to what he considers one of the city's greatest needs—a salt water system for extinguishing flames. During the four years Mr. Hecht was on the board this was one of the things he continually advocated. His plan is to have a pumping station at the foot of Market street, with mains running up that thoroughfare for ten or twelve blocks. Cross pipes could carry the water on each side of Market street, as needed. Such a system would be inexpensive, and in time of fire would be a great help to the Fire Department. Were such a fire as the one that destroyed the Baldwin to start the conflagration could be easily extinguished, easily paying in a few minutes the cost of construction and operation. The water could be used for flushing the sewers and sprinkling the streets when not used for protecting property."

This idea of using salt water or ocean water for fire extinguishing purposes and for flushing sewers and sprinkling streets has been tried so often in other cities that experience has condemned it as undesirable. A scheme to provide a sufficient volume of water that is pure and not salt to fight conflagrations with would be endorsed by the Fire Underwriters to the last man.

Whether they would endorse a salt water scheme for fire protection is, in the light of past experience, very dubious.

* * *

Salt water has the corroding elements within itself which destroys mains, hose and machinery, and plus this, will do more injury to a stock of merchandise by the gallon than fresh water will do by the tun.

* * *

After the report of Fire Marshall Towe, in which he says that conditions are ripe for a conflagration in San Francisco, the question of a sufficient amount of water is timely.

* * *

It is not, however, within the province of the layman to discuss this. It belongs to the Fire Underwriters and the Fire Department, and when they demand added facilities the public will see to it that they are provided.

* * *

These discussions and suggestions are healthy at all times to the body corporate, for the sole reason that an ash pile represents so much lost material, and material being the product of labor, is wealth, and insurance only reimburses to the extent of the financial loss to the individual. The true loss is the labor and cannot be replaced.

* * *

It follows, then, that any proposition calculated to reduce the fire waste is, whether perfect or not, in the line of advancement.

The change predicted in the News Letter in the local affairs of the Conservative Life has been made. Mr. Fred Bennion has been promoted to the position of the Montgomery street branch of the company. It is understood that the promotion was granted to and won on merit.

* * *

The Adjuster, in its initial issue of the year, pays the News Letter insurance department a merited compliment, it quotes and credits almost an entire article published in the News Letter columns.

The question of national supervision of insurance is again up. H. R. 7054, introduced on the 11th ult. by Representative Morrell, is a bill for establishing a National Bureau of Insurance, and so forth. "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be, and is hereby established in the office of the Director of the Census and under his supervision a National Bureau of Insurance. The Director of the Census is authorized and directed to appoint a superintendent of insurance at an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars and two clerks at an annual salary of one thousand four hundred dollars each. The said superintendent and clerks shall devote their services exclusively to the business of said bureau. Said superintendent shall, under the direction of the Census, have supervision of all matters pertaining to insurance, insurance companies, and beneficial orders and associations doing business in the United States, or in any State, Territory, District, or insular possession thereof."

The part which is most interesting to fire and life insurance men is found in Sections 4 and 5, and which, stripped of verbiage, is:

"Sec. 4. That after the thirtieth day of June, nineteen hundred and four, no person, firm, or corporation shall be allowed to transact the business of insurance within any State, District, Territory or insular possession of the United States until he or it shall have previously filed with the superintendent of insurance aforesaid a duly authenticated certificate from the proper officer or Department of Government of such State, District, Territory or insular possession or of some foreign Government, showing that he or it has lawful authority to engage in and carry on such business under such Government and within its dominions.

"Sec. 5. That no letter, postal card, circular, pamphlet or publication concerning the business of insurance shall be carried in the mails outside the State wherein the same is issued, or delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier outside the State wherein the same is issued, unless the transaction of such business of insurance by the concern, person or persons professing or proposing to operate the same is authorized by the laws of the State, District, or Territory in which is located the principal office or place of business in and from which the same is issued. Any person who shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or who shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of this section, or who shall knowingly cause to be carried by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than five hundred dollars or by imprisonment for not less than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, for each offense. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section may be proceeded against by information or indictment and tried and punished in either the district at which the unlawful publication was mailed or in the one to which it is carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or at which it is caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it is addressed.

"Sec. 6. That any person who shall cause to be brought into the United States for the purpose of disposing of the same, or who shall cause to be carried from one State to another in the United States, any letter, postal card, circular, pamphlet or publication concerning any contract or policy of insurance issued by any concern or person which or who is not authorized to issue the same by the laws of any State, District or Territory, and which or who has not procured a certificate of authority to transact such business from the proper officers of any State, District or Territory shall be punishable for the first offense by imprisonment for not less than two years or by a fine of not less than one thousand dollars, or both, and for the second and after offenses by such imprisonment only."

This bill, if it becomes a law, will be the knell of fraudulent insurance schemes, and it is to be regretted that it is only aimed at this branch of business.

The Fireman's Fund Insurance Company has declared a regular quarterly dividend of $3 per share, being at the rate of 12 per cent per annum. On Monday ten shares of this stock sold on the street at $350 per share.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the California Insurance Co., the old officers and directors were re-elected as follows: L. L. Bromwell, president; M. A. Newell, vice-president; J. H. Anderson, secretary; A. Herman and F. W. Van Sicklen. A dividend of fifteen cents per share was declared, payable January 25th, amounting to $900.

The forty-first annual meeting of the shareholders of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company was held on the 19th inst., and the following directors elected: William J. Dutton, Thomas S. Chard, J. C. Coleman, John Bermingham, F. W. Lougee, John T. Wright, Charles R. Bishop, Bernard Faymonville, John H. Gardiner, W. H. Brown, and Arthur A. Smith. The statement of the condition of the company as of December 31, 1903, shows that the past year has been most successful. Assets increased $656,232.77; re-insurance reserve, $255,087.93; and net surplus $355,396.98. In 1900 total premiums received amounted to $1,900,000; last year they increased to $3,300,000.

The Board of Directors organized by re-electing the following officers: William J. Dutton, president; Bernard Faymonville, vice-president; J. B. Levison, second vice-president and marine secretary; Louis Weinmann, secretary; F. W. Lougee, treasurer; George H. Mendell, Jr., assistant secretary; Robert P. Fabj, general agent.

University Gossip

By the Undergraduate

A bran-new fish story is going the rounds at Stanford University. It has the merit of being true. A fish of bulky size and of presumed healthy appearance, was shipped to the campus the other day with a polite, written request that the thing of scales and fins be added to Dr. Jordan's already famous collection. The fish had been captured in strange waters, and was without a title, but it was earnestly expected that the learned Doctor would be able to name the species. Dr. Jordan happened to be en route from the East at the time, and in some unaccountable manner the specimen fell into the hands of the Chinese cook. Hop Sing took the note of explanation for a bill. He preserved that, but smothered the fish in gravy, and served it to the Jordan family for dinner. A few hours later, Professor Jenkins of the Zoology Department, who had been notified by card of its arrival, came to inspect the specimen. Investigation brought out the truth, and the Chinese cook was called upon to provide a solution of mustard and water for each member of the Jordan household. Professor Jenkins carried off the bones, but the species is still undetermined.

* * *

The Stanford Glee and Mandolin Clubs, which have been touring through twenty northern towns, at a considerable loss to individual pocketbooks, as it turns out, are back on the campus with a deficit of a cool thousand to their credit. The boys stand good for several hundred of this sum, through their deposits, and a final concert to be given at San Jose in February will probably supply a few extra dollars.

* * *

The faculty edition of the Chaparral, the Stanford comic bi-weekly, is to be brought out on February 10th. This is the first time in the history of the university that Dr. Jordan has stepped from the thorny path of literature to be a real live editor-in-chief of a funny paper. Dr. Jordan has been sojourning in the East, but he appointed his staff before leaving, and they, it is presumed, have most of the copy on file.

* * *

R. W. Smith, from the engineering department, who has gained some fame as a writer for the Ladies' Home Journal, is a crackerjack at children's verse. Kellogg and Jenkins, from the zoology laboratories, are famed in fish lore. Professor Kellogg has a scintillating sense of humor that may produce some startling effects. Newcomer and Alden, from the English Department, are purists in style, and are considered in anything but a jocular light by the students. Clark, from the Drawing Department, will be in his element in the illustrating line, and Snodgrass, despite an entomological correction, is a cartoonist of considerable ability. The art staff is to be assisted by Miss Mary Wellman, a professional artist, who is fortunately employed at the University. Registrar Elliot and Dr. Angell bring up the van-guard, good for almost anything.

Some of the students at Berkeley have been beating the street car companies recently by working rather an old dodge. It is in the "no change" racket. A student will hop on a car and hold out a ten or a twenty dollar gold piece to the conductor. In the majority of cases the conductor pleads no change, and the student maintains his rights, argues his case and generally rides free. But the other day a twenty dollar man was held up by a nifty young conductor, paid back in his own coin, so to speak. The student held out the gold piece, as usual; the conductor shook his head and requested him to get off, change the money and take the next car. The student grew loudly abusive at this point, and insisted on his rights. The conductor argued for awhile, then changing his tactics, made a lunge at the twenty and captured it.

"I'll change it," he said, reassuringly. It was a long time coming. The conductor hailed several cars on the down grade and made exchanges. He finally handed the now thoroughly incensed student nineteen dollars and ninety-five cents in dimes, nickels and pennies. The student was forced to ride ten squares out of his way in order to count it. The conductor, in telling the story afterwards, said: "And I shoved in all the queers I had, too."

TO IMPROVE THE PRESIDIO.

The bill introduced by Senator Perkins providing a considerable appropriation for the improvement of the Presidio reservation is one in which every citizen of San Francisco should feel a personal interest. Naturally the reservation is one of the most beautiful parks included within the limits of any city in the world, but little has been done to improve on nature's handiwork. Senator Perkins proposes that this neglect shall cease, and that the national Government shall undertake to beautify and develop the indubitable potentialities of this picturesque ground which so long has been suffered to lie fallow and grow up wild. The action of Senator Perkins is right in line with the movement undertaken by a number of our public-spirited citizens to beautify and improve the natural capabilities that belong to this peninsula that stands by the gate of two worlds on a site that for picturesqueness has no equal in any part of the world.

ANOTHER ABSENTEE PUBLISHER.

James Gordon Bennett, editor and proprietor of the New York Herald, is about to give for public use all of his property which lies between Broadway and the Boulevard Lafayette, north of 182d street, Fort Washington. To make arrangements for this park, which is to be dedicated to the memory of his father and which will contain a monument of James Gordon Bennett, the elder, he made his recent visit to New York. There is already a public monument on the property to commemorate one of the last important battles engaged in by Washington before he left Manhattan Island. The American Scenic and Historic Preservation Society started to raise funds for this monument and asked Mr. Bennett's permission to erect it on his property. He replied by offering to pay for the monument and since then has taken considerable interest in that section.

The park as proposed will be just across the Boulevard Lafayette from the upper end of Fort Washington Park, which lies west of the Boulevard Lafayette and extends from 171st to 183d streets.

The monument now on Mr. Bennett's property is at 183d street, and faces Fort Washington avenue. With the exception of Fort Tryon, the highest point on Manhattan Island is at this point.

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

Michael Joseph Barry, the poet, was appointed a police magistrate in Dublin. An Irish-American was brought before him, charged with suspicious conduct, and the constable, among other things, swore that he was wearing a Republican hat. "Does your honor know what that means?" inquired the prisoner's lawyer of the court. "I presume," said Barry, "that it means a hat without a crown."

Doctor—I know just what will help you. You must drink two cups of very strong tea every morning. Patient—I have done that for years. Doctor—Then you must stop at once.

If you ask a man for the date of his birth, he tells you only the year; if you ask a woman, she never tells you more than the day.

Young Woman (in a draper's shop)—How much is this muslin? The Shopman (gallantly)—One kiss the yard. Young Woman—Very well, give me ten yards. Shopman—That will be ten kisses. Young Woman—Certainly. Send the bill to my grandmother.

A judge, pointing with his cane at a prisoner before him, remarked: "There is a great rogue at the end of this stick." The man replied: "At which end, your hon'or?"

"The longer I live," sighed the sage, "and the more I learn, the more firmly am I convinced that I know absolutely nothing!" "I could have told you that twenty-five years ago," said his wife, "but I knew it would be of no use."

Kitty—So you have been to Paris. You must have had a nice time there, you understand the language so perfectly, you know. Bessie—Well, the fact is, though you'd hardly believe it, they speak such queer French there it's quite impossible to converse with intelligence.

Visitor—You haven't got half as nice a cemetery here as we have in Elmville. Prominent Citizen (of Hawville)—No, I've always heard that the cemetery is the only part of your town that holds out any inducements for permanent residence.

"No," he said, "I'm not sure whether my wife's Christmas gift to me was meant to please me or to humble my pride." "What did she give you?" asked the friend. "She had a crayon portrait of me made by an amateur artist."

You can judge a woman pretty well by the pictures she hangs on her parlor wall.

Mistress—I should like to know what business that policeman has in my kitchen every night in the week? Cook—Please, mum, I think he's suspicious of me neglecting my work, or something.

"We get along excellently together," he explained. "You see, he never borrows anything but trouble, and that's all I ever have to loan."

"See here," exclaimed the stranger as he stumbled into his twentieth puddle, "I thought you said you knew where all the bad places were on this road?" "Well," replied the native who had volunteered to guide him through the darkness, "we're finding them, ain't we?"

"After all, it takes a woman to drive a bargain." "Unless the bargain should happen to be a horse." "Huh! Did you ever hear of a horse that was a bargain?"

"So you think it is an advantage to a boy to be reared in the country?" "To be sure," answered Farmer Cornloss; "a boy has a heap better chance in the country. For instance, when a boy is surrounded by orchards and melon patches he can have the stomach ache without the doctor jumping to the conclusion that he's got appendicitis."

Congressman Cannon, while in Park Row recently, stopped to inspect the work on the subway. His attention was especially attracted by the large iron cylinder which is kept constantly turning over a fire for the purpose of heating gravel. "What do you make of it, Joe?" asked a friend. "Rolled pebbles," murmured Mr. Cannon. "Must be some kind of new breakfast food adapted for those Italian immigrants."

At the age of 21 a man knows a lot more about women than he ever will at any subsequent stage of his career.

COCKTAIL FACTS

About 90% of the Cocktails now drunk are either Manhattans or Martinis; no good bar-keeper uses any bitters but "English Orange" in making them. The "CLUB COCKTAILS," Manhattans and Martinis, are made as they should be with English "Orange Bitters," are properly aged and are better than any fresh made cocktail possibly can be. A fresh made cocktail is like a new blend of any kind, unfit for use. Age is what makes a good Punch, age is what makes a good Cordial, age is what makes a good blended whiskey, age is what makes a palatable sauce, and above all age is what makes a good cocktail. These statements can be verified by any reputable blender.

Arthur Nelstone tells a good yarn about Umtali. It was on his last visit about the end of 1897. Happening to enter the first morning a well-frequented bar, a young man came up to him and said: "Hello, Arthur, how are you, old boy." Well, after he had chatted about old times, he said: "Things are awful bad here. I don't know what's coming to this place; we are all broke—a large bottle of champagne, Miss." Champagne was 50s a bottle then in Umtali. We talked on for some time of how poverty stricken they all were and I was just thinking of closing the conversation when he said: "Miss, another bottle, please." And that's how it was during my stay. They were all broke, but they drank champagne every morning.

Nodd—How is your orange grove in Florida getting on? Todd—First rate, old man. Why, in a couple of years from now I expect to have enough oranges to supply my table.

"What makes you think they are such rich Americans?" "Because they know so much more about other countries than their own."

Mother—Johnny Jones, did you get that awful cold out skating? Son—Mother, I think I caught it washing my face yesterday morning.

Junior Partner (a few days after Christmas)—I don't think we ought to mark these goods down to such a figure as that. It's less than half cost. We can't replace them for double the price. Senior Partner—We won't have to, my boy. Nobody has any money now.

Ascum—Some people are saying that you made most of your money in politics. Leader—But others are saying that I made most of my money out of politics. So who are you going to believe?

BURNING HIS BRIDGES.

Is Hearst—William Randolph Hearst—as bankrupt in fortune as in honor and decency? If not, then he is doing some things which, if observed in the conduct of a man engaged in a more reputable business, would indicate an intention to commit fraudulent insolvency, so to say.

Hearst's inheritance from his father was the San Francisco Examiner, and, we may suppose, enough money to freak it into its present state of journalistic unworth. The other properties of the same class which he has established or acquired in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles, have been run on the same plan of brag and bluster on the editorial side and plain piracy in the counting room. Hearst's reputation as a prodigal spender of millions got by birth, and his parent's death, is as false as his reputation for anything mentionable in a mixed company. It is true that he has paid big salaries to little men, has bought all manner of thinly-gilt bricks, and has made a great noise in newspaperdom, but a little money goes a long way in that kind of a fake exhibition, and without doubt, his yellow head has earned a good deal by dint of cajolery and cudgeling the business men and corporations of the four afflicted cities. But what of his revenue he has not spent in making the people believe him, the Croesus of the press, he has squandered in trying to play the bigger game of national politics. How much it has cost him trying to tow to port the unfortunate Bryan, the derelict of the Democracy, no man but himself may say, but unquestionably the amount is a large one. From time to time he may have wrung more money out of the Hearst estate. It has been said, with seeming authority, that his paper has been taken up in this quarter, on occasion, just in time to spare him exposure that would have tumbled down his house of cards.

Some time ago, it will be recalled, this inheritor of not much else besides a newspaper, put the Examiner into the hands of a corporation headed by an employee of the business office—a move which was not regarded at the time as anything more serious than one more of the queer practices of a queer young man. Now he has done the same thing with his New York sheet, and here, again, the corporation has for directors two of his employees and his attorney. The capital, in this case, is placed at $1,000,000. In Chicago he is at the same business.

What does it all mean? Is Hearst bankrupt, or does he expect to be? Assuredly, if he owed the News Letter any money, it would be looking for something attachable to levy on. Possibly he has gone so far in his policy of extension, has so added to his obligations, has so many and so heavy creditors that he is past the point of retreat and retrenchment, and has adopted this plan of incorporation to help stave off commercial ruin. Perhaps he has so far discounted his expectancy in the Hearst estate that he has been compelled to this course for its better protection. It may be—and this seems to us more likely—that his foolish scramble for the Presidency is the last card he has to play, and that he is getting ready for the utter defeat that will inevitably be his portion.

Hearst, we are informed, has offered the Democratic national managers $2,000,000 for the nomination. This is a jug-handled proposition, inasmuch as what he offers is to spend that sum in trying to elect himself if nominated. We would suggest that the gentlemen to whom he promises this great sum in exchange for the virtue of their party see first of all how much property really stands in his name, how much money he actually has. This incorporation scheme means something unpleasant for somebody's interests, and we would not suspect Mr. Hearst of trying to pick his own pocket.

A NEEDLESS SACRIFICE OF LIFE.

The ever-lengthening roll of men and women who lose their lives through one form or another of carelessness in the use of illuminating gas imperatively calls attention to one special cause of danger in this regard by which considerable numbers of the residents of San Francisco are made to undergo a wholly avoidable risk.

We refer to the practice of turning off the gas at the meter in the lodging houses. This practice is pursued as a measure of economy to prevent possible waste by lodgers. It is not an uncommon thing for residents of these houses to do a little cooking on a small gas stove, but this practice is frowned upon by landlords, and so they cut off the flow of gas all over the house during a large part of the twenty-four hours. This, of course, is a measure of self-defense on the part of landlords, but it imports a danger of very serious character, and for that reason ought not only to be prohibited, but the prohibition must be enforced by adequate means.

The danger from this practice lies in the fact that lodgers frequently leave jets burning low while they sleep, and when the flow is cut off at the meter the stop-cock of the burner remains open, with the result that when the gas is once more turned on the room becomes filled with the poisonous fumes.

It is useless passing an ordinance prohibiting this practice unless means are provided to see that the prohibition is enforced. That means is easily within the reach of the municipal machinery. It should be made the duty of policemen on patrol to inspect the gas fittings at all lodging houses, and see that the law is observed. It is useless filling the city law-book with ordinances which presumably are supposed to work without human agency. To be effective the law must itself specify the means of its enforcement.

IMPOSITION UPON CLUB WOMEN.

In the appearance of the so-called California Club-women's edition of the Bulletin, the News Letter finds much to make it believe that the warning to the excellent ladies of that excellent club about the bunco game that was all set for them came in good season. It is plain that many of those whose names were used in booming this stupid humbug drew out, and that others, unable to do so, merely sent in contributions and allowed their names to be used in signature. For weeks this delectable sheet had been announcing the names of its staff of lady editors and gatherers of news, telling with verbose reiteration which of them would report the day's happenings on the city's waterfront, among the labor unions, and wherever else news was to be had. Most of the departments thus advertised were conspicuously omitted. Obviously, the ladies whom the Bulletin had tried to delude into association with it for these purposes declined the tasks assigned them, and the managers of the slimy sheet did not dare to go too far in passing off the work of its own underpaid hacks as the output of the clever clubwomen whose names it had used so freely.

That there was some degree of this substitution swindle, however, we make sure. Inspection of the issue shows errors of language, of fact, and of judgment that cannot possibly be attributed to any woman of the California Club, so we may infer that the Bulletin's managers sought to deceive their patrons by mangling the regular product of the press until it looked like their estimate of what clubwomen would write. And it was not a high estimate. In other cases they boldly snatched matter by handful from obscure sources and published it as the creation of one or another of the clubwomen, not venturing, though, to attach signatures. For example, there was a yard-long editorial about journalism. Does anybody believe that any woman connected with the California Club could have been guilty of such vapid idiocy as that? This ineffably dull article read like the theme of a half-baked freshman in a fifth-rate college, ground out with infinite labor from the resources of a meager library and a meager intelligence, spraddling splay-footed when it would be philosophic, and galumphing painfully when it would be light and gay. This foolish piece-for-the-paper essay, of the kind that all editors know so well and loathe so heartily, a thing with neither premise nor conclusion, without bowels or bones, may be the Bulletin's idea of what a clubwoman would write; it is not ours. We suspect that it was quarried whole out of some weekly in Northern Nebraska by an unscrupulous man with a big pair of scissors.

As to the business side of this affair we hope sincerely that those ladies who did participate took the precaution to have somebody watch the cash drawer all the time.

A SHAMEFUL ATTACK.

Once more the highbinders and head-hunters are trying to get the Spring Valley Water Company by the throat. It is not beset this year by the jackals of Newspaper Row alone. The Mayor and his hungry henchmen, who throng the City Hall, are busy whetting their knives for the slashing. All the indications are for a season of corporation-baiting and capital-harrying, a season of attempted "hold-ups," more daring and more numerous than have marked any of the annual periods of rate-fixing. Such a condition of things does not exist, and would not be endured anywhere else in the United States.

Yearly the Spring Valley Company is compelled to fight tooth and nail for a rate that will enable it to pay the interest on the money it has borrowed in order to maintain its business and to render a reasonable return to the holders of its stock. Often it has been forced to seek the refuge of the courts, which have not thus far failed to shield it from the attack of wolves in office. Last year it carried to the Federal courts its contention for a reasonable return, and found no difficulty there in getting the protection it asked. This year it is called upon to face not only the assaults of a predacious and rapacious press, but the onfall of an administration whose slogan seems to be "For Revenue Only."

The stranger among us might think that this was a company of the robber barons of finance—a handful of men grown inordinately and insolently rich through control of a public necessity, defying the law and defrauding the people by excessive and extortionate charges. The fact—and it is within the knowledge of every citizen—is that Spring Valley's stocks and bonds are held by thousands upon thousands of investors, rich and poor, high and low, most of them San Franciscans. In it are invested the patrimony of many and many an orphaned family, the estates of widows, the slow savings of workingmen. No other corporation in San Francisco is so widely and fully representative of all conditions and classes of the city's people in its security-holders.

And from its beginning, Spring Valley has kept always in advance of the demand upon its mains, has held back no growing section of a rapidly growing community for lack of water supply. It has overcome tremendous natural difficulties in finding pure water in the bare, brown hills that lie all about the city, in storing it and in bringing it, clear and pure, to its consumers at a cost of which no man can justly complain. All the while, too, it has had to fight for its very life, ceaselessly attacked by elements as vicious as those which now menace it.

No one will be surprised to note the rancorous hostility toward Spring Valley of those newspapers which regard a vested interest as a stage-robber does a heavy express-box. Nor is it disappointing to find the Mayor and his merry men lined up with those who prey upon corporations and individuals, for the last municipal campaign involved no secrecy with respect to motives or intentions. But it will be a distinct disappointment if there shall prove to be not enough fairminded and honest men in the Board of Supervisors to give the Spring Valley a chance to earn for its bondholders their interest and for its stockholders a lawful return upon their investment.

WHERE SAN FRANCISCO LAGS.

George A. Newhall, president of the Chamber of Commerce, writes a thoughtful letter on the several proposals now mooted for the improvement and beautifying of San Francisco. Mr. Newhall is a traveled man, who has seen and noted what other cities the world over are doing in the same lines, and he thinks that what we most need in this city is improved and modern streets. There can be no doubt that we have neglected our opportunities in this regard, and Mr. Newhall's criticism is needed and to the point. In his letter, printed in the Bulletin, Mr. Newhall writes:

"My personal opinion is that the first thing to do is to give us good streets, well paved. If the municipal authorities feel that they cannot do this at once, the work should be proceeded with a little at a time, but do it well. Without criticizing any one I must say that we have no well paved street from the Western Addition into the city. Post street, the natural channel, was at one time in comparatively good condition, but at present the paving is so bad that the average citizen when going by carriage receives nothing but jolts.

This is the eminently practical advice of a man of wide experience who is largely interested in the future of San Francisco. It should be heeded. We have here the most splendid site for a great city that the world affords situated at the gateway of two continents and blessed with the finest climate. People may say what they please about the fogs and winds that play over this peninsula, but the fact remains that for working purposes there is no other such climate on the round globe, because in no other part of the world can a man pursue his business and his work with so little discomfort or with less adjustment to his surroundings as in San Francisco. There is no other place in the world where the extremes of heat or cold do not hamper industry, and increase the cost to the producer. But to get the full value of our natural advantages we must not neglect appliances and means. In this category, nothing is more important than well-paved and well-kept streets, and we rejoice to see men who hold the position of Mr. Newhall taking an active and intelligent interest in bringing the citizens to a realizing sense of the needs of the time.

URGENT NEED OF FIRE PROTECTION.

The conditions prevailing in what is known as the "boarding-house district," and the danger of fire that threatens so much valuable property as well as life, make the subject a timely report filed with the Board of Supervisors by Fire Marshall Towe, representing the Board of Fire Wardens. These dangers have long been obvious to everybody, and the brain reels in contemplation of the catastrophe that may at any moment strike. We all know those towering structures of wood that almost resemble the character of explosives, so inflammable are they and so impossible to be saved once a fire gains headway in them. Not only are they dangerous to the inmates, but they threaten their neighbors, for these buildings are mostly huddled in one quarter of the town. We quote from the report:

"Many buildings have been constructed, under previous laws, wholly of wood, even as high as seven stories. They adjoin and abutt together in some cases. Many of them are centered on one of the hilly districts of our city. It has been the study of this Board and of the Fire Department, whose officers comprise this Board, how to check a fire once started and extending from the building in which it originated in what may be termed the boarding house district, where the buildings range from three to seven stories, and are constructed wholly of frame. Should a fire start on a windy day it is possible for burning embers to be carried blocks away. The department would be taxed to its utmost and leave a valuable portion of the city at the mercy of a conflagration. This risk is with us every day, and in answer to your resolution, we say the danger from fire is great—too great to be put in a written report."

"Too great to be put in a written report"—that is a significant phrase, but we all know the dangers at which it hints. By way of remedy the Fire Wardens declare that in future all buildings outside of the fire limits, as well as within those limits, should be "constructed wholly of brick or stone."

Must the city wait for a disaster involving the lives of hundreds, of the destruction of some great block of buildings, before these reasonable precautions are enforced?

A QUEER TRANSACTION.

That is a very strange transaction by which the State commission for the California exhibit in the St. Louis Exposition has granted an exclusive concession for advertising to a Los Angeles firm. Under this concession it appears that the grantees are just now engaged in holding up the several counties and cities of the State, the Boards of Supervisors, the municipal governing bodies and the commercial organizations, under threat that if they do not pay for notice they will be shut out, or at best given some sort of perfunctory showing among the stereopticon pictures that are to constitute the vehicle of advertisement.

The State has appropriated $130,000 for the purpose of advertising resources and industries and natural features of California. If that money is not sufficient, more can be had, and, in fact, a great deal more, but only on the understanding that it will be applied for the advantage of the contributors, and that no considerable part of it shall be diverted into the pockets of private individuals.

This is the objection to the scheme that originated with Commissioner Wiggins of Los Angeles, that it puts the most important feature of the whole enterprise in the hands of a couple of smart advertising solicitors—his friends—to be worked for their own profit. The chief purpose of every exhibit is to advertise the State. It was to this end that the Legislature appropriated $130,000, and for the same purpose Boards of Supervisors are ready to add contributions from their county treasuries. But undoubtedly the most effective form of advertisement is an illustrated lecture showing industrial and natural features. It is this concession that has been granted exclusively to Mr. Wiggins' friends. The $130,000 exhibit and the California building at the World's Fair will be used as the background and base of operation for the thrifty schemes of Mr. Wiggins' friends from Los Angeles. We are told that San Francisco will be permitted by these astute operators to appear on the map of California, but apparently only by sufferance.

The whole proceeding cannot be called by any other name than "graft," and it is up to Governor Pardee to ask the Commissioners for an explanation.

A DECAYING MONUMENT.

The old church of Mission Dolores and the cemetery at the rear do not seem to be given that attention and care which our few remaining historical monuments should have. The burying ground behind the church is overgrown with weeds, and the tombstones and other memorials of the dead are suffered to fall into decay. We realize fully that this neglect is no fault of the custodians, the authorities of the parish, but is due to lack of funds. We feel that money for the patriotic duty of maintaining in good condition this interesting monument of the life of pastoral California "before the Gringo came" falls on citizens of California, out of San Francisco more particularly, and some of our public spirited native sons or the Society of the Pioneers might do well to take the matter in hand. It is a pious duty to conserve the few remaining memorials of the California on that romantic period.

No; that low, sad sound from the East is not the echo of a distant storm. It is Uncle Russell Sage grieving because another man who worked for him has sued him and got a judgment.

We have known about radium for only a little while, yet it is claimed that it will turn lead into gold, solve the problem of perpetual motion, determine the sex of children and cure everything from corns to cancer. This is good—as far as it goes, but dare we hope that it will rob green onions of their odor and prevent trousers from bagging at the knees?

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 6

Positively your climate here drops the flag on that of New York, and is almost as good as that of dear old England. If you only had the roads, the drives, the halls, the ancestral homes and the society, I think truly I could make up my mind to live among you for say as much as six months each year. It will take lots of things to make a life's residence endurable here for a man of my refinement and culture. You are a picture without a frame. You need finishing up or toning down. You have no drive in San Francisco that is used and retained solely for the better classes. You need a Bois de Bologne, a Row, or a Paseo. You really ought to attend to this. Make your Aldermen men set aside an avenue where we can ride and drive, and not be annoyed by a costermonger's cart or some red-shirted bounder astride a wheel. Make it the proper thing to show yourselves there in the proper style, so that the lower classes can see the correct thing; educate the beggars to a higher ideal. If you do, they will really, I assure you, train into better footmen, coachmen, tigers and butlers for you than they do. I don't bother a bit now about your poor service. The chaps you have here have not had any chance at all; they don't know the glamour, honor and pleasure of serving persons of high degree, and I will bet a pony that your wealthier classes as a rule don't know how to either train or treat a servant; so, don't you know, your servants are rather more of a bore than an assistance. I really am sorry for them, for I have come in contact with some of my friends' men, who look real likely if they had not been spoiled in the breaking. If you would get together and import an English coachman or two, a few footmen and half a dozen butlers, the others would copy their ways, and I am sure you would find things much nicer. Then guarantee a good livery maker from Bond street enough to open a shop here, and have your liveries properly done. The liveries I have noted mostly on your streets suggest uniforms more than livery. This is too bad, don't you see! A proper livery discloses at once to a gentleman the owner of the equipage. By all means get some liveries. Your bootmakers are, I think, a fairly good lot, and you can get along without importing a bootmaker. Get the proper coachman, and he will know all about the boots. A coachman is necessary—if you can't get a coachman, give up your carriage, or drive a cart or gig with a tiger. A coachman is a bally lot more than a driver. You can spot the right chap at once by the way he holds the ribbons, the angle at which he carries his whip, and his seat on the box. Roger smiled the other day when he told me about a coachman he saw lean half over the seat and get his instructions as to where to drive, holding his ribbons and whip in one hand, and then he drove off without touching his hat. Simply wretchedly bad form. Take my ideas, won't you, and then when you do things proper, you will be noticed. I can spare some time, and don't mind going in for a turn-out or two myself, if the rest of us do.

Of course, don't you know, I can't criticise your valuable paper, but the bad form shown in the paper in speaking of his Imperial Majesty William, the Emperor of Germany, and the poor taste displayed by the boor who replied to it, compels me, my dear News Letter, to ask you to cease these comments on people like the Emperor. The next thing I note some person will be publishing some slighting criticism even about me.

I feel that I am appreciated, as I should be, in my ideas in trying to improve you, since I was complimented by Roger bringing to my apartments a letter which had been sent to me in care of the office of this paper. It asks my judgment in a gentlemanly sort of manner on the following question: "Is a beefsteak considered good form to serve at dinner?" Certainly the gentleman who consults me could not have asked any better authority, but honoring me by asking my advice, he should have enclosed his card. This is another evidence of the lack of form among your men. Any well-bred man should know, and would know had he mixed in polite society and dined out, that serving a beefsteak with dinner would strip his visiting list, and cross him off every other invitation list in the better circles, if he has ever moved there. I am sorry the gentleman who wrote the question did not call on me. I would have made an exception and seen him. By enclosing his address or name of his club he would have enabled me to address him personally. I am not brutal by nature, and don't wish to wound any feelings, but a beefsteak at dinner would be about as bad form as pouring your coffee or icing your Burgundy—and those are two pretty bad facers. If I saw a fellow doing these things at a table at which I was a guest I should make up my mind that he was there by mistake, or else that I was; one of us would send regrets the next time to that hostess. I am not familiar with the abominable laches of good breeding perpetrated in the public dining rooms of public restaurants, and it may be good form to serve beefsteak for dinner in such places. Some one else must judge. It is shocking here to note the irreverence with which people eat their dinner. Dinner is a function. I think it should be approached with formality. It is the expression of the physical poetry of life. I think those poor persons who have not known the delights of dressing and dining should pray to get it in heaven. Some blooming poet says: "Life blooms to its richest and best." I'll bet that was written after a well-appointed dinner. It's most expressive, really. I assure you, 'pon honor, that no other gentleman appreciates dining (used in the most formal sense of the word) any more than does Fernand Travers.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

Events in the Far East the last few days have revealed a great deal of Russian diplomatic cunning, but it does not come as a surprise. For several weeks Japan has been fully prepared to throw an army into Korea and make that little kingdom a base of supplies and operations against Russia; what is called "diplomatic courtesy" has prevented a forward movement. But all this time Japan, as well as all the rest of the world, has been satisfied that Russia was complicating the diplomatic prelude to gain time to put her Far East upon a strong war footing. All that is now accomplished, and the Czar's reply to Japan's last note may be expected at any moment. Of course, it will be an adroitly drawn document, overflowing with "distinguished consideration," but its meaning will be that Russia has no idea of giving up an inch of Manchuria, and that she will not permit Japan to dominate in Korea. Then it will be up to Japan to make a formal declaration of war, which she will make haste to do, and which she may do before this issue of the News Letter goes to press. It is a mistake to suppose that the "peace party" in Russia has at any time been willing to give up Manchuria or let Japan have a free hand in Korea for the sake of peace. It has been the plan all along of the peace party to wear out Japan in a war of diplomatic hair-splitting, and thus secure for Russia a still firmer hold in the Far East, but all Russia is a unit on the question of holding on to Manchuria, and gradually weaving a dominating influence in Korea, for such dominating influence is necessary to secure the Strait of Korea, for the Strait is the Hermit Kingdom's Gibraltar. But it so happens that a week ago Japan practically took possession of the Strait, which gives her a far-reaching advantage, for the time being anyway. The forthcoming note from Russia, therefore, in reply to Japan's last diplomatic effort to secure a permanent footing on the mainland will pledge Russia to give up Manchuria or a positive refusal to comply with Japan's wishes. Of course, Russia will not move out of Manchuria unless forced to do so.

The Czar has quit masquerading behind a satisfied smile over the recently signed commercial treaty between the United States and China, and he now intimates that he regards the transaction as a "mean trick" on the part of the Washington Government, especially in attempting to establish consulates at the Manchurian treaty commercial centers. But his Majesty is willing to let the treaty become operative, though between the lines the fact is seen that the Czar does not recognize the right of China to make a treaty for Manchurian commercial privileges. It should not be forgotten, for it may cut considerable of a figure later on, that the United States and Great Britain utterly ignored Russia's alleged jurisdiction in Manchuria, and officially recognized China as the only authority that had the right to negotiate such a treaty. It was a slap at Russia's pretensions, and an implied pledge to stand by the Peking Government in the premises. Meanwhile it must not be supposed that America and England are inclined to forego the commercial advantages granted to them in Manchuria by China simply because Russia does not like it. Nothing could be further from their purpose. They propose to establish consulates at the Manchurian treaty commercial centers without reference to Russia's likes or dislikes. Manchuria is too rich and too extensive a field for British and Yankee commercial and industrial exploitation to run away from because of the gnashing of a Bear's teeth.

What Germany and France are to secure to themselves from the spoils for practically avowing their sympathy with Russia and an implied threat that under certain circumstances something more substantial than moral aid will be given to Russia, will develop later on. But, on the other hand, the German Government is confronted by a powerful and steadily increasing socialistic party that does not hesitate to denounce Russia's aggressive and land-grabbing policy in the Far East, and its unyielding opposition to the Kaiser's political relations with the Czar may oblige the Government to at least be absolutely neutral.

The Republic of Colombia is still bent upon thrashing Panama back into the federation, but bluster and the tramp of soldiers on dress parade is as near to a hostile demonstration as the powers that be have thus far made in a public way. There is a suspicion that some sort of negotiations are going on between the Colombian Government and Germany, more particularly, which contemplate a joint interest which will be almost, if not quite, the equivalent of a European protectorate. If it be true that such is the fact, it is made clear that Colombia intends to trade her independence for a wedge to split the Monroe Doctrine wide open, and turn all the Latin-American States into so many fields for exploitation of European nations by running streams of immigrants into them for future political governmental use. Evidently the Colombian political leaders are willing to bit off their nose to spite their face, if only the Washington Government can be involved in dangerous complications.

The Philippine Commission reports it does not consider the future of our Asiatic possessions at all promising. That is exactly how all foreign nations have "considered" the matter ever since the United States extended its jurisdiction over the islands. As an English statesman puts it: "Your Uncle Samuel is trying to make a silk purse out of a pig's ear without first having acquired some knowledge of the business." However, if the United States should become involved in the Japanese-Russian muddle the Philippines will come handy for a military and naval base, a "base" that costs several hundred million dollars is pretty expensive for a Republic that stands for peace, human liberty and individual sovereignty to indulge in. But be it said to the credit of the Filipinos, the Commission announces that progress, civilization, decency, thrift and proper deportment on the part of the native men and women are discouraged, handicapped and weakened by vagabond Americans who are swaggering all over the islands as moral pestilence, commercial rotteness and industrial thievery. The colonial experience of the United States is amusing to our fellow members of the Concert of Powers.

Political

So far as the Congressional nominations are concerned, the names that will appear on the ticket this fall are practically decided in the Republican camp, with the exception of the Second, Fifth and Eighth Districts, in which matters are still left open. Gillett will be nominated again in the First, and Metcalf goes back from the Third. Kahn wants to try his luck again in the Fourth against Livernash, who is certain to be renominated by the Democrats, and Needham and MacLachlan are both certain of getting their party indorsement. There was some talk of MacLachlan for Senator, but he has effectually put a quietus on that idea by declaring that he could not afford to make the race for the Senate and that he preferred to return to the Lower House. In the Second District, the Republicans must pick out a man with more care if they want to win than in any other district in the State. In the first place, the district has the unpleasant habit of going Democratic. Jim Budd was a Congressman from the Second, Caminetti was elected three times, Miron Devres came from the same district, and now Bell represents it. It is true that the district has been changed several times since Budd ran, but nevertheless it always contains Sacramento, and that is where it gets its Democratic majority. Frank Coombs would like to get the nomination again, but Dr. Mathews killed off Coombs politically when he called the Congressman "Gloomy Gus." A man may survive opposition and bitter enemies, but he never can overcome ridicule, if it once sticks, and "Gloomy Gus" has stuck to Coombs ever since Mathews suggested its applicability to Coombs. Besides, it needs an active campaigner, and Coombs is not active. Senator Devlin of Sacramento has also been mentioned, and the Bee of that town interviewed him on the subject, and printed a column of talk from the statesman, but no definite conclusion as to what he would do. Those who know best say that it would be very hard to elect Devlin because of his record on the Prison Board. Everything the Board has done, and everything it has failed to do, and its sins of omission are even more numerous than its sins of commission, would be loaded upon Devlin if he ran, and with a popular man like Bell on the other side it would be almost impossible to elect him. Then there is Charley Curry, Secretary of State. He has been talked to, but Charley claims to hail from San Francisco, though he now lives in Sacramento. Hearst was elected to Congress from New York while he claimed to be a Californian. This State is more particular about such things than New York, and then there is no tenderloin in California as there is in the Empire State, that elects a Congressman by itself, for Curry to buy even if he had the means and the inclination, both of which he lacks. Besides Curry's eye is on the Governorship rather than Congress. Duncan McKinley of Santa Rosa, at one time Presidential elector, now assistant U. S. District Attorney, is another candidate. McKinley is a good campaigner, and would certainly make it lively for Bell. He is popular as a speaker, and having risen from the ranks (he was originally a painter) he ought to stand well with the labor vote, which is a strong factor in Sacramento.

In the Fifth District, the nomination, now that Fiske has accepted the San Francisco Postmastership, will probably go to Santa Clara County. Loud has been appointed a delegate to the International Postal Congress in Rome, which meets sometime next summer, but could not get the nomination if he were here. He was beaten and Wynn elected simply on personal grounds. The district was tired of him, the postal employees were opposed to him to a man, and he would be just as weak in 1904 as he was in 1902. A man may be defeated for office by a tidal wave without losing prestige, but he cannot be beaten on purely personal grounds and hold his own, and so far as Congress is concerned, Loud is out of it. As San Francisco has had the honor of naming the Congressman so often it is only fair that the nomination should go to Santa Clara, and there seems no great opposition to that idea. If the candidate is selected from down the country, Dr. A. E. Osborne will probably be the man. The condition in Santa Clara is peculiar. There has been a very bitter fight waged there for years. There have been the McKenzie gang and the Hayes anti-gang, and neither faction seems able to gain such a decisive victory that their opponents are put completely out of the fight for good. Unless they stand together the Democrats will carry the county or an independent ticket will be elected, as happened two years ago when the independents carried everything from Sheriff to Charlie Shortridge.

In the Eighth District there was a very bitter fight two years ago. Every county in the district had a candidate for Congress, and a dead lock resulted that lasted for weeks. Daniels was finally nominated through the manipulations of his friend and partner in the banking business, Hays of Riverside, who was a very shrewd political wire-puller. But Hays got mixed up in a land scheme involving the right of way of the Salt Lake road, in which he was accused of doing up the company, and was forced to make restitution, so he is no longer on hand to help Daniels, and the other candidates in the district hope to profit by that fact, and prevent the latter's renomination. Ex-Senator Smith of Bakersfield is probably the strongest anti-Daniels candidate. He has served several terms in the Legislature, has friends all over the district and put up a good fight 2 years ago. His friends say that this year he can win out, as Daniels has done nothing particularly for the District since he went to Washington. The trouble, however, is that Kern County is Democratic, while Riverside is largely Republican, and naturally the men who elect the Congressman feel that they should have the right to name him. Prescott of Redlands, who was a very active member of the last Assembly, is also a candidate for Congress from the Eighth, but he probably would be willing to take the nomination for State Senator to succeed the late Senator Hubbell, and wait until 1906 for his Congressional nomination. Senator Caldwell, of Riverside, would also like to go to Congress, but for personal reasons is not in a position, I understand, to fight Daniels, and he, too, will be sent back to the Senate. That leaves the fight practically between Daniels and Smith, with Daniels now in office, which is a big help to get a nomination.

The Library Cable

J. J. Bell won a certain amount of popularity and means with his first book, "Wee MacGregor," but it cannot be truthfully said that he has kept his advantage in "Mrs. McLerie." There is no doubt of the cleverness of much of the dialogue, but just another touch would have made the little work the success which it really deserves to be. As it is, "Mrs. McLerie" is not convincing—the characters lack probability. The work is too evidently made, the construction too palpable. Mrs. McLerie is a sort of Scotch peasant variety of Mrs. Malaprop, and some of her mistakes in the use of words are very engaging, particularly when her friend, Mrs. Munro, sets out to correct her as she always makes a point of doing. A typical instance of the style of the book may be found in the following. Mrs. McLerie is dwelling upon her husband's aversion to gambling. She says: "Mony's the time I've heard him say he wad as soon pit money in a horse race as intil a disruption sale."

"Subscription sale." Mild correction by Mrs. Munro.

"Aweil, it's a' yin. An' whit's a rattle (raffle) but a disruption sale."

This is a fair sample of the book, and the reader of this can judge for himself. There is, however, a certain quality in the stories which shows that the author has possibilities, for he is able to produce a certain amount of sympathy and even affection for his uncouth Scotch characters. It is a fairly good book, which might have been a very good book.

Steps in the Expansion of Our Territory.

This is the fourth volume of a series issued by Appleton, the said series being called "The Expansion of the Republic" series. Oscar Phelps Austin, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, is the author. The story of national development is well told, without any notable variations from the account usually given in the school histories. In fact, the history of the revolt of the colonies is stated in terms less broad than those usual in the later school histories. The expansion of the country and its marvelous development commercially and as a manufacturing community, is ascribed largely, and no doubt within certain limits correctly, to the liberal land policy which has been possessed by the United States Government, as well as to the advantages which a Democratic State without military conscription possesses over countries which are so hampered. The book will be found a readable and reliable text-book for those who are desirous of studying the main outlines of the national growth. The situations are well chosen and may be accepted.

Extinct Civilization.

This forms a volume in the series entitled "The Library of Useful Stories," and is a very interesting and informing little book. The author is Robert E. Anderson, who has written a finer book on "The Extinct Civilizations of the East." The Aztecs, the early Mexicans, and the prehistoric Peruvians are considered, and a fairly complete account of their mode of life and curious customs is presented. An interesting feature of the work is the proof adduced in support of the fact that many symbols which we are accustomed to regard as exclusively Christian were employed by several prehistoric American nations whose remains testify to this. The Cross, for example, the author states, occurs frequently, not only in Mayan sculptures, but in the ceremonials of the Aztecs. These people also calculated the time with such accuracy that their calendar was superior to that existing in Europe at that period, so that when the Spaniards visited them the reckoning of the latter was in error eleven days as compared with that of the nation which they conquered. There are many other interesting facts of a like nature in this little volume.

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

In a story of the Rome of Nero, one is sure to find a persecuted Christian maiden who is roughly wooed by a Roman noble whom she finally converts, and a powerful slave whose gladiatorial feats in the arena win the favor of the populace and save the damsel. "Lux Crucis" is "Quo Vadis" in a minor key. Its chief faults are, first, the exaggerated importance, from the Roman point of view, that attaches to the whole New Testament story. As you read the book, you get the impression that the events in far-off Galilee are of paramount importance in the world of Rome—whereas, the plain truth of the matter was that to the Roman official world the whole New Testament story was only too prevalently regarded as a mere surface ripple in a distant province.

Secondly, while Mr. Gardenshire's book could be put indiscriminately into the hands of "the young person," yet to just this extent it is false to the atmosphere of the time. Nero's court and Nero's age were essentially unclean. It is impossible to treat of the history and conditions of that period without coming in contact with much that is repellant. The social condition of the women was far more complex than it could possibly be to-day, ranging through the numerous different forms of marriage, to the successive stages of freed woman and slave, forming altogether a complex maze in which even the most careful student of manners may pardonably lose his way. Mr. Gardenshire, however, cannot be said to have lost his way, for he has chosen to skirt around the maze instead of penetrating it. Nevertheless, it is a book which will undoubtedly enjoy a popularity of considerable extent, and will be read with genuine pleasure by a large proportion of the readers who enjoyed the volumes of Sienkiewicz and General Lew Wallace.

Society

Dear Bessie: The question on every tongue is are you going to the March Gras ball? For there is to be one, as I have said all along there would be. The invitations are quite pretty, and the men have been made happy with the knowledge that they can go masked, as they should always have been allowed to do. I have not yet made up my mind what costume to wear, but either of the two I have under consideration will be worthy of note.

But let me tell you about Bernie's wedding, for I know you want to hear all about it. It took place at noon on Saturday at St. Luke's, which is such a bright, pretty, warm church it does not need much dressing to make it attractive. Green and white was the color scheme the whole way through—flowers, costumes, etc.—and the decoration was confined to the chancel, which was a mass of ferns and St. Joseph lilies. To say the church was full is to put it mildly, and the usual Lohengrin strains heralded the coming of the bridal party promptly on time. Will Page, Percy King and John Lawson, who were the ushers, were of course the first to delight our vision, and they had seated us all so gracefully and with such seeming good humor we were glad to see them again. Then followed Newel Drown, as maid of honor who looked lovely in white crepe de chine and a hat made of lilies of the valley. After her came in couples the four bridesmaids, Charlotte Ellinwood, Lide Cadwallader, Stella Kane and Susie Blanding, also gowned in white crepe de chine, but their hats were trimmed with green silk and white ostrich tips, and they carried pretty little green and white muffs. Bernie and her father came last, and I never saw her look better than in her bridal robe of white chiffon satin and tulle veil, wreath of white orchids and bouquet to match. Sam and his best man—his brother Chauncey (as Captain Winn couldn't get leave to come down for it, as he sails with his regiment for Manila next month)—met them at the chancel, and Bishop Nichols, with the assistance of Mr. Weeden, the rector, performed the ceremony. After the church service quite a number went out to the Drowns for the reception and the dejeuner which followed, and then nearly every one went out on the front porch to see the happy pair depart, and to pelt them with rice. Do you know, I never go to a wedding that I do not think what a senseless proceeding that is, and far from being fun for the bride and groom. Well, Sam and Bernie were so active they were soon hidden in the depths of the carriage, which was all dressed out with tulle and long branches of fruit blossoms, and they were in such a hurry to get away the horses fairly slid down the hill. You will note by this that I did not go over to Oakland to see Jacqueline Moore and Jack Valentine joined in wedlock, but Mollie, who did, told me all about it, and you shall have the benefit of her observations. She said St. Paul's church, where the ceremony took place, was profusely dressed with ferns and flowers, and the bridal party was one of the prettiest she has ever seen in Oakland. Jacqueline, who made a very handsome bride, wore white embroidered satin trimmed with duchesse lace, and the bridesmaids, Marian Goodfellow, who was the first, Anita Oliver, Florence White, Edna Barry, Marion Smith, Ethel Valentine and Isabelle Hooper were all gowned alike in lavender chiffon cloth, and wore lavender picture hats;

the gown of Ethel Moore, who was maid of honor, was also of lavender, but she wore one of white lace over it. Mr. Moore gave his daughter away, and here, too, Bishop Nichols, assisted by the Reverend Carson Shaw, officiated. Then followed the reception at the home of the Moores, which was a very large one. Oh, I forgot! James Kenna, Fred Dieckman, Philip Clay, Ed Hume, Arthur Goodfellow, Whipple Hall and Stanley Moore were the ushers, and Hugh Goodfellow best man; and, by the way, the engagement of Isabelle Hooper to Wiggington Creed was announced at the wedding.

I went out last Friday afternoon to the charity tea given by the ladies at the Presidio; it took place in the hop room, which was so prettily decorated and filled with the pleasantest kind of a crowd. Nearly all the army girls were in evidence; Miss Bessie Rawles and the recently arrived Miss Morris had charge of the musical part of the affair, and I never saw Lily O'Hara look prettier than she did as one of the attendant maids who looked after the guests. La Jeunesse Assembly dance at the Palace in the evening was the last of the season, and was very pleasant, but I tell you there were a lot of footsore girls there after all the dancing they had done during the week. Mrs. Voorhies did the principal receiving act, and most of the gowns were either black or white, with pink or a blue here and there to give tone to the picture; but you never saw the way Mrs. Peter Martin, who was one of those who wore blue—was followed about to see how her gown was made and take a few hints therefrom. Sunday was rather an off day in the tea line; that is, there were no formal large affairs on hand; the Dickens girls, Edna and Helen, had a small one for Miss Hollister, who is here from the south, and Kitty tells me she met quite a number at Kate Henry's who had just dropped in for a chat as she did. Philip said he had a cup of tea with Mrs. Martin, but did not see Mrs. Peter who was one of the house party Mrs. Frank Carolan gave for her down at Burlingame. Mrs. Martin gives two dinners instead of one as first intended for Mrs. Peter; one came off on Thursday and the other will take place next Tuesday; feasts, both of them, you can wager a small amount. Mrs. Peter has been the guest of honor at several spreads of late; Mrs. Monte Wilson had a big luncheon for her on Wednesday; yesterday Mr. Jim Phelan gave one of his handsome dinners in her honor at the Bohemian Club, and Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels gives her a dinner next Wednesday.

Such a pleasant little dance as we had at Margaret Postlethwait's on Monday. They have a very pretty home on Pacific Avenue, and Mrs. Postlethwait first had a dinner party of a dozen young people, and then a lot more came from the dance, which was "awfully jolly, don't you know." Jack Wilson and Mabel Cluff were responsible for two of the dinners this week. Ed. Greenway feasted the groom elect at the Bohemian Club on Tuesday night, and the following one Jack Wilson played the host in honor of his bride to be, to thirty of their mutual friends. I had all I could do to rush home from Kate Dillon's card party, snatch a bite of dinner, and off to take in the Naval charity benefit at the Alhambra before going to the dance at the Cheesebroughs', which was a charming affair.

Louise Harrington and Lieutenant Leahy were very quietly married on Wednesday at her home on California street; and to-day is the wedding day of Mary Kip, whose marriage to Doctor Ernest Robinson will take place at the Cathedral in Omaha at noon, with Bishop Wilberforce to pronounce the nuptial blessing.

The Hobarts are here already, coming sooner than expected. They arrived last Friday, and of course Mary Eyre, who went abroad with them, is back too. Charlie Baldwin is here on a visit, and looks the same as he did before he was married—just a bit quieter, perhaps; Mrs. Allen Lewis has gone home to Portland, and Sam and Bernie to Honolulu for their honeymoon. Mrs. Nokes has gone to join Jean at Fort Russell, as I told you she would some time ago, and will remain with her indefinitely. Anna Sperry, who went with her, will spend February there and then return.

Bessie Ames did not get off as soon as expected, but has really gone now, leaving for the East last Saturday. Ad. Mizner has gone off on an automobile trip to Los Angeles with Jack Baird—hope they'll get back safe. The Whitelaw Reids will soon be here on their annual visit with D. O. Mills; I heard yesterday that Lillie Lawlor was coming with them, but doubt it; she is having too good a time in New York.

The Mark Hopkins Institute of Art is in the hands of the transformer. All the pictures have been taken out of the Searls gallery, and its sombre walls are blossoming into the most gorgeous color effects. Lavender and gold is the scheme of tints that is to transform the dignified institute into a palace of delight. All of the boxes are sold, and as many more would find eager purchasers if they were to be had. Following are the fortunate possessors of these coveted places: Mrs. James L. Flood, Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels, Mr. James D. Phelan, Mr. William Babcock, Gen. M. H. De Young, Colonel M. H. Hecht, Mr. Mountford S. Wilson, Mr. H. P. Hussey, Mr. Joseph D. Grant, Mr. Willis E. Davis, Mr. Frank J. Sullivan, Mr. J. E. De Sabla, Mr. Thomas J. Barbour, Mr. George H. Lent, Major Darling, U. S. A.

Among the distinctively original society functions of the week was the afternoon affair given on Wednesday by Mrs. Edgar L. Wakeman, at her home, Hill and Noe streets. The invitations read from 2 to 5 p. m., and some twenty acceptances were received. The scheme of decoration was severely Oriental; the daylight was excluded, and the light furnished by numberless, many-sized and variously colored Japanese lanterns. The flowers were acacias and lilies. These, together with the fine collection of rare Japanese prints and exquisite embroideries collected by Mrs. Wakeman during her last year's tour of the Orient, made a riot of color, and the scent of the burning incense and the aromatic odor of the punk, gave a faint idea of the charm of the Orient. Assisting the hostess in receiving were Miss Helen Weidersham and Miss Vera Allen.

Railroad Row is congratulating Mr. W. W. Webster of the Missouri Pacific and the Denver and Rio Grande, on his engagement to Miss Elise G. Hagedorn, daughter of Mr. Alec. Hagedorn. The young people will be married some time in June.

Miss Ivy M. Bunker, sister of Lieutenant L. C. Bunker, is visiting him at San Juan. Miss Bunker has been entertained on several occasions at the Palace, and at other functions given in her honor. She will remain with the Lieutenant until his return to the States.

List of arrivals at Hotel Rafael for week ending February 2d: B. M. Gunn and wife, Miss Hawkins, Miss McNally, Baroness Von Meyerinck, Dudley Gunn, W. H. Mills and wife, Miss Corey, A. THE RETORT COURTEOUS.

The rector of a fashionable Episcopal church in the Western Addition was intoning during service. It was time for the censor-bearer to come forward. In vain the minister looked for him—he did not come.

"Where, oh, where is the incense-pot?" he intoned. "Out in the vestibule, too darn'd hot," intoned the censor-boy after him.

Judge Colt of the Circuit Court of the United States, district of Massachusetts, deserves the congratulations and thanks of the American people for the broad and sweeping decision rendered November 9th, 1903, restraining Adams, Taylor Company, of Boston, Mass., from using the word "Club" in connection with bottled cocktails. The complainants, G. F. Heublein & Brother, have spent much time and money in introducing the celebrated Club Cocktails, which, like all well-known and staple articles, have been more or less imitated. This decision means not only protection to the maker of the goods, but affords equal protection to the purchaser, and simplifies the matter of getting what you want and pay for. We trust the courts will continue in this good work and protect known and established brands from the piracy to which they so long have been subject.

Mrs. Alvinza Hayward has placed ten building lots on sale. These lots adjoin the Strathmore Hotel and are situated in a section of San Francisco that is rapidly increasing in value. Messrs. Baldwin and Hammond are the agents, and the sale is to occur on February 11th, and they will be disposed of at auction. This is an unheard-of opportunity for some one to obtain valuable property at his own price. We predict a large attendance at this sale. The terms are easy, 40 per cent cash and the balance on time. Those who are looking for excellent investments in property, which is bound to increase in value rapidly, had better attend this sale.

To an already large business, with many departments, Messrs. Shreve & Company have now added the interesting feature of stationery. Rumors of further extensions are in the wind. This house is often called the "Tiffany's" of the Pacific Coast—this statement may be all well enough in the way of an average tribute, but we can pay them no higher compliment than to say that this concern stands alone as "Shreve & Company," and needs no "Tiffany" comparison to add to its repute as a business house.

Land on the historic site of Washington's winter camp at Valley Forge has been appraised at only $353 an acre. The blood that oozed from the shoeless feet of the Continental army did not, apparently, make the soil any better for farming.

A publisher is burdened with all kinds of advertising matter, and it is seldom a new plea comes along. When something original finds its way into a publisher's hands he is always glad to let the public know the merits thereof. "Hunter Baltimore Rye" is being advertised by a beautiful picture in color. "First Over the Bars," a reproduction on an ivory-like surface. This is emblematic of the whiskey itself—first-class and clean.

They strolled up Market, and then strolled down,
And looked into a window together.
His eyes were blue, and her eyes were brown,
It was really the finest of weather.

But her eyes were dark with an absolute frown,
As she tugged at her marital tether,
And the cost of the paper the judge handed down,
Was the price of a new ostrich feather.

The method adopted by a sheriff's officer in Oakland to make service on an order of court on Mrs. Eric Lindblom savors of the barbaric. It may be necessary at times to force service by breaking into a man's house, and, even then, the right should be exercised with the greatest discretion, for the sanctity of the domicile must be respected. Our genial and courteous officer, however, not content with that, broke his way into the bathroom in which Mrs. Lindblom was. Such outrageous treatment should not be permitted to the vilest convict, and that a lady, whose only offense was at the very worst contempt of court should be subjected to such an indignity is simply intolerable. It places privacy and decency at the mercy of any hoodlum official. The Deputy Sheriff is in the wrong place. He might get well paid by an irregular Turkish regiment to do the dirty work.

Mrs. Partington's well-meant and industrious efforts to sweep back the Atlantic have their counterpart in the action of the State Grocers' Association of California. These worthy but backward gentlemen are getting up an agitation against the Parcels' Post, chiefly upon the ground that it will bring them into closer competition with Eastern firms. This is ridiculous. We cannot be expected to submit to higher rates of postal delivery simply to keep up the price of retail groceries, and the agitation is doomed to go to pieces on that rock. "It is a hard world, and we are up against organized capital," said the field mouse as the plough went through its nest, but it is not on record that the ploughman stopped. Gentlemen grocers, you have one remedy—cease to adulterate, and be satisfied with a reasonable profit.

Who will clean the sewers? This is the triumphant challenge which has been hurled by the reactionary against social progress. In Berkeley there is actual competition for that particular work. The students want to undertake some next month, and the Sewer Workmen's Union objects. It is too bad that there should be any discussion. The question might be solved by some of the faculty taking a hand when the appropriateness of the occupation would strike even a trades union.

There is a rush of maids and widows anxious to wed Hiram Cronk, aged 104 and the sole survivor of the war of 1812, who has a pension of $25 a month and a prospect of $72 more from the State of New York. Times must be getting harder at the East.

Talk about luck! Here is Jack London on his first trip as a correspondent, and he manages to get locked up and more talked about than all the rest of them put together. It's good luck and well deserved.

Judge Mogan said the other day with more truth than one is accustomed to hear from the Bench: "There are many charitable organizations in this city which pretend to care for unfortunate women, but none of them does. The latest proposition appears to me to be exactly what is needed, and I hope you will receive whatever support you need." Whether the Samaritans to whom the Judge referred will come up to his expectations, it is impossible to say. There is, however, no doubt about the general correctness of his strictures. There appears to be a tendency to exploit these women all round, and the charitable organizations which pretend to succor them are by no means above making profit out of them.

The Dreyfus case seems to possess the same fascination for the Examiner as the head of Charles I did for the famous Mr. Dick. The paper is sure that it caused the revision of the verdict in the case of the French officer, just as it is possessed of the hallucination that it saved the Jews from massacre in Russia on January 7th. It flings Dreyfus at us on every chance, and does not disdain to bring sweeping and absurd charges against the United States army in connection with a small scandal in local army circles. For a philanthropist, the taste of the Examiner runs too much to filth.

Henry Weinstock tried to do a good thing when he founded the "Morals of Trade" lectureship at the University. But the lecture as a means of cultivating trade ethics would appear a little inadequate. How many lecturers will it take to offset one discovery of fraudulent dealings among our commercial magnates? Modern commerce is war in another guise, and war is not a matter in which ethics play any great part. Meanwhile, the lecture course endowed by Mr. Weinstock will at least have given a pleasant Western trip to Dr. Albert Shaw.

The genial highwayman who has been making things merry across the Bay, more than met his match in the person of Miss Sigma Larsen. The lady with the Swedish name is endowed with true Scandinavian thrift, for as soon as she was challenged to produce her money she stuck a five-dollar gold piece in her mouth, leaving the thief fifteen cents, which, for one of her nationality, was remarkable generosity. One cannot help speculating as to what would have happened if Miss Larsen had swallowed the coin, for she would never have let it go.

There is nothing better being done for athletic sports on this coast than the work of the Association Football Team. These young fellows play a straight game for the love of the sport and the training, and without any consideration of money or even popularity. It is an exhibition of pure amateur sport which we do not see sufficiently often, and must have its effect upon the tone of local athletics. I like to say a good thing for local sport when I can, but dear Heaven! there is usually very small opportunity.

John McNaught struck the right note in his speech on journalism to the students at the University. He indulged in no mouthings or platitudes, and gave his audience to understand that a newspaper is just what the public wants it to be. That is correct; but the question still arises—which public? One can pick a public of the slums and write for that, turn one's-self into a hyena and eat garbage, like the "Monarch of the Dailies." Is that journalism? Call it what you like, but it appears to pay.

Wireless telegraphy under government auspices in Alaska is also wordless.

Tricou's Trousseau Triumphant

Fairy tales, like miracles, are still happening. The modern ones may be a little more prosaic than those of the far-away time when the suitor for the hand of a princess had to go in quest of "plum jewels." The up-to-date tale involves a heart and a "Princess," by brevet, also a gallant young knight from the fussy West, and plenty of perseverance. The "plum jewel" in this case was the securing of a position befitting the husband of a "daughter and a granddaughter of the United States Navy." All of which is about Miss Sarah Randolph Colhoun, daughter of Paydirector and Mrs. S. R. Colhoun, U. S. N., and Assistant Paymaster Eugene H. Tricou, son of Henry P. Tricou of this city, who were married January 15th at the New York Navy Yard, and who bid fair "to live happy forever after."

The young people met about four years ago, and no mistaking, theirs was a case of love, intense and picturesque from the very start. Miss Colhoun, beautiful and petted, with everything for the mere asking, was quite willing to lay her heart and what fortune she had at the feet of her adoring swain, but her fond parents reminded her that a "daughter and a granddaughter of the Navy" must wed fitting position. This appeal to her pride of navy ancestry brought the young Miss to a round-about-face. Forthwith she presented her ultimatum to young Mr. Tricou. Knowing that conditions precluded the possibility of his getting into the navy via Annapolis, Miss Colhoun said:

"Go forth, study, pass a successful examination for the Paymaster's Department, get a commission, and then you may claim me for your bride."

"For a poor young man who had not traveled over all the paths that lead to higher education, and who was not the happy possessor of very influential connections, the conditions were about as hard as the next-to-impossible ones that made life miserable for the story book heroes.

Well, the young people parted, Miss Colhoun going where the Lord and the navy took her father. Brave Mr. Tricou was here in San Francisco trying to find the exceedingly definite "x" in the love problem his sweetheart had given him to find. There were days, plenty of them, when his studies went along with leaden feet, for he would receive letters from Miss Colhoun, whom he called "The Princess," telling of the interesting men she was meeting in foreign climes, and of the wonderfully good times she was having—always assuring him that "Poll's heart was ever true." Tangible evidences of devotion were not withheld. Once a beautiful watch inscribed "From the Princess," and with her miniature painted on the inside of the case, came, and was as much of a tonic as a summer in the country.

Tricou found a young man who had successfully passed the examination for the Paymaster's Service, and told him of his plight, with the result that he received a copy of the examination that had brought success to one young man. In this way Tricou found out the kind of knowledge required, and was able to direct his studies accordingly. In due time he passed the examination, was fortunate to get an appointment, and so was eligible for the hand of a "daughter and a granddaughter of the Navy."

The Tricou-Colhoun wedding was a notable affair, but very few knew that it was one more proof that faint heart ne'er won fair lady."

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

COLUMBIA—A Chinese Honeymoon. Finely mounted. Enjoyable.

ALCAZAR—A Colonial Girl. A well played play.

ORPHEUM—Vaudeville. Unrestrained, continuous laughter.

CENTRAL—East Lyane. Vast improvement over previous plays.

TIVOLI—When Johnny Comes Marching Home. Crowded Houses.

GRAND—Lost River. Good of its kind.

FISCHER'S—The Beauty Shop. Continued success.

CHUTES—Montagues Cockatoo Circus. A very fine bill.

The theatres this week have done a rushing business, although in most instances the bills were hold-overs. At Fischer's, the interest in "The Beauty Shop" does not wane. This is the last week of this hodge-podge of amusing nonsense. At the Grand there is the play called "Lost River." There is a pretty little story running through the lines, but the acting does not merit extraordinary mention. The audiences, if one is to judge by the opening night, are well satisfied with the production, and the critic is relegated to a back seat. There is no telling where the good public is going to land you in this matter of expert criticism. "Lost River" may therefore be considered a popular success.

At the Alcazar the company is cast in a play which does not come up to the preceding productions by a long margin. Miss Block makes the most there is in the part of Molly Heddin, and strange as it may seem, this is the best we have seen of Durkin. His conception of the part of Godfrey Remsen admits of little or no criticism. It is simply excellent.

I had occasion last week to remark on the versatility of John B. Maher. In the part of Giles, the old servant devoted to Godfrey, Mr. Maher shows up to great advantage. Miss Frances Starr is fast becoming one of the most popular actresses in the city. She is greeted with that indulgence the public always grants to those they love. She has beauty and a pretty little innocent manner that is taking, and more than once in this play the risible quality of her lines is brought out by her mannerisms rather than by the lines themselves.

Conness is very good in spots, and in others he rants to an extent that is reprehensible. Mr. Conness is a splendid actor, and his work heretofore has not called for criticism. Eleanor Gordon is at times too strenuous, but the part of Lady Danvers is one which is most difficult of portrayal, and it may be said of Miss Gordon that there are parts in this conception in which her work is well done. At other times she is too tragic.

The Jack Osborne of Mr. Hilliard is good, although at times there is a note of insincerity in the voice which he should overcome. Mr. George Osborne's "Colonel Carteret" is fine. The little scene between himself and Lady Ketletas, in which the Colonel finally capitulates, brings down the house.

* * *

At the Central, Mr. Herschel Mayall is winning new laurels, and Eugenia Thais Lawton has added another play to her repertoire. The audience follows the play, keenly alive to every change in the lines and quickly showing its disapproval of the villain or its approval of the hero. The Carlisle of Mayall is a good performance, and Miss Lawton's Mme. Vine meets an unqualified approval from the public.

"Caro Roma as Miss Pemberton in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" is a vast improvement over

Anna Lichter, and when it is remembered that Anna Lichter's rendition of the part was most acceptable, those who have not seen Caro Roma will realize the pleasure that is in reserve. Soon we will say farewell to "Johnny," and it is but fair to the Tivoli management to give them credit for making a comic opera immensely popular that was a part failure all over the East. It is all in knowing how to do things. Ferris Hartman's "Jonathan Phoenix" is a wonderful piece of character work, and he deserves praise for the original conception. The walk, the leer and the general make-up stamps our old-time friend as an actor of resource that is far and away above the ordinary.

The last week of the "Chinese Honeymoon" is being given to large houses at the Columbia. The scenes are a drawing card.

* * *

I wish to put up an earnest plea for those unfortunates who disturb audiences by leaving before a performance is finished. These poor people are not actuated by malice. By investigation I find that they are generally servants to rich people who make it a rule that they must be at home before the clock strikes twelve. It is an unfortunate thing that some employers are so stringent with their help. It prevents them from obtaining many pleasures. They may not, under this rule, spend more than an hour at the fashionable restaurants, before taking the cars for the residences of the wealthy. Then they have to spend considerable time preparing the fires for the next morning, attending the usual duties of hired help, and they retire too tired to come up to the scratch in their next day's dish-washing. I hope that employers reading this little plea will treat these early risers at the theatres with more leniency and that it may lead to a sensible extension of their hours of leisure. This is a case for the Amalgamated Dishwashers' Union.

* * *

Fastly furious and frivolous, "The Gay Parisians" ought to keep the Alcazar patrons in a merry mood next week. This play is funny enough, for it kept all New York on the broad grin for two hundred nights at the Madison Square, with Sadie Martinot as the flighty wife.

Maher is cast for a good part, and I am told that the rest of the company will have an opportunity to show everything there is in them. Following this, February 15th, comes "The Charity Ball," a most powerful American comedy drama, by David Belasco and H. C. De Mille.

Klaw & Erlanger announce the coming of Rogers Brothers at the Columbia, beginning Monday evening, May 20th. Their "The Rogers Brothers in London" is said to be the greatest production in which these comedians have been seen.

* * *

The first act of "Harriet's Honeymoon," the new Ditrichstein comedy in which Mary Mannering is at present successfully appearing, shows the promenade and springs at an obscure German watering place. The second act is played in another portion of the promenade, and in the Kursaal. The third has for its local scene a charming bit of forest. Manager McKee will present Miss Mannering in this city in her new play in the near future. Her supporting company is an exceptionally strong one.

On Monday next, February 8th, the patrons of Fischer's Theatre will witness the first performance of "Roly Poly," and it gives fair promise of being the crowning glory of an unusually successful season. The book and lyrics of "Roly Poly" are from the "pencil," not pen, of Will Carleton, which fact in itself puts forth a strong argument for an unprecedented success.

Louis James and Frederick Warde are to give us the original and spectacular drama, "Alexander the Great," at the Columbia for two weeks, commencing Monday. Scenically concerned this is said to be a great play. The names of Warde and James should be great as drawing cards.

There are many who will remember the visit here of Billy Van and Rose Beaumont, season before last, and they will remember that Billy Van is as funny as can be, and that Miss Beaumont is good to look upon. They will give us "My Busy Day," by Geo. Totten Smith, for their first week. John T. Thorne and Grace Carleton will endeavor to amuse, and their record as fun-makers is a great one. Looking over the rest of the programme, I find that it will be one of the best the Orpheum has ever given us.

There will be many new acts at the Chutes this coming week, and the bill abounds in novelty. Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Hall, the original "Bowery Boy and Girl," and Winstanley and Sullivan, said to be one of the best dancing teams before the public, will make their first appearance here, as will also Hanlon and Zanfrella, sensational aerial acrobats, and McCarver and Garey, a singing and dancing comedy duo. Guy Wilson and Nellie Daly-Moran will present a new comedy skit entitled "The First Quarrel;" Florence Rayfield, "the little Patti," will change her selections, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The animatoscope will show the latest novelties in moving pictures, and the amateurs will appear on Thursday night. The Zoo has received an important addition in "Hannibal," a magnificent specimen of the African lion, and second alone to "Wallace," the handsomest "king of beasts" in captivity.

The Weber & Field's Company commence at the Grand next week. The company includes Lillian Russell, Peter F. Dailey, Louis Mann, Charles Ross, Mabel Fenton, John T. Kelly and Weber and Field. "Life," of New York, says, regarding the Weber-fieldian productions: "Last week of the season. The Goose has ceased to lay the golden eggs." The management, at an initial expense of ten thousand dollars, has succeeded in changing the breed of goose. It remains to be seen if the Pacific Coast article is as prolific as the New York domesticated aquatic fowl.

"East Lynne," at the Central, will be followed by "In Sight of Saint Paul's," an English melodrama replete with powerful scenes.

The Looker-On

The Supervisors have appropriated $5,000 to clean Chinatown. The object is commendable, but the manner in which it is to be attained seems to me open to criticism. The unsanitary conditions extant in Chinatown are found in cellars, entryways, back yards, on roofs and in other places within, or immediately surrounding the buildings. Now, if a resident of the Western Addition permitted garbage to accumulate in his back yard until the smell thereof arose unto the heavens, what would happen? Why, he would be warned to remove it, failing to do which he would be promptly jugged, and heavily fined for organizing and perpetuating a public nuisance. The garbage would be also suppressed, and the cost would be taxed against the tenant or the owner of the property. In no event, however, would the Supervisors appropriate public money to clean up private premises. Why, then, should they draw $5,000 from the city treasury to clean up private property in Chinatown? Why should not the property owners be compelled to do this necessary work at their own expense? If they refuse, why should they not be jailed? Is there anything in the ownership of property in Chinatown which makes one immune from the local ordinances, or the penal code? Moreover, where do the Supervisors get authority to expend public money for this purpose? They propose drawing the sum appropriated from the Urgent Necessity Fund. This expenditure is certainly not within the scope of "urgent necessity," as contemplated by the charter. "Urgent necessity" is sometimes unforeseen, arising from a public calamity or from other causes that no prudent man could forecast. Cleaning the property of the owners of land in Chinatown is certainly not an unforeseen necessity. It is a perennial necessity, but it lies at the door of these owners, and not at the door of the city treasury. There is plenty of law to compel recalcitrant landlords to have respect for the health of their neighbors. The law sadly needs enforcement. I wonder if the patronage question has anything to do with the appropriation so generously made by the Supervisors? They have appointed at least a dozen "wreckers" for the Chinatown work. These men average over $4.00 a day. Their wages alone amount to about $1,200 a month. The patronage is distributed among the Supervisors. That is enough to give us pause—isn't it?

Sheriff Curtis says he intends to clip off some of the privileges enjoyed during the past four years by favorite prisoners in the local jails. Among the first to suffer, it is said, will be Mrs. Botkin, who was convicted some time ago of poisoning the wife of Dunning, a newspaper man, by sending her doctored candy through the mail. For three years or thereabouts Mrs. Botkin has been confined in the old Industrial School, now known as the Branch County Jail. Here she has a private suite; she has been given unusual privacy; she has had her "day at home," if you please, and she has been given every opportunity to win sympathy from a public which was convinced at the time of her trial and conviction that she was a soulless, debased and hardened criminal, who should have been hanged. She will have a new trial and may escape the gallows, for many of the former witnesses against her cannot be obtained again. Before her final escape, the Sheriff will do some good by giving her a taste of real prison life. Why women poisoners should receive so much maudlin sympathy is past my understanding. There is Mrs. Maybrick, for instance. Her mother's indefatigable efforts during the past fifteen years have manufactured a certain public sympathy for her. Yet, does any man who followed her trial, and who is aware of her character, and the character of her mother, doubt her guilt? This same maudlin sympathy saved her from the gallows, and caused her sentence to be life imprisonment. And now she is free. The law should deal equal justice to man and woman alike. A woman poisoner is certainly a far more debased and dangerous character than a footpad. She has a far worse effect on public morality than has the highwayman. Yet short shrift is made of the latter if he kills his victim. Why should the stealthy female assassin be spared the noose?

Mayor Schmitz is "coming on." Three weeks ago he administered a well-deserved rebuke to Fire Commissioner Parry by deposing him from the chairmanship of the joint Board which controls the Department of Electricity. Parry may not have embezzled that colt, but he made a bad mess of his horse trading, and the Mayor thought he should be set down a peg or two. If Parry had only called on prizefighter McQuaide for aid the public would never have heard of the colt. Horse-trading and "bronco busting" is McQuaide's ostensible business when he is not engaged as a plug-ugly to scare timid opponents of Martin Kelly. It must have been the prizefighter's success as a horse-trader that commended him to Dr. Ward as a good man for the position of Assistant Warden at the County Hospital. But the Mayor's sense of political obligations was not sufficiently strong to hold McQuaide in his job. So the horse-trader has been thrown out of the hospital. Now, if Schmitz will only turn his attention to Police Commissioner Hutton, he may do the present administration more credit by causing another vacancy. Hutton was the attorney for the notorious Baroness Twickheim of unsavory memory. Some months ago Hutton's wife sued him for divorce, and the complaint was rich in detail. Wonder what became of that case?

Both of them are about as polite and as misoising as a couple of drunken fisherwomen, each endeavoring to ruin the other's reputation. Nor do the women in the case seem to be much above the level of the men. It is a new thing for a lady to rush into print with an affidavit to the effect that "a gallant son of Mars" tried to kiss her. Were the poor things afraid no one would believe a man tried to kiss them? Therefore, did they make their solemn "affdavys" to the extraordinary fact? The whole affair is a dirty mess, and everybody engaged in it should be suppressed by the police.

So Reuben Wolf wants to get back into the Police Department. He has sued the Commissioners, and has set up a very loud cry of unfair trial, prejudice and mistreatment. Wolf is a nephew of the late Chief Lees, through whose influence Wolf was made a Sergeant of Police. When Lees was Chief, Wolf was Commissary of the city prison. He was not dismissed from the department at that time, nor was he sent to jail. As soon as Lees passed away, Wolf was left without a protector. Exceeding success in his peculiar way had made Wolf bold, and it was this very boldness that worked his ruin. The Police Commissioners found him guilty of taking bad money, and dismissed him. Now, he is trying to beat his way back through the courts. Some men are never satisfied. Has he forgotten that he was once Commissary of the City Prison?

Miriam Michelson has the best short story in one of the current magazines. She is doing good literary work. Her brother is also doing good work in New York. It is a talented family in a literary way. That eccentric genius, Arthur McKewen, married one of the Michelson girls.

A friend of mine saw Colonel Isaac Trumbo at Kearny and Post streets last Monday talking to a lady in blue. An hour later he again saw the gallant Colonel talking to a lady in grey; half an hour later the Colonel was again observed with two ladies in black, and ten minutes after that he courteously handed two other ladies into a carriage in front of a Kearny street confectionery store.

"The Colonel has all the rest of us beaten a block when it comes to being the real thing with the ladies," said my friend. "Say, I wonder if he is acting as a Mormon apostle out here, and is making converts to the cause? You know, Salt Lake City is much nearer now, since that short cut was made across the Lake."

Jim Budd is buying up street car lines, and riding around in automobiles these days. He takes rank now among the real moneyed men of the San Joaquin, and when he returns from his quest for the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow, in which is the document certifying Hearst's nomination for the Presidency, the gentle James will be a bigger man than ever—financially. He may not find Hearst's title to the nomination, but he will find the pot of gold all right. Trust Budd for that. He has not been Governor of the Golden State without being able to tell gold whenever and wherever he sees it. It was Charley Fair's contest of his father's will that put Jim Budd on the way to fortune. It is said Budd drew down $100,000 from Charley Fair. Of course, he must have rendered service for it, but what particular service was rendered is not generally known. Budd is not now the same man that leaped upon the stage at old Union Hall years ago and told his hearers that when they came to Sacramento to see the Governor they would find the latch-string on the outer side, and all they would have to do would be to pull it, and yell, "Hello, Jim!" No, James, is now of slower gait, of more conservative mien and mole of thought but ever, as of yore, his weather eye is peeled for those that "are born every day." Since "Smiling Patsy" Carroll passed away, it is safe to say that J. Budd is the "best ever."

Financial Review.

Leading Mines can hardly be found in any part of Tonopah.

A more cheerful community exists at Tonopah. The railroad which has been discussed for two long weary years and construction of which has been expected almost any month during that period, is at last being built. By the 1st of June tons of high-grade ore will be shipped to the smelter at a price many times cheaper than it costs at present freighted over the alkali desert by horse and mule teams, taking frequently a week to cover what the railroad will do in a few hours. The enormous sum which will be saved on freights by the Montana Tonopah and the Tonopah Mining Company will be sufficient to pay two large dividends. These mines can, with the large amount of high-grade ore in sight, extract a million dollars a month, and some phenomenal returns may be expected as soon as the railway is operating and the mines are being worked to their full capacity, with a large force of miners. The largest ledge discovered so far at Tonopah is the Macdonald vein of the Montana-Tonopah mine, 32 feet in width, 12 feet of which is high-grade smelting ore and the rest a high-grade milling ore. A block of this ore, 100 feet long and 12 feet wide, contains 9230 tons, which at $50 a ton, about one-fourth the value of most of the shipments so far made from this mine, it would net $461,500. It is most certainly a significant fact, worthy of note by those who are anxious to be in on a rising market that the management and its friends are buying in heavily. A great deal of stock of the North Star mine, which is now connected with the Montana on the 500 foot level, is also being acquired by the Montana Company's management. Some of the richest ore yet discovered in Tonopah, assaying as high as $3,000 a ton, has been taken out of the North Star mine, and there are a number of carloads of high-grade ore ready to be shipped in June by the railway. The general impression in the camp is that Montana-Tonopah will shortly declare another dividend. About $100,000 worth of ore now is being shipped monthly, and there is enough money in the treasury to pay for a mill and increase of machinery and a fat dividend besides. The Montana-Tonopah Company is the most popular in the camp. Mining operations are conducted in an expert and thoroughly business-like manner, and the books of the company are at the service of the shareholders whenever they wish to see them. This policy contrasts so favorably with the secretive and mysterious air assumed by the Philadelphia people who control the destinies of the Tonopah Mining Company. In another twelve months it is more than probable that the Montana-Tonopah stock will be selling higher than that of any other mine in the district, for it has the largest high-grade vein in the district, besides having four others, any one of which would make a valuable mine. The number of shares issued is much less than that of the Tonopah Mining Company, and the management, as so far demonstrated, is more than usually shrewd and reliable.

The Midway Mill will shortly be running full blast. The late stoppage, being caused not by any defect in the mill itself, which has given the most splendid results, but on account of the blowing out of one of the big cylinders of the engine, caused either by extreme carelessness or by malicious intent of some one having access to the engine house.

The principal feature of the week on 'change has been the gradual but sure rise in the Montana-Tonopah stock, there being ready buyers at $1.45.

A Regrettable Incident.

The announcement of the suspension of the well-known stock-broking firm of Bolton and De Ruyter took the street by surprise. The firm was one of the highest respectability in its line, and its clientele numbered most of the substantial men in town. The trouble which has brought about the present embarrassment is due to the failure of a big New York firm some months ago, for which Bolton & De Ruyter acted as Western correspondents. The firm is deserving of much sympathy among the local financial coterie, and it will be hoped that the suspension is only of a temporary nature, and that the firm will emerge stronger and more successful than ever out of its present difficulties.

Stocks and Bonds Quiet and Dull.

In the local security market business has been rather quiet during the week in all lines. Bonds have been in light demand, and the industrial shares have been dull as a rule. Gas and Electric has a rather sloppy tone, but of course no one is surprised at that. The only wonder is that in view of the existing situation outside shareholders have the nerve to hold on to their stock, and risk the possibilities for much lower prices, which seem inevitable. It may be that they are in hopes that a clean sweep will be made in the present unpopular management, which, if maintained, will certainly end in the organization of a new company, which would have little difficulty as things are going of raising the necessary money for a new and effective plant by public subscription. It is coming to this pretty rapidly, and if the people interested in the late bond inflation attempt to force the present high-salaried officials upon an already outraged community, they will succeed in toppling their already tottering edifice over their ears in quicker time than perhaps they may imagine.

Pine-St. Market.

The stock market on Pine street rules steady, with fluctuations enough in the North-end shares to enable an operator to pick up a few dollars during the week. Preparations are now being made to open up the 2350 level of the Con.-Cal.-Virginia mine, but work has been slow recently, owing to changes going on at the C. & C. shaft, caused by the installation of a new blower for the Ophir. Latest news from that property is to the effect that the development of ore of good grade continues, and the shipments substantiate the statements made of mining conditions. At the Andes mine work on the shaft is about completed, and an increase can be expected in the ore yield from this time forward. Work is going on to good advantage in other quarters along the lode, and the future in general promises well.

Bad Gas and Economy.

A correspondent who seems pretty well at home with the inside running of the S. F. Gas and Electric Company, vents his wrath upon the Lawless-Bourne administration for the manner in which they have swung the axe and the decapitation which has resulted among the employees of the company formerly connected with the Pacific Gas Improvement Company, under Mr. C. O. G. Miller. These men, it appears, were generally concealed by their fellow employees as some of the most efficient workmen in the present over-capitalized institution. They are said to have done their work faithfully and conscientiously under the new control, and were in no way responsible for the opinions and utterances of Mr. Miller. Possibly the writer has some ground for complaint in the matter, viewed from the high standard of morality which ruled in years gone by, when a man stood upon his own behavior and was not held responsible for the action of others or liable to discharge on account of a personal antipathy upon the part of an employer to a member of the firm he worked for at some prior period. Judging from all that is said of the new combine and the quality of the gas on the streets at night, which they have the gall to ask the city to pay for, it would be idle work to expect any consideration for the plain, ordinary deck-hands, when high salaries have to be maintained for the favored few. The explanation for the discharge of these P. G. Improvement Company's employees would naturally be accounted for on the ground of an attempt to reduce operating expenses, although effective men in the works, judging from the quality of the output, cannot be spared to the same advantage as the high-priced gentility now occupying upholstered seats in the head office. It will be hoped that the Supervisors will look into the question of the company's reduction of expenses as to its bearing, if any, upon the miserable quality of the gas now furnished, at what are claimed to be extortionate rates by unfortunate citizens forced to do business with this miserably disposed concern.

A Paradise for Thieves.

Some time ago the News Letter remarked, in face of the impudent effrontery of a set of wild-cat promoters, who flaunted their fraudulent wares in the most bare-faced manner in the columns of Eastern papers and magazines which were ready to rob their readers for the sake of a little dirty money, that it was only necessary to give the thieving scalywags rope enough and they would hang themselves. The sheep have now turned on the wolves, and from all over the country comes the news of prosecutions of swindlers who, in other lands, where justice acts without fear or favor, would have been convicted and jailed months ago. Whitaker Wright, had he not taken the law into his own hands, would have stepped from the dock, when convicted and sentenced after a trial which lasted a few days, into his striped suit and a convict prison; here time is given for appeal after appeal to a higher court to grow old in years, while witnesses drop out of sight by removal from one locality to another or by death. A case was mentioned in the papers this week of a man convicted of stealing $80, who had been confined in jail for six years pending a decision upon appeals as to what shall be done. Another item, in announcing the fact that the appeals of no less than seven murderers, many of them taken red-handed, had just been presented to the Supreme Court, concludes with the edifying remark that many months must elapse before action will be taken upon any of their cases. When capital crimes are treated in this careless manner, what can be expected in the way of punishment for plain, ordinary theft. And yet we will persist in vaunting an advanced civilization over and above all the enlightened sections of the globe.

L. & M. Alexander & Co. are located as before, 110 Montgomery street, and rent and sell typewriters.

AN INSPECTOR OF ELEVATORS.

The News Letter has no intention of suggesting the creation of another chance to graft. An Inspector of Elevators is a necessity—it is the only means at hand to prevent a terrible accident. It is one of the crying evils in municipal misgovernment that no protection is offered those who are compelled to travel in elevators. A municipal Inspector of Elevators should not be selected in the same way that other inspectorships are selected. This officer should be well paid, and he should be a thoroughly competent man, well versed in mechanics and in knowledge of elevator machinery particularly. This inspector should not receive the appointment as a political reward. He should not be one of those that hang around the Mayor's office with dripping fangs waiting to pounce on anything that offers.

He should receive his appointment from the three parties in interest—the public, as represented by the city authorities, in the person of the Mayor; a delegate from the accident insurance companies, and a third commissioner from the makers of elevators. The insurance companies and the elevator men are interested in seeing a thoroughly honest man appointed, as any accident means damage suits and loss, and the authorities should see that politics cut no figure whatever. Let us have an Inspector of Elevators, and the quicker the better.

ALVINZA HAYWARD.

That rugged, stalwart figure in finance and mining, Alvinza Hayward, is bending to the blast of age. He is said to be stricken with a fatal paralysis. Those who know him at close range credit him with a kindly, cheerful personality. At the San Mateo home there will be deep grief should he die, and that grief will extend to the quail, the peacocks and the deer, who will wait, day after day, for the sight of the kindly, tall old man's outstretched hand with fool.

A YELLOW LIE THAT HURT DEEPLY.

When the Examiner, some three months ago, without investigation, published an account of the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Saunders, the well-loved veteran actress, it brought many troubled, uncertain days to the dear little old lady whose life is fluttering out in her little apartment in Capp street. As she is still a notable figure in the histrionic world, the announcement of her death was promptly sent East by the Associated Press. Denial was made of the statement, but not by the Examiner. At any rate, the truth about Mrs. Saunders did not travel upon the heels of the false report in time to undo the mischief wrought.

The first statement reached Joe Jefferson, Mrs. Saunders' cousin, who with characteristic generosity has, for many years, sent a check to her, which has meant not extravagances, but necessities, for the charming old lady. He wondered, perhaps, that no personal word had been sent him by those who must know of their relations, but the check did not come, and worry was added to the helpless days. Proud in the extreme, Mrs. Saunders would not sanction any letter-writing, because she feared that at last the day had come when Cousin Joe regarded her as a burden, no longer to be borne. Friends in San Francisco saw to it that Mrs. Saunders did not need for anything, but the sorrow that comes of apparent neglect was a constant one. Finally friends wrote and soon Joe Jefferson knew that his beloved little cousin was still alive, and the check came immediately. As there must always be a nurse now for the invalid, the money was never more needed.

If Mrs. Saunders had been wise in the ways of real estate and building corporations, she would not have been in need in her last years of the bounty of any one. About fifteen years ago she had to walk out of the home for which she had worked so long. She did not understand, that was all. When she made her payments on the house, she thought that she was paying on the full amount. Instead of that, after the ways of such things, there was a mortgage standing; she had been paying off on one-half the purchase amount, and interest on the remainder. It was too late then to save her home. Her working days were over. Fifty years on the stage had made up the sum of them. That chapter was closed. Mrs. Saunders sorrowfully walked out of the shelter for which she had worked and saved. Since that time she has been where she is now. Joe Jefferson and a few others have contributed cheerfully. Friends have kept the larder from being bare; they have gone religiously to her for the kindly ministrations, and in turn she has been a benediction upon every life that has touched hers. Now she is 85, helpless, physically, but mentally a sweet companion. The tree is still green at the top.

ON PLEASURE BENT.

It is becoming quite the fashion for business men and their families to take a trip to San Jose for surcease from business cares. The Livery and Hack Company, at 18 San Fernando street, will furnish excellent and well-informed drivers to tour parties in and about the Garden City.

—The epicure knows that an oyster should be eaten as near the oyster bed as possible, and that the least possible time should ensue between the time the oyster is "tonged" to the minute of consumption. Moraghan's Oyster House in the California Market is world famed as the place best to secure the succulent bivalve. The "chef" is pre-eminent as a master of the art of cookery, and no one seeking satisfaction in oysters will ever do aught but praise Moraghan's.

CAN THE ETHIOPIAN CHANGE HIS SKIN?

"Can the Ethiopian change his skin?" The famous question which the poet propounded in the fall before that the answer is necessarily in the negative, seems to be in a fair way of settlement in the affirmative with the help of radium, which, if one may believe our scientific folk, appears to be the long lost universal cure, and solvent for all the troubles that do afflict our mortal state. A young man at the University of California is engaged in making a nigger white by subjecting him to the purifying rays of this modern wonder-worker, and an Eastern dispatch tells us that the attention of the scientific world will be fixed on South Bend (Ind.) during the next few months because a physician of that town—hitherto not suspected of scientific activity—is engaged in working out a scheme to prevent pigmentation of the negro babies of the future.

What if the race question that has perplexed so many generations of statesmen should be solved by the simple process of whitewashing. If the Ethiopian change his skin, shall he therefore live up to the obligations of his new color? The possibilities of confusion that may result from the prevalence of the whitened negro are alarming. Or if the transformation should be incomplete, and we should be confronted with a breed of speckled niggers, that possibility seems to add a new terror to that condition which the newspapers are pleased to describe as the "complexity of modern life."

Hitherto the efforts to civilize the negro have been mostly confined to the spread of whiskey and missionaries. The work of neither of these agents has met with any very gratifying success. It is up to the scientists now to try what they can do with their chemical whitewash brush.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

Mr. Paul Gerson begs to state that in response to numerous requests he will on January 1st open a Juvenile Department in connection with his School of Acting, and has secured the services of a teacher of experience specially qualified for this work, Miss Lillian E. Muscio. One of the features of the department will be a dancing class in charge of Signora Matildita. In order that each one may have his or her proper time and attention, the class will be limited to twenty-five. Mr. Gerson will give his personal attention to every pupil. For terms, etc., call or address the Juvenile Department of the Paul Gerson School of Acting, Native Sons' Building, 414 Mason street. The fourth of the series of matinee performances by students at Paul Gerson's School of Acting will take place at the California Theatre on Friday afternoon, February 12th. A brilliant programme will be presented. The school will be assisted by the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, this institution hereafter joining its artistic interests with the School of Acting.

The latest style in shirts may be found at John W. Carmany's Chronicle Building.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The automobile is taking a new place in the world. It is assuming a position that will command the attention of business men not alone in the line of manufacturing this new mode of conveyance, but in every branch of trade where distance must be covered outside of the channels controlled by the railroads. The saving of time traveling from one place to another within the confines of the business world is a factor which everyone who has large commercial interests at stake must consider.

Official figures show that there are 3,039 purely commercial automobiles used in France, against 234 three years ago, the greatest increase being in the last year.

Here we have the key to a new situation—the unqualified recognition of the automobile. The opposition that has been met with in the past must now fade away. It was but the other day that I was talking with a member of a firm which at the present time uses twelve buggies. He said: "We are seriously considering replacing our horses with runabout automobiles. We know that we will save over a thousand dollars in keep alone, not to mention the immeasurable saving there will be made in time. I think it will easily double the working capacity of our force. This not alone effects a saving in salaries, but concentrates our business so that the responsible heads of departments are able to keep in closer touch with our trade. You can easily see what that means to us. The only thing that prevents us making the change at once is doubt as to whether the modern vehicle is to be depended upon; whether it will always be there when we want it. If the automobile can answer the question satisfactorily, we will make the change."

Here, then, right at our own doors, we see what the commercial automobile means. When it once becomes a conveyance in business, all opposition to it will cease, and its rights will be recognized by all legislative bodies. There will be no more passing of ordinances to bar its advancement. It will cease to be a thing purely of pleasure.

That the automobile is past the experimental stage is a question that has already been settled. The manufacturers know just what may be expected of their vehicles and can in cases of standard makes guarantee satisfaction. The present trouble is not caused so much by defective machines as it is by the inexperience of the handlers and care-takers. It is, to my mind, more surprising that the average machine runs as well as it does. Just compare the care that the average automobile gets with that of the locomotive or engine on a vessel. Most of the bearings and parts of a locomotive or engine are more massive than those of an automobile, and are better able to stand the wear and tear of travel than the delicate parts of the modern chariot, but you do not find the railroad officials allowing their engines to run a whole week without a thorough cleaning or being thoroughly tested for a loose bolt or screw. The ordinary locomotive travels on an average about thirty miles per hour when under way on smooth rails, while the average automobile makes that gait, and generally a better one, over roads that do not make easy riding in a fine spring carriage. Therefore, how much greater is the strain on the automobile than on the locomotive, and yet the public expects that the former should give as much satisfaction, if not more, than the latter.

The makers from time to time publish statements from customers relative to the satisfaction that the machines give, and how long they run without repairing. In most of these cases it will be found that the testimonials come from those who understand machinery.

What is needed in every automobile center is a school where owners and handlers may be taught all that there is pertaining to the workings of an automobile engine.

Until that time, the home offices of the different makes should insist that all the branch officers and representatives should report all and every kind of repairs to the machines, and give the cause of mishap. These data should then be compiled and sent to those who have purchased from them. It will reduce the income from the machine shop, but the difference will be made up in the increased sales, for many who are not convinced that the experimental stage is past will have better examples before them than are to be seen at the present time.

The Automobile Club of California is seriously considering a meet to be held in this city next May. The meet last year was a great success for the first attempt, Barney Oldfield, of course, being the chief attraction, but it was easily seen that the other events would not have held the public a second time. In the coming event the officers of the club will have to supply more than one man of the calibre of Oldfield if they expect the gate receipts to be a success. Another feature that should receive attention this year is the racing of touring cars. The two special events on the last day, the contest of the Winton cars and the Autocars, brought out more enthusiasm from the visiting public than any of the other events outside of those in which Oldfield took part. There is nothing gained by trying to convert touring cars into racers and then sending them off from scratch. The classifying of races, by weight only, is not a satisfactory way. It is as unequal and as uninteresting as trying to race a cruising yacht with racing canvas against a racing machine without time allowance.

What would horse racing be if it were not for the weight handicap. If the trade will strip down its touring cars to try and make racers and the meet officials will insist on giving the events, then let a handicap be devised that will not only take weight into consideration, but also horse-power and every other factor of speed. Then, and then only, will you have contests that will not be processions and finishes that will bring the people to their feet in the grand stand.

When Barney Oldfield was in the city last fall he asked for a straight-away piece of ground three miles long, as he wanted to make a world's record for the mile. There was not a piece of roadway in the vicinity of San Francisco on which he would attempt to open up the Bullet No. 2. In Los Angeles he repeated the request, and was unable to find what he wanted; but the request fell on fertile soil, for the members of the Automobile Club will start within the next thirty days one of the finest speedways in the world. It will be seven and one-half miles long, with only a drop of fifteen feet in the whole distance.

There will be three miles in which to get up speed, one mile to go for the records, and three and one-half miles to slow down. It will run from Ivy Station to

W. B. Gliddon of Fruitvale toured to San Jose last Sunday. During the day he covered over a hundred miles, which is the longest distance he has traveled in his new White car.

John H. Spring was another of the Fruitvale automobilists who was on the highway Sunday. He made the trip to Irvington and return in his White touring car.

John D. Spreckels had both of his White touring cars out last Sunday. Miss Grace Spreckels handled one of the machines, while the Commodore operated the other. Among Mr. Spreckels' guests on the trip to San Jose and return were Miss Lillie Spreckels, Miss Dolbeer, Eugene Murphy, Dr. Zeile and brother.

Manager Hawkins, of the White Company, has just returned from the New York automobile show. He states that the show was a great success and most interesting, but there was nothing remarkably new to be seen. He reports that the White Company made the most sales.

F. A. Moore of San Rafael is one of the latest purchasers of a White touring car.

Douglas Watson made a trip to San Jose last Sunday in his new St. Louis touring car.

C. S. Middleton and wife are back from the New York show. They had a most delightful time and enjoyed everything but the weather, which hastened their return to California.

Mrs. J. A. Marsh ran her Pierce-Arrow touring car to San Jose last Sunday. On the trip home she had the pleasure of passing every machine on the road.

Five Winton touring cars made the century run to San Jose and return last Sunday. The owners who took the ride were Colonel Lally, Mr. Spieker, Geo. Hammond, Robert White and Richard Mier.

Mr. F. M. Stewart toured the Berkeley Hills in his Winton last Sunday.

Colonel Lally, George Hammond, William Bogen, and Parker Whitney have just received their new Winton touring cars.

Mr. P. T. Moore, of Elmira, has just purchased a Stevens-Duryea from the Pioneer Automobile Company. He made the trip to his home in quick time last week.

Twelve orders for the new Oldsmobile touring car have been received by the Pioneer Automobile Co.

Dr. A. H. Giannini has placed an order for an Oldsmobile touring car.

May Tenbrock, John Henshaw, Kathryn Beresford, of the "Chinese Honeymoon" Company, were out with a party of friends in two Toledo touring cars for a drive through the Presidio and the Park last Sunday and reported a very pleasant drive.

The National Automobile Company report that they have two cars of two-cylinder Knox (waterless touring cars on the road, which they expect to receive the early part of next week.

Mr. B. D. Merchant, who was one of the first in this city to purchase a four-cylinder Pope-Toledo ("Mile-a-Minute") touring car, expects to have his heart gladdened by the receipt of his car by the time this goes to press.

W. H. Talbot was seen in the Park on Sunday last in his Pope-Robinson touring car, which he brought from the East some short time ago.

W. K. Knowles and a party of friends went to San Jose on last Sunday in his Toledo touring car, and report the roads in fine condition, and that they had a very enjoyable time.

The National Automobile Company will have several Pope-Toledo cars on exhibition at their show-rooms, 134 Golden Gate avenue, immediately upon their arrival.

—One goes naturally to Swain's on Sutter street for a good luncheon. There is nothing in town that can compare with this place as a place of rest and refreshment after the toils of shopping. THE PASSING OF LOVE.

By Theresia Garrison in Cosmopolitan

Hold Love a little day and that is well;
Hold Love an hour and that is better still—
It takes not long for Love his sweets to tell.

Bitter the afterword he gives to fill
Long years and cheerless, when his saddened face
Mocks the lost joy—the pulse's olden thrill.

Why bid him stay, a sorrow in the place?
The best of him was ours too long ago—
The laughter and the pleasure and the grace.

There is no sweet thing left for us to know.
Losing the substance, shall we hold a ghost?
Losing a friend, must we retain a foe?

Why for a guest unthankful play the host?
Set the door wide and toll the passing bell;
He takes not from us what we prize the most.

Hold Love a little day and that is well;
Hold Love an hour and that is better still—
It takes not long for Love his sweets to tell.

VALENTINE.

By Clinton Scollard in The Reader

If you were here, sweet, what would my song be?
Ah, it would happiness all the day long be!
Now it is sadness, and now it is sorrow;
Go, and bid Granther Time hasten the morrow!
Hasten the morrow, aye, hasten the minute
When this drear emptiness love shall have in it;
When my two arms, that so fain would enfold thee,
Tightly shall clasp thee and tenderly hold thee!
Then do you ask, sweet, what will my song be?
Ah, it will happiness all the day long be!

LOVE'S QUEST.

By Charles Hanson Towne in The Reader

When all the clamor of the world,
Its noise and wild alarms
Has wrapped me pitilessly round
And in its web my heart has bound,
I crave your sheltering arms!

When all the brazen crash of swords
The silence rends apart;
When I am steeped in toil and strife,
I crave, O great love of my life,
The stillness of your heart!

A MEMORY.

By Ella Barker in The Smart Set

When fades the glow from sunset skies,
And darkness comes apace,
With eyes half weary of the light,
Dreaming, again I see thy face,
Calm with the peace of those that see
Through all life's transient mockery
The vastness or eternity.

ABSORPTION.

By Nona Oliver Archer in Everybody's Magazine

Beloved, in the still deeps of thine eyes
Absorb my soul, that I may know no more
The pain of separation! I implore
Thy Self to take me in, and solemnize
My union with thee in some mystic wise.
I would no more be I, but would explore,
As thee, thy soul's dim temple, and adore
Therein, as thee, with secret sacrifice.

Oh, let me die to Self, and find rebirth
In some fair body as one soul with thee!
There are no purposes in life for me,
But as thy complement; nor any worth
In all the fame and splendor of the earth—
Unless one perfect spirit we may be.

The twenty-ninth annual report of the Underwriters' Fire Patrol for the year 1903 is as full of interesting information as a Swiss cheese is full of holes. On account of a threatened increase in rent at the expiration of the lease on the premises occupied by Station No. 1, at Nos. 106 and 108 Jessie street, a committee, says the report, consisting of Messers. Spencer, Faymonville and Bromwell was appointed to see what could be done in the matter of securing a new location. We have the pleasure to report that the committee succeeded in making a contract with the Bothin Estate Co., by which they agreed to build and equip, in accordance with plans submitted by the board, a house on lots Nos. 12 and 14 Natoma street, near First, the rental being the same as formerly paid on Jessie street. We are now in possession of the new premises, which are far more commodious than our former station and more conveniently situated, being in close proximity to the wholesale district. Our lease is for ten years. We have also to report that lease on No. 2 Station has been renewed for five years at the same rental as heretofore paid. The directors have again the great pleasure of thanking Chief Sullivan and the members of the San Francisco Fire Department, as well as the Chief and employees of the Department of Electricity, also Fire Marshal Towe and Chief Wittman and the members of the Police Department for the valuable assistance rendered the Patrol during the year. We are likewise indebted to the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. for the use of telephones in our three stations without charge.

The service performed by the force during the year is as follows: Hours in actual service, 687 hours, 50 minutes; number of stock covers spread, 2,401; number of roof covers spread, 151; number of fires extinguished, 23; barrels of sawdust used, 290; covers destroyed, 46.

The same authority shows that the losses on buildings in San Francisco for the year amounted to $399,512.59, and the losses paid $294,585.74.

The loss on contents for the year amounted to $1,252,389.49, the losses paid being $802,239.64.

The losses on buildings and on contents not insured amounted to $535,076, showing that there are still a few unwise folks left in this city who prefer to carry their own insurance and lose rather than pay their premium and be protected.

There have been in the city during the year four fires that burned up property to amounts over $30,000 and under $40,000; six fires ranging between twenty and thirty thousand, and seven between ten and twenty thousand.

The Conservative Life Insurance Company gave a banquet at Delmonico's Restaurant on Tuesday evening, which was in the nature of a celebration of the company's success in Northern California. There were present Vice-President Wilbur L. Tupper and Assistant Actuary Herman A. Behrens, and the managers and assistant managers of the company's various Northern California branch offices. There were also present several policyholders, men prominent in financial circles, and whose judgment is regarded as safe in other matters than the selection of the Conservative to carry their life insurance. Covers were laid for ninety guests, all of whom were present. The speech of the evening was made by Vice-President Tupper, and the remarks made by the other officials of the company denoted a fund of energy and a flow of enthusiasm in favor of the Conservative. Among the leading policyholders who spoke were Reverend William Rader, E. E. Bancroft and Isador Jacobs, Assistant Superintendent of Agencies J. R. Russell, Jr., acted as toast-master, and under his guidance there was not a dull moment during the evening. Regrets were freely expressed by the guests over the coming departure of Mr. Russell to new fields. He goes to organize the State of Oregon, and thence to Washington. He carries with him the best wishes of the agents, all of whom are his friends. His ability to make friends may, perchance, account for his success as an organizer of territory. The key-note of the evening was struck when the toast-master said: "We meet to celebrate the success of the Conservative Life's business in Northern California, which in January, 1903, was $2,000, and the December business of the same year amounted to $615,000." There are, it is understood, more changes to be made in the working and field force of the Conservative, which, it is believed, will be productive of a still further increase in business.

The Legallet Hellwig Tanning Company's fire carried off the blue ribbon prize at the figure of $206,835. The Theatre Republic and the Studebaker Bros. ran almost a tie for second place, amounting to about $139,000 each, and the Cunningham, Curtis & Welch fire cost over $100,000.

The total alarms received during the year amounted to 1,394. There was only one alarm rung in from a theatre during the year, but the quality of the fire made up for the lack of quantity.

The officers and directors are: William Macdonald, president; John Scott Wilson, vice-president; Rudolph Herold, Jr., secretary and treasurer; V. Carus Driffield, L. L. Bromwell, George W. Spencer, Bernard Faymonville.

Mr. James H. Washburn, president of the Home Fire Insurance Company is so far recovered from his two months' sickness that he is again at the office of the company where he was the recipient of numberless congratulations.

W. C. Cree, who has had North Dakota for the Phenix of Brooklyn, will become State agent for both the Dakotas, with headquarters at Sioux Falls; K. C. Klemme, who had South Dakota, acting as his assistant. Mr. Cree was for years in the Rocky

Another View of the Case

Editor News Letter—Allow me to quote my dear old friend, Jack Myers:

“Der Kaiser of das Vaterland,
Und Gott und I all things command,
We too, ach, don't you understand?
Meinself—und Gott.

Vile some men sing der power divine,
Mine soldiers sing “Die Wacht am Rhine”
And drink der health, in Rhenish wine
Of Me—und Gott.

There's grandma dinks she's nicht schmall bier
Mit Boers und such she interfere.
She's learn none owns dis hemisphere
But me—und Gott.

In dimes of peace brepere for wars,
I bear der helm und spear of Mars,
And care not for ten thousand czars,
Meinself—und Gott.

In fact, I humor every whim,
Mit aspect dark and visage grim.
Gott pulls mit me and I mit him—
Meinself—und Gott.”

From the dawn of civilization to the present time controversialists have made reputations by dealing in glittering generalities and by an array of brilliant abuse of polemical opposition. Let us take “A Countryman of Bec-de-Fer” as an example of a brilliant mind gone wrong. With him I have no quarrel, except that he is garrulous and that he masquerades as my countryman.

First—He is not an American.

Second—He is either a German, or his early life was spent in a German home and under German influences. He cannot help his views.

Third—He is a professional man, and probably writes poetry.

Fourth—His name is not an unknown one.

Now, you will ask, how do I, Bec-de-Fer, know this? Simply by deduction. He is not an American, because “it's a foul bird that defiles its own nest.” Let me quote: “Does he know that the German navy is as good and as large as ours, and that, despite jingo belief, its men are better?” * * * “our ships are manned by the depraved and vice-eaten riff-raff of all nations” * * * “the American sailor has the bad name of a blustering rowdy and ruffian, etc.”

I could go on almost indefinitely bringing out the little shades of contempt in which this gentleman holds his alleged nationality. Having established the fact that, as an American, he is a renegade or that, as a German, he has no regard for truth, let us go on dissecting what remains of his personality.

He is a German—“ancient tubs of Spain,” “stood firmly on their rights,” “Dewey's cheaply-won victory,” “Americans, drunk with gore and overbearing,” “Dietrich was not to be bullied.” These have always been the Berlin ideas. Your correspondent is most likely a poet, for two reasons: He writes copiously and without any regard for truth. He is sentimental! It is German sentimentalism, it is true, but none the less sentimentalism; heavy, doughy, unleavened, dogmatic and squareheaded. He has no regard for truth, for he purposely mixes the Austrian incident with the German.

He gives a general denial of the events of Manila Bay from the standpoint of—a man conversant with the German tongue!

My alleged countryman alleges further that I made some statement reflecting on the private life of “Willie the Witless.” I protest. Here again he travels afar in the fields of romance. I made no remarks on this matter at all. I might have quoted Mme. Eppinghoven (by the way, she is not an American jingo), and told of the cruel way in which this “model Emperor,” this “genius,” denied his old mother the poor charity of a palace room to end her days. My alleged countryman “protesteth too much!” Will he kindly inform a waiting world as to what it is he fears will be divulged? Does he think I am going to show up the Kaiser's weakling legs? Does he believe that I will lift the richly broided scarf that hides the rictus of uncontrollable anger making difform and hideous the face of the Anointed? (Vide Mme. Von Eppinghoven). Has he forgotten Bebel's arraignment of the German army or the revelations of Lieutenant Biltse? Is the West African misgovernment so far from his ant-hill he has forgotten it? Not one of the statements in my letter have been disproven. I purposely refrained from mentioning the “Irene incident,” because I was not on Subig Bay at the time. I was present on Manila Bay. I speak and write German, French, Italian and Spanish, and have traveled some little distance from my ant-hill—sixty thousand miles on sea and land in the last ten years. My name was withheld from publication because of my official position, but it is registered with the editor of the News Letter. In this I have the advantage of anyone who is too craven a coward to use even the poor shield of a pseudonym, but who stabs at Americans from behind the American flag.

—Bec-de-Fer.

Editor News Letter—Let me butt in. I am not surprised that the anonymous defender of Emperor William in your issue for January 30th should conceal his name, for he is either a menteur (if he knows what that means in French), or else he is a traitor. If he is an American citizen, as he claims to be, it is evident that he committed perjury when he took out his naturalization papers, since at that time he foreswore all foreign allegiance in general and to Emperor William or his predecessors in particular, and promised to stand by this country as against any nation in the world, especially Germany. Evidently he would not keep his oath if a war broke out between the United States and his native land; therefore, he committed perjury when he was naturalized. If he is not naturalized, then he made a false statement in his letter when he speaks of himself as an American. His boastfulness of what the Germans would do in a naval battle is amusing, when one recalls that the entire naval history of Germany consists in the sinking by one of her cruisers of a gunboat belonging to San Domingo a year or two ago. Whether German sailors can “shoot straight” no one knows, considering that they have never been rtied; and as for their patriotism, it is an equally unknown quality, since there has never been an opportunity to test it. But judging by the record of the famous German soldiers when they were marching on Peking with the allies, it is a very doubtful quantity, for the Germans on that memorable occasion fell behind in discipline, behavior and valor to the Japanese, British and Americans, and hardly equaled the Russians. If the German army makes such a poor showing away from home, with all the time, money and energy that have been spent on it for a century, what can be expected of a navy that has not yet reached the age of maturity?

When the German navy has a record that will duplicate that of the United States, even in the recent war with Spain, it will be time enough for the Germans to talk of "the riff-raff of all nations who compose the American navy," and who "desert by the score." They would have to desert en masse to balance the army desertions alone from Germany annually to this country:

The following is an extract from ex-Secretary Long's "The New American Navy":

"On the eve of war, the Navy Department was able to make the following comparison of the strength of the naval forces of the United States and Spain in the East:

	United States	Spain
Vessels: Cruisers.....	4	2
Gunboats	3	11
Mosquito Craft	0	25
Armed Tonnage	20619	20693
Guns in Main Battery	53	44
Guns in Secondary Battery	84	81
Broadside Discharge Main Battery Guns	3700	3000

"Afloat, the United States was superior, but Spain was stronger so far as material was concerned, taking her land and naval forces together. The batteries defending Manila Bay were capable of firing at a single discharge 3,750 pounds of metal. It is the testimony of experts that guns ashore are, by reason of steadiness of platform and protection afforded to the gunners, capable of more effective results than guns installed on men-of-war."

At Samoa, Germany acted in bad faith, and caused the death of both English and American sailors by her intrigues. In Venezuela, she tried the part of a bully again, and she would attempt to interfere in San Domingo to-day if she dared. Her army would give her no strength in a combat with this country, which God forbid, and her navy would find its match, if nothing more, if it had to try conclusions with the successors of Paul Jones, Decatur, Porter, Farragut and Dewey.

SUNBEAMS

(Stolen from Thieves)

"I notice," said Mrs. Skrappy, "that you never call me 'dear' any more." "No," replied Mr. Skrappy, "I couldn't consistently." "Why not?" "Well, talk is cheap, you know."

"What's become of that politician, Bluffington, who used to have the undivided support of this community?" "Oh, he's still getting it. He's in the poorhouse."

"Do you have any trouble supporting your family, Sambo?" "No, indeed. Why, boss, I've got one ob de best wives in dis 'ere town."

"What sort of money will you have, Mrs. Munn?" said the cashier when that lady presented a large check for payment. "Sterilized," replied Mrs. Munn.

Mrs. Buggins—I don't feel at all comfortable in these new shoes. Mr. Buggins—What's the matter? Don't they hurt?

Mr. Simpkin—Oh, Miss Mabel, this scenery makes me think of a Shakesperian passage. Miss Mabel—Which? Mr. Simpkin—Well—er—I don't quite remember!

Daily Guide to Flattery—If you meet a woman who strongly suspects that she is a beauty, ask her earnestly if all her family are beautiful.

"Did you see the Dardanelles while you were in Europe?" "No," answered Mr. Cumrox. "You see, we were so busy sight seeing that we didn't have time to call on any of our friends."

Husband—What! A hundred dollars for an opera cloak? Why, it is perfectly ridiculous, my dear. Wife—Yes, I know it is; but you said you couldn't afford an expensive one.

The Empress of China—What is that strange noise I hear? The Minister of the Interior—It is the bottom dropping out of the New York stock market, your majesty.

Future historians are going to have a hard time determining whether Wos y Gil was a hero or a college yell. Furthermore, some of them may even incline to the belief that he was a health food.

Miss Howjames (at the opera)—Hasn't she a marvelous technique? Mr. Cahokia—Yes; but she doesn't—er—seem to know how to manage it gracefully. She gives it a sort of kick when she turns around.

Tramp—Please, mum, - I don't want nothing but the privilege of sittin' here and listenin' to Madam Patti, the great primma donna, sing. Mrs. Youngwife—Goodness me! She isn't here Tramp—Parding, mum, but I hear her now. Mrs. Youngwife—Why, that's my baby crying. But don't go. Dinner will be ready soon.

"Hasn't the baby had the measles yet, Mr. Popp?" "Sh-sh! Do not speak so loud. Whenever he hears anything mentioned that he hasn't got, he cries for it."

Customer—So you think you won't be able to sell this stock for me? Broker—Why, say, old man, I couldn't sell that stock if I offered a box of dyspepsia tablets and a bottle of pepsin with every share.

"Bridget, did you get the flowers that I am to wear in my hair tonight?" "Yes, mum; but—" "But what?" "I have mislaid the hair, mum."

HAND SAPOLIO FOR TOILET AND BATH

It makes the toilet something to be enjoyed. It removes all stains and roughness, prevents prickly heat and chafing, and leaves the skin white, soft, healthy. In the bath it brings a glow and exhilaration which no common soap can equal, imparting the vigor and life sensation of a mild Turkish bath. ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.

"A tall bride is the best looking, don't you think?" "Well," replied the titled Englishman who had caught on to a little American slang, "so far as I am personally concerned, I certainly am not looking for one who is short."

McJigger—Hedley is a most extraordinary fellow. We were talking about a multi-millionaire today. Thingumbob—Yes? McJigger—Yes, and he didn't once remark, "Well, with all his millions I don't think he's any happier than I am."

Mr. Stubbs—Yes, that Mrs. Richrocks attended the missionary meeting and contributed even her jewelry to the poor heathen. Mrs. Stubbs (enviously)—Well, only a heathen would wear such jewelry as Martha Richrocks lugs around.

Mrs. Newitt—Mr. Feeder is coming to dinner this evening, is he not? Mr. Newitt—No; he must be sick or dead. I told him we dined at 6:30 and it's 6:35 now."

"Why," said the punctilious person, "I got a letter from the person you have been praising and there was actually a capital in the wrong place." "Maybe so," answered Mr. Cumrox. "But he never gets his capital in the wrong place in the market. And that's more important."

Mr. Misfit—No use trying to explain things to a woman; she cannot understand scientific terms; now here's— Mrs. Misfit—Oh, yes, I can, Charles! Heredity is what a man blames his father and mother for, and environment is what he blames his wife and children for.

"I hope," said Mrs. Oldcastle, "that you didn't feel that you were de trop when you called the other day and found Mrs. Beezum present." "Oh, no," replied her hostess. "That was just of the back of my waist that I kept feelin' of. One of the hooks was loose, and somehow I couldn't help bein' kind of nervous about it."

"I beg your pardon," said a man who had approached another, apparently a stranger to him. "I saw you lift your hat to the driver on that wagon at the crossing. Of course it's none of my business, but just to satisfy my curiosity, I wish you'd tell me why you did it." "With pleasure. Didn't you see that he pulled up his horse and gave me a chance to cross instead of trying to run me down?"

"What is an assassin band?" "An assassin band, my son, is one which murder good music."

Public opinion is in a fair way to beat Harbor Commissioner Spear into a pruning hook.

The last of our army has come home from Cuba, its bands playing "The Boodle I Left Behind Me."

Boiled down, the Oriental war news is that Japan has finally decided that this is good weather for a bear-hunt.

The earnings of the Match Trust for 1903 were away below normal, but the stockholders are basing high hopes on 1904, remembering that it is leap year.

The Kaiser has officially talked into a phonograph at the instance of Harvard University. It is understood that he mentioned the Almighty first.

Peanuts have gone away up in price, but pink lemonade remains at the old figure, so the circus industry is not completely wrecked.

A local newspaper is sending a long-haired theosophist to report the Russo-Japanese war by wireless telegraphy—and this is the limit of fakery.

Coincident with Hearst's borrowing of a million dollars comes Colonel Bryan's public proclamation that he is for Hearst for President.

Senator Gorman's candidate for the other Maryland toga was turned down with a thump. Four days later came the Baltimore fire, but we shall not ask anybody for an alibi.

Mayor McClellan of New York declares that the word "obey" in the marriage service is "obsolete and not binding in law." We know; we know. But why destroy all our myths?

Seven Russian warships put out of business in the first three days of fighting—now we begin to understand why the Czar was so active awhile back in advocating universal disarmament.

The sister of railroad president Cassalt has won a prize in Philadelphia for a painting of the "plein air" school. Her brother's financiering belongs to the plein water school.

A male beauty doctor, lecturing at the East, recommends Rhine wine as a cure for dandruff. This is an old remedy, generally applied by putting the cork in the hat and the wine under the belt.

Official announcement has just been made of a "History of Woman in America," to be published by the Government. Why not save words and call it "Herstory."

The distinguished detective in charge of the Soeder case caught his breath—and then let it go again, hissing between his clenched teeth: "Fooled again! The newspaperman detected you long ago!"

"O Reporter" was suspected in the heat of the moment of starting a run on an Oakland bank. The Press Club may wash off its war-paint, for this is merely the name of a Portuguese weekly.

Mayor Sam Jones of Toledo declares that "the criminal courts are the most criminal things in America," which is so near the truth that we could wish somebody more important had said it.

Yale's football song, "Boala Boala," is now the war-cry of the Macedonians. The name seems too suggestive of the dance du ventre for anything but an opera bouffe battle.

President Harper of Chicago University has appendicitis, but we do not believe the report that it was caused by John D. Rockefeller's eating something indigestible.

An eminent Eastern educator says the ideal college professor is the one who has the most children. This might be called the Belgian hare theory of higher education.

A Berkeley savant earns the envy of men less courageous by announcing that the woman of to-day has not improved in a single essential upon her sister of 2,000 years ago.

As the truth about Senator Hanna's illness comes out, we learn that he began it by laughing at the Gridiron Club's dinner "until his sides ached," many of the jokes being on himself. It's a mean germ that would take advantage of geniality like that.

Out of the bitterness of his heart, Alderman Sloan of Chicago cries that "the political club is a relic of the stone age, when man was still barbarous and preyed upon his fellows." We listen eagerly for a Chicago corporation opinion of Chicago aldermen.

The Cook County Democracy was frigidly refused by Mayor Harison when it wanted to keep a Chicago bar open after midnight for a "celebration," and now he is being measured for a suit of asbestos to wear while the torrid language flows.

An inventor of South Bend, Indiana, is making a bullet-proof vest for the President. Over this might be worn an editorial-proof duster, and a ballet-proof sombrero, the whole to be our national uniform for the Presidential rank.

SOCIAL THIEVERY.

Intermittently one hears and reads of the success or non-success of this or that person who has been engaged in the business of "breaking into society"—a business no more creditable, however, it is considered, than that of breaking into the houses of society people. Much has been said, and much there is to say, upon the snobbishness of the Smart Set—our own or any other—but what shall be said from that viewpoint about the vulgarity of one who essays social burglary in order to gain the coveted cachet of snobdom?

The motive of the house-breaker, the porch-climber, the sneak-thief, is to get, without working for it, a share of the ease and comfort enjoyed by those who have worked for and won it; the motive of the social "breaker-in" is desire to mingle on any terms with those holding themselves a cut above their fellow men and women, to call them by name, to eat their food and drink their wines, to sit among them at the play, no longer unknowing and unknown, and—acme of delights!—to be mentioned with the elect in the society columns of the papers. The housebreaker risks arrest or death; the social "breaker-in" risks only a snubbing, and to the "breaker-in" that is as often boon as bane, in that, after all, it implies recognition. Once in, the burglar seeks to get out again as quickly as may be; once in, the "breaker-in" seeks to stay as long as can be. It needs courage of a sort to be a house-breaker; it needs essentially a meanness of soul, a poverty of spirit to be a social "breaker-in."

To be a "breaker-in" argues either a past of shady places, a reputation with spots which refuse to be washed out or powdered over, or a presence and a personality too unpleasant for the endurance of those who have and exercise the power of choosing their associates. It argues, too, that thickness of hide which is the outward sign of an inner littleness, inasmuch as no man or woman ever forced the doors of society without suffering insult enough to wound the sensibilities of a rhinoceros. Pointed reference to the maculate reputation, the shady past or the offensive personality, floutings, sneers, the cut direct—these be the portion even of the successful "breaker in." And the "breaking into society" is a matter varying in its degrees of unpleasantness. Most polite is that plan of campaign which noiselessly buys a way within hailing distance of the elect, lays lines and spreads nets of entertainment for unwary feet, and then demands entertainment in return under the law of hospitality. Less polite is that procedure which begs and begs for a place at stranger boards, claims acquaintanceship from the chance smile or nod and intimacy from the reluctant introduction. Least polite of all is the "breaking in" which is achieved by force and intimidation. This is the method of the invader whose pen or tongue, skilled in the uses of libel or slander, serves him as the burglar is served by his "jimmy." Of such a one it is whispered: "He is dangerous; dont' offend him," and society, no less vulnerable than the people never listed as "among those present," not infrequently endures such an unwelcome presence for fear of what true or untrue word of evil its owner may say or write.

Society is doubtless a pleasant place for those who dwell in it by right of birth or breeding or achievement, but in spite of Yale locks and doors difficult to be carried away at the hinges, it would appear to have its drawbacks, and among them must be the struggles of those who are "breaking in" and the presence of those who, having broken in, contrive to remain.

THE ELEVATOR DANGER.

The public is fully awakened to the necessity that calls for the appointment of a public inspector of elevators. This is such a serious question that it demands the immediate attention of the Mayor or the Board of Supervisors. One of these days a rope will break, a cog will slip, a safety clutch may fail to do its duty, and we will have another horror to chronicle; men, women and perhaps little children will lay in a mangled heap, a monument to the incapacity and lack of foresight of our municipal officers. The excuse is made that the insurance companies inspect the elevators. They do. Those that are insured. The elevator companies also make an occasional inspection. But this is not enough. There are many elevators that are never inspected, and these are used for freight and passenger purposes. Many of them are operated with rotten ropes, while others are of obsolete and unsafe pattern. It is high time that some action was taken by the solicitous gentlemen "at the Hall," who talk, talk, talk, and who never do anything, but somebody.

AGENTS OF DISHONESTY.

Powerfully at work making our weak men into dishonest men are the race-track, which tempts them to steal, and the surety company which helps to shield them. It is true that the bond-furnishing security companies specify in their agreements that the employer shall prosecute in case of detected criminality on the part of the insured, but is there on record a case of any such agreement being enforced? The presence of this clause in the bond serves merely to show that the security companies recognize their moral responsibility and seek to shift the burden of the employer. In his turn, the employer, reimbursed by the guarantor, leans to generosity, and passes it up to the courts and the prosecuting attorney if recourse to the law has proved necessary, with a motion or a suggestion to dismiss. It is only when the bonded thief has no money or no relatives with property to save him, that he is punished and prosecuted; otherwise, discovery of the crime to the public is purely fortuitous.

Admittedly, the security is a business convenience, as necessary to easy and economical commerce as fire insurance or life insurance, the directory or the telephone, but it has contributed much toward bringing about a state of business morality in which the compounding of a felony is regarded as no crime at all. Embezzlement has come to be so common a thing in San Francisco, with its long racing seasons and its facilities for turf gambling, that the security companies do business with a view to a high percentage of losses. With judges and public prosecutors as pliant as those who make a mockery of justice in our police courts, with hired guarantors in the shape of security companies to make losses good, with relatives finally to bear the loss, the crop of crime is harvested daily. The security company furnishes rapid transit from the employer's cash-drawer to the pocket of the book-maker.

It is hard to say how this cancerous condition can be cured. The palliation that first suggests itself is certainty of publication of every embezzler's offense and prosecution of every offender, whether he or his relatives pay up or not. It would be easy for the security companies to assume the burden of prosecution, and if they will not assume it, the Legislature can speedily fasten it upon them. They guarantee the employer against loss; why should not they guarantee the State against corruption of its youth? But this does not touch the root of the evil—the race track, where crime is bred. We make bold to say that in three cases out of four where surety companies doing business in San Francisco are called upon to pay back the stealings of employees, those stealings have gone into the betting rings of the New California Jockey Club. Thanks to this incorporated villainy, ours has the reputation of the "widest open" town in the United States. That is not a pretty phrase, but it sounds much better than the truth. This truth is that the California Jockey Club is making thieves of our young men and harlots of our young women, filling our police benches with sleek, smug rascals, debauching the public and private morals of this community.

The News Letter invites the attention of the next Legislature to the security companies, and also calls upon it to check, if it will not crush, the spreading evil of the race tracks.

WILL HELP CALIFORNIA.

In the line of pure food legislation which Congress has undertaken to handle on a comprehensive plan, nothing is more important to California than the making of adequate provision to secure protection against chemical imitation and sophistication of wine. This State practically has a monopoly for wine. This State practically has a monopoly for wine. It is true that considerable quantities of so-called wine is made from grapes grown in the States on the other side of the Rocky Mountains, but the fruit is so sour that the must will not ferment without the addition of large quantities of sugar. This, of course, is a legitimate industry in the sense that the product is wholesome, so long as no sophisticating ingredients are used other than sugar. But this sort of wine will never constitute a serious competitor for the California product.

The object of legislation should be to stop the manufacture of chemical wines, filthy decoctions compounded in secret. Much of this poisonous stuff is made in this country, but more comes from France. The town of Cette, a very considerable place, is wholly supported by the making of spurious wines, and its export trade reaches large proportions. There is no doubt that the greater part of what people in this country drink out of bottles carrying a French label comes from this identical town of Cette, and is nothing better than a chemical compound.

The wines of California are genuine, and this is something that cannot be said with certainty of the professed product of some other regions. It is in the interest of consumers almost as much as producers that a genuine manufacture should be encouraged and this industry especially is more than usually beneficial, for the reason that in its prosecution the man who makes his living from the soil is enabled to bring to market an article that is not mere raw material, but has been advanced in his hands to the quality of a finished product. In a word, the grape-grower is not only an agriculturalist but a manufacturer besides, and should be enabled to make a profit from each of his industrial functions.

It is in view of these considerations that the bill introduced by Representative Bell in Congress should have the active support of all Californians, whether directly interested in grape growing or otherwise.

A STARTLING CONDITION.

We make no apology for returning to the subject of the export trade of the port of San Francisco as compared with the business done from Puget Sound points, because this is a matter of paramount importance to the future of this city, and it appears that we are falling behind in the race where we should be foremost. It will not do to shut our eyes to this condition. It must be faced and met. We are convinced that it can be met and overcome if once the mercantile community of San Francisco is aroused to a realization of means and ends.

We recognize the fact fully that the Puget Sound ports have certain natural advantages in handling the trade with Alaska. For one thing they have a considerable geographical advantage in point of proximity to the Canadian mining territory and other points reached by way of the Lynn canal, but this advantage over San Francisco scarcely applies to the American territory of Alaska. For instance, the difference in cost of shipment to Nome from San Francisco or Seattle is a negligible quantity. The most important enterprises in that region are in the hands of San Francisco capital. Why should we not be able to hold our own in point of trade?

The figures in regard to the Alaskan trade compiled by the Customs House are startling enough. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, the value of shipments from the Pacific Coast to Alaska amounted to $9,266,504, and of this trade Puget Sound secured $6,138,089; San Francisco $2,955,341, and Columbia River ports $173,124. That is to say, Puget Sound did more than twice the San Francisco business with Alaska.

This seems bad enough, but the story told by the figures of the Philippine trade is even worse, for the reason that if there is any geographical or natural advantage in this commerce it lies with San Francisco. The following table shows how the export business was distributed during the nine months ending on September 30th, in 1902 and 1903:

From—	1902	1903
Humboldt, Cal	$20,167	$12,315
San Francisco	827,537	479,640
Puget Sound	306,876	1,128,999
Portland and Astoria	188,303	87,977

Our trade is growing less; that of Puget Sound is advancing by leaps and bounds. This condition is not due to natural causes, and it calls for energetic work and concerted action. We are convinced that the figures and the tendency shown in these returns can be reversed, if only the mercantile community will wake up and get a move on.

MORE LETTER CARRIERS.

The gratifying intelligence comes to us that we are to have a number of letter carriers added to the local force. There are two very good reasons why the Government should increase the force. The present force is overworked, and while it is one of the most competent of all the offices in the service, it is, at the same time, the most strenuously worked. It is but simple humanity to relieve the present force of the extraordinary labor they are performing. It is but justice to the merchants of this city to give them even a better service than the one now in vogue. The carriers will lessen the labor of their brethren and earn the heartfelt thanks of the business community.

PATRIOTISM FOR PROFIT.

There is a newspaper published in New York called the "Political Liberty Herald." It is full of the wildest stuff regarding Great Britain, "our hereditary enemy." It opposes retention of the Philippines, and wishes to grant full citizenship to all Porto Ricans and Hawaiians, and besides this, has a violent desire to admit Cuba into the union as a full-fledged State. Here we have the names of the executive committee: C. B. Ludekins, J. G. Lazarus, Sigmund Horkimer, C. V. McConologue and Daniel O'Callaghan, chief organizer and secretary. We suspect that Ludekins, who is an ex-Confederate, a fire-eater, formerly a Cuban Insurgent, is the angel who is putting up the necessary coin to educate the American people. He is about the only American in the bunch, and he once tried to cut the country in two, and helped try pull down the flag. The others, judging by their names, are suspender and collar-button peddlers from the New York ghetto and unreconstructed Fenians. Let us see. A Confederate, three expatriated Polish Jews, and two ex-Fenians. That ought to make a pretty good committee to reform the American people, regulate their morals and their politics.

In order to become a full-fledged American patriot, blown in the bottle, none genuine without signature, send on one dollar for 26 copies of a newspaper, Your $1.00 will furnish a 20-cent meal to each of the army of "Political Liberty" and the genial General Doctor (?) Ludekins will pay for his own provender.

Here is the way this modest gent speaks of himself: "Dr. Ludekins is a descendent of the Norsemen, those wild rovers of the deep, who swooped down upon their enemies like a hurricane, those daring spirits who knew no fear but believed that the weakling and the coward went to hell." Whoop-la! There will be the devil to pay when the next invasion of Canada begins, and Dr. Ludekins, "the eminent military tactician, the dashing and redoubtable staff courier, who had borne all hardships without a murmur, and for whom no danger had had terrors," storms Toronto or Timahoo. If the "eminent military tactician" could induce Willie Hearst and Harrison Gray Otis to join him, on Lieutenant's commissions, we might give them all a pension and a nice little island near Borneo, where they could all live together and never quarrel and never come back. How thankful we should all be to the dear Doctor.

THE CONDUCTOR MAN.

The street car service in San Francisco would be greatly improved if conductors would refrain from ringing the go-ahead bell until passengers had reached the ground with both feet. A somersault or a hop-skip-and jump upon alighting from a car is not conducive to dignity, convenience or pleasure, however amusing it may be to the conductor and other observers of the performance. Of course the "rules" provide for a full stop of sufficient length of time to enable the passenger to alight in a comfortable and safe sort of a way, but so many conductors suspend the rules at times that one wonders why the company bothers itself to formulate them, seeing that conductors, like the aspiring anarchist, insist upon being a law unto themselves.

Then, again, it would conduce to the pleasure and information of strangers more especially if conductors would not feel and look bored when a question of location or distance was asked. They should see that it is asking too much of a passenger to know as much about anything as they know, and for that reason they should at least condescend to be communicative when questions of great importance to the passenger are asked. On the other hand, the conductor should not feel it incumbent upon him to force a passenger into a discussion of the weather, of politics, of religion. These are questions of not sufficient general interest to make subjects of uninvited opinion; besides, most people are pretty well grounded in their beliefs and the length of the journey does not give sufficient time to the conductor to present a logical and convincing argument. But all that sort of thing can be borne in more or less complacency if he will only keep his hands off the go-ahead bell-cord until the passenger has planted his second foot upon solid ground.

CONCERNING THE RIGHT TO DIG.

The protest of the Sewer Workers' Union of Alameda County against the undertaking of students of the University of California to grade the campus, implies and even formulates a new sort of divine right. No others but these heaven-sent and God-given sewer workers may dig or grub in the bowels of Mother Earth. They have assumed by solemn resolution of the union a proprietary right in the work of shoveling sand. They do not say what dire consequences may follow should any heedless person or persons assume to invade that right, and the penalties that may be inflicted upon the heads of the invaders are left to the imagination, but if, as we judge, the sewer workers regard their monopoly as a divine dispensation, doubtless they should call on Providence to visit pains and penalties on the invaders.

"When Adam delved and Eve span,
Where was then the gentleman?"

Possibly the sewer workers of Alameda County can answer this historical question in their accustomed method—by resolution. Like their brother unions, they have undertaken to regulate the universe on a plan which is their exclusive property by right of discovery. Every shovelful of sand must carry the union label, and no sort of work may be undertaken until the horny fist of the walking delegate, thrust out behind his back, is filled.

Professor MacDowell, eminent as a composer and as head of Columbia University's Musical Department is resigning his chair with the sorrowful comment: "As far as general culture is concerned, college graduates are the merest barbarians." Are we to infer that Columbia has a glee club and that Professor MacDowell has heard it sing?

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 7

Really, good people, you positively overwhelm me. In the mail which Roger brings me I find no less than nine letters, each of them propounding a different silly question. I beg to assure you, my dear News Letter, that I am not a bureau of information, and because I condescended to settle the beefsteak question in last week's number, it is no reason I should be fatigued by answering a lot of correspondence which can only originate from the lower classes. One insulting letter asks the question: "Is it right to talk to a lady and have your hands in your pocket?" Now, forgive me—any chap who is half way decent or quarterly decently bred, knows, or should know, instinctively, that a man must not retain his hands in his pockets, gloved or ungloved, while talking to a woman. Of course, some persons among you are sinful enough to be indecent to the extent of going ungloved, but better gloveless than pockets full of hands. I am trying to educate you. The balance of the letters are really unkind and vulgar, and I refuse to pay any attention to the contents or the writers.

Still, I want to justify myself to the extent that if any person who writes me a letter is to the manor born, he will disclose his identity, or if he will call on me personally, I will tell him the proper thing to do.

I decline to answer any questions about the pinning of a mackintosh, the use of a nail cleaner in public, or the other questions propounded, or about the taking out of the sweetheart and shutting the chaperon. The writers are among the unmentionables.

Amongst the nine letters I received is one from some person who has the consummate audacity to question my lineage. This individual I spurn and refer him to the Debrett, or if he prefers it, to that miscellaneous publication published in New York entitled "Who's Who?" The investigator will find that Travers is there all the time, and I trust an apology from the letter writer will be forthcoming, or I shall have to cut him when I meet him. Of course you chaps out here don't know much so far as correct dressing, or gloving or booting is concerned, but if you would follow me you would learn, and as to the ordering of a correct dinner one of your best fellows here has in my presence ordered sparkling wine with the soup! There were women present, and while he paid the bill afterwards, or owed it, I'm blamed if he could do the same order in England or even in New York without being ostracised. The women present failed to call his attention to the bad form, and I truly think that the amount of his bill made him think he was doing the proper thing. He did in cash, but the correct method was not a very near relation in his family.

In my innermost self even I am sorry to think that I can't do you persons very much good. It seems to be bred in your bones to do the wrong thing at the wrong time. Take the theatres. Your people will dutifully listen to Patti or Langtry until the curtain drops, and then wait a few seconds beyond. But in other than star performances here, your folks make a rustle and a noise and disturb the finish of the play in a sort of a mad, crazy endeavor to get out first. Their rush is to show their frocks, and secure a back seat in some cellar restaurant, where one can't get anything decent to eat, and only indecent things to drink. Your people would listen to a star to the finish, but you forget that the other stars of greater or less magnitude are doing their best to entertain you, and are as artists worthy your consideration. If not, why do you go to hear them? It is only a sign of ill breeding when a person reaches for garments before the climax. Among the nine letters you sent to me by Roger, the following, I think, is the only really decent one, and it touches on this very subject of the ill-bred manner and bad form of the late-comers and early-goers of your city's theatre patrons:

"My Dear Travers: I am unknown to you, but won't you, through the News Letter, beg the indulgence of audiences for the ladies and gentlemen on the stage of the various theatres of San Francisco. For those poor people who have to leave before the fall of the curtain on the last act I have only commiseration. Those early-risers are, for the most part, people who are employed as domestics in the homes of the rich, and, if they did not return at stated hours, would be in danger of summary discharge."

I withhold the name of the gentleman who sent me this communication. He is a clubman and a theatre patron. I really think he is correct in charging the early-rising to the servant women. If any other should rush and disturb the finish of an artistic performance, I but judge that the thirst for a peg or a mug is greater than their love for the play, and even if they are not, they would, judging from their rude manners, be counted serving maids. No other class would be low enough in even the imitation of good breeding to disturb the audience, and mar the effect of the actors' last efforts to the extent of spoiling the climax. I may be wrong, but this is the opinion of Travers.

War Settling Differences.

What diplomacy failed to do to settle the differences between Japan and Russia, armies and warships are now trying to accomplish. Japan committed the overt act by attacking Russian ships of war and seizing ships of commerce, but Russia invited the attack by acts of perfidy and hypocrisy. The varying fortunes of the contesting forces are flashed over the world almost hourly, with such coloring as news censors deem fit to give. But what the nations are most concerned about is possible complications that may involve them as allies of one or the other of the belligerents. Before the acute point in diplomacy was reached, the News Letter's analysis of the situation and of the several factors that were entering one by one into the controversy, together with a forecast of coming events, has been verified almost in detail. War between Japan and Russia is an actual fact. And now what will the outcome of it all be? Will other nations become involved? What will be the effect of the war upon other nations? When peace comes, will the map of Europe and Asia have to be changed so as to conform to new national boundary lines? These are vital questions just now.

Predictions verified, the News Letter has insisted that Russian occupancy of Manchuria and not Japan's demand for a paramount voice in Korea's affairs was the real bone of contention, and now Japan herself has confirmed it. Japan is sure of Korea. That is admitted on all sides. It follows, then, that Japan is waging a war to crush Russian supremacy in Manchuria, and it would be a cowardly shutting the eyes to a glaring fact to refuse to see that Japan is not only waging a war to protect her own commercial interests in Manchuria, but is voicing the "amen" of China, Great Britain and the United States in every roar of her muskets and artillery, for these nations are equally interested with Japan in the purpose to be accomplished, except as to China, whose interest is far greater, for upon the success of Japan's arms depends China's title to Manchuria and her right to extend her authority over it. The United States and Great Britain, with Japan, recently signed a commercial treaty with China that fully recognized the Peking Government's ownership of and rightful sovereignty over Manchuria, and utterly ignores and repudiates Russia's pretensions in that region. These nations went so far as to establish, on paper at least, consulates in Manchuria against an implied protest of Russia.

Now that Japan is at war with Natural Allies. Russia to re-establish China's ownership of Manchuria and make the commercial treaty between China and Japan, the United States and Great Britain effective and operative. To accomplish that, Russia must be defeated and driven out of Manchuria. If Japan can do that alone, so much the better for her and all concerned, for such a victory would at once place her high up on the list of the world's greatest nations; besides, then the question of her influence being paramount in Korea would never be questioned nor her equal trade rights everywhere "with the most favored nations."

Consequence of Japan's Defeat.

But if Russia defeats Japan, China will lose forever Manchuria, the United States and Great Britain will be denied satisfactory commercial rights in Manchuria, Japan will be set back half a century, Russia will absorb still other Chinese territory, Germany and France will have the Czar's consent to increase largely the boundary lines of their spheres of influence" in China, all of which will finally result in reducing the Chinese Empire to a small nation of little consequence and less influence. The whole question, then, resolves itself into this: will the United States, Great Britain and China sit idly by and see Japan defeated and the supremacy of Russia extended, not only in Manchuria, but in other territory of China, which would mean that the Anglo-Saxon had passed over the heights of commercial and industrial and financial mightiness, and was going down to the valley of a "has been?" But the United States, Great Britain, Japan and China know exactly what Russian success on the battlefield would mean to them, and hence it may now be recorded a fact that when peace is sued for the Anglo-Saxon will be there to draw up the declaration, and in the articles of agreement his interests will be amply protected then and provided for in the future.

The Far and Near East.

Turning to Europe, the influence of the war in the Far East is distinctly seen in the Near East. The unrest in Bulgaria and Macedonia, which has been the source of alarming threatenings against the peace and integrity of the Turkish Empire directly and all Europe indirectly, is rapidly assuming proportions that is almost certain to blaze up into a revolution in all the Balkan region against kingly rule of any kind. Notwithstanding the people of the Near East have an unsavory reputation for honesty and decency—freebooters, highway robbers and the like—their leaders have become imbued with the notion that a Balkan Republic, to include most of the Near East, would be conducive to the betterment of the conditions of existence of their people, and the word has already gone forth that the war in the Far East will be taken advantage of to make their declaration of independence and to defend it to the utmost of the people's military strength. Hitherto Russia has kept a hand raised to crush any manifestation of the kind, and also has in one way and another given the Sultan sufficient moral aid to keep his backbone pretty stiff in dealing with the Balkan people. But for awhile, at least, the Czar will have both his hands too full of trouble in Manchuria to attempt any crushing of young and aspiring republics in the Near East. Reports from Constantinople are to the effect that in anticipation of such an uprising in the Balkans the Sultan has about decided, under Russian influence, to send an army against Bulgaria, ostensibly to avenge certain insults, but in reality to crush the Republic's bud before it blossoms out into a federation under the significant name of "United States of the Balkans."

THE FERRY NEWS STAND.

Harbor Commissioner Kirkpatrick did exactly what was expected of him at the last meeting of the Board. He is the one member of the Board who has always been held by the public as above suspicion. His training has always been with gentlemen, and he shies at anything that savors of jobbing and nepotism. There is no one who could dispense the State's money to relatives or friends with a more lavish hand than Kirkpatrick, except that Kirkpatrick is an honest and conscientious citizen. Spear is providing for a needy relative and it is more than probable that Kirkpatrick will stand pat and refuse to assist in a questionable transaction. Colonel Kirkpatrick has done just what any faithful State officer should do, and it is with pleasure we record his words:

"Is it not about time to advertise for bids with a view to ascertaining definitely what this privilege is worth to the State? Is it not our duty to advertise? The matter has drifted into an unfortunate condition. The rental is from month to month, but no one can do business unless there is some permanency. We cannot go along giving A the privilege one month and allowing B to come in with another bid. There should be a definite settlement. I have been asked if a higher bid than $1,500 would be accepted. Perhaps we have not been offered the amount the State ought to receive. I understand that a large sum of money is paid for a similar privilege on railway trains."

It must be galling to a sensitive nature, such as Colonel Kirkpatrick's, to have to associate with such a burly wit as Spear and such a discredited importation as Mackenzie. The latter remained in San Jose just long enough to become a stench to the sensitive nasal organ of Jim Rea, and then he had to leave. The authorities had to provide him with an office, because, in any event, he is a public charge, so they made him Harbor Commissioner. What was San Jose's gain was our distinct loss.

The matter of the ferry news stand privilege was left in abeyance, with the legal bid of $1,500 on file, and the $1,200 bid accepted by the two conscienceless politicians, who, it is said, are exploiting every privilege on the water front, from North Beach to the Potrero, to their own, their relatives and their henchmen's advantage.

The situation calls for investigation by the Governor. He surely has no estimate of the enemies Charley Spear is making for the administration. In every direction this antipathist extraordinary goes right on, and unlike Midas, turns all cleanly things into dross by his touch.

THE FURNITURE & CARPET COMBINE TO RAISE PRICES

As soon as the PATTOSIEN COMPANY has sold out the $250,000.00 Stock of Furniture, Carpets, Draperies and Stoves; it is the intention of the Furniture Combine to raise prices still higher. That is the real secret why there is a continual rush just now at the PATTOSIEN COMPANY, corner 16th and Mission streets.

The Library Table

Who's Who? Any one who wishes to know Who is Who has but to turn to the annual biography under that title which has again been published by the Macmillan Company. This is the fifty-sixth issue of this convenient dictionary. In order to make it more completely a Biographical Annual, and also for reasons of space, the tables which formed the first part of "Who's Who" are this year issued in a separate book called "Who's Who Year Book."

"Who's Who." An Annual Biographical Dictionary. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Sevastopol and Other Military Tales. Funk & Wagnalls Company have chosen well the time to bring before the English reader a new translation of "Sevastopol" (the first volume of a complete series of Tolstoy's works.)

Aside from the historical records these tales are interesting because of their psychological element. Tolstoy makes you see into the souls of his characters; you walk, talk, eat and drink with them in an atmosphere of smoke, shot and shell until, standing in that terrible Fourth Bastion, you realize the "spirit of these defenders of Sevastopol."

No translation is ever absolutely perfect, but Mr. and Mrs. Maude have vastly improved upon the methods of those who before them have attempted to reproduce the thoughts of the great Russian. Tolstoy says of the present translators:

"Better translators both for knowledge of the two languages and for penetration into the very meaning of the matter translated could not be invented."

"Sevastopol and Other Military Tales." By Leo Tolstoy. Translated by Louise and Aylmer Maude. $1.50. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

In Deliverance. When in '97 Miss Glasgow gave us her first book, we were willing to overlook the crudity for the sake of the promise lying underneath. Since then we have tried to see in each succeeding novel an improvement that gave us hopes of a truer, more natural view of life; but, alas! this last book has all the defects of its predecessors, with a few of its own. What manner of men can Miss Glasgow know that her heroes are all of the unpleasant type of Christopher Blake? Miss Glasgow has imagination, and there is romance of a high quality in the figure of old Mistress Blake, blind and crippled, sitting in the overseer's house, and supposing it to be her old home, while her devoted children go hungry and in rags that she may lack nothing, and be kept in merciful ignorance of the defeat of the beloved South and the loss of a great estate.

"The Deliverance." By Ellen Glasgow. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York.

Life in London. This is a new edition of Pierce Egan's book dedicated to "His Most Gracious Majesty, King George IV." The sub-title is "The Day and Night Scenes of Jerry Hawthorn, Esq., and his elegant friend, Corinthian Tom, accompanied by Bob Logic, the Oxonian, in their rambles and sprees through the Metropolis." It is a beautiful re-print, containing a number of designs and etchings by the Cruikshanks.

Concerning the book itself but little need be said. It is written in the almost punctiliously correct prose of the beginning of last century, and abounds in the ostentatiously and pugnaciously vigorous patriotism of that age. It is brimful of interesting and suggestive notes on the morals and manners of the period, and is infinitely more useful from a historical point of view than twenty volumes of sober essays dealing with the period. As an instance of the social and convivial habits of the British aristocracy at that period, the following quotation may be made: "It will not do," says Tom, "to spend more than a single day at his Lordship's seat, for there the remedy would prove worse than the disease. His Lordship is a fine bottle man, at least, and his principal enjoyment consists in challenging his company to keep pace with him, glass for glass, till he sees the whole of his guests drop under the table, or otherwise disposed of, and then exulting in the words of Hippocrates:

"The only health to people hale and sound
Is to have many a tipping health go round."

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

National Sports of Great Britain. This is another re-print of an old book in the same series as the preceding. The issue is founded on the edition published by Thomas M'Lean in 1825.

There are no less than fifty plates, colored, dealing with racing, fox-hunting, shooting wild fowl, dog-fighting, cock-fighting, bull-baiting, bear-hunting, badger-baiting, etc. The preface contains a very naively written defense of sport, most of which is very humorous when regarded as an apology for much which is considered intolerably cruel at the present day, and which would not be endured even by the lowest of the populace, although these amusements formed the regular diversion of the upper classes a bare hundred years ago. A quotation from this preface runs: "Man was not intended by the Creator to pass a life of inaction and idleness; on the contrary, the most active duties have been imposed upon him, by nature and necessity. The pursuit of wild animals must be necessary to human subsistence in the early stages of society, hence man is naturally a sportsman, and from this source, with the stimulus of native curiosity, and desire of action and diversion, originated the system universally designated as sport."

Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon the manner in which this edition has been prepared. The plates are admirable, the print and paper exceedingly good in so cheap a work, the price being but a dollar and a half. This series should make a very valuable addition to any library, and if the present standard is maintained, must of necessity become very popular with those who are not led away by the passing fads of the hour. It is instructive and at times very humorous reading.

Society

Dear Bessie: Do you know, there is a positive sigh of relief that this is the last week of the season, and that society will have a chance to do a little resting. I say little, for of course every one is not going to wear sackcloth and ashes, and things will continue to be given even if it is Lent; but they will be fewer and farther between, and of less formal character. But rest is sadly needed, and that it is coming makes me feel inclined to give special thanks in the sanctuary to-morrow.

There are some who think this has not been so strenuous a week as either of the two just gone before. Perhaps not, so far as dancing goes, though even of that there has been no lack, but certainly in the way of dinners and luncheons there were more than enough for many. To begin with, Mrs. Frank Carolan gave a tea in her rooms at the Palace on Monday afternoon, which was a gorgeous affair. I wish you could have seen some of the gowns, and what a liberal education it would have been to my dressmaker if I could have smuggled her in without being noticed. Mrs. Eleanor Martin's dinner in the evening was another fine affair, and the Huntington dinner-dance was just such another as the one two weeks ago, and was of course delightful.

There was no end of luncheons on Tuesday, and the J. D. Spreckels dinner in the evening was large and elaborate. Mrs. Hyde-Smith gave a luncheon for Mrs. Garceau on Wednesday; Mrs. Peyton had an "at home"; Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels's dinner was for Mrs. Peter, and the Wilson-Cluff wedding came off at the Palace at 9 p. m. Ethel Hager was also a hostess on Wednesday—the first big function she has given this season—a dinner for Constance de Young. On Thursday was the young folks' luncheon of Mrs. Casey and Kate Dillon; there was a bridge whist party at Mrs. Ed. Dimond's, with several theatre parties in the evening. On Friday, Mrs. Peter was again feasted at a luncheon given by Sallie Winslow, and I went to Mrs. Harry Mendall's second at home, as well as to the Huntington's, and last night there was the last of the Greenway dances for this season, preceded by Mrs. Joe Grant's big dinner. Elsie Gregory gives a luncheon to-day, and to-morrow Helen Pettigrew has a St. Valentine's tea—there, don't you think that is a pretty good showing for one week?

There will be only two real days of the season next week, but there will be no lack of affairs crowded into them—for instance, Mrs. Will Tevis gives a "bridge" party on Monday in honor of Millie Ashe Sewell, and the postponed Gaiety Club dance is named to come off at the Allens'. Mrs. Lansing has drawn first blood, if I may use such an expression, in being the first to entertain Frances Harris as bride-elect, giving her a luncheon on Tuesday. I hear she and Ernest Stent are to be married directly after Easter, and will then tour Europe and possibly the Orient if the war does not interfere with their movements. Mrs. Francis Sullivan gives a big luncheon; Beatrice will have a tea, and in the evening there is the Mardi Gras ball. A whole lot are going down to Del Monte next week to rest after the ball and other pre-Lenten gaieties, and to incidentally take in the polo tournament to be there played by the British and Californian teams.

The marriage of Vesta Shortridge and Emile Bruguere is at last an accomplished fact, only that in place of the large wedding that was rather expected, the ceremonial was an extremely quiet one, taking place at Monterey last Tuesday. There will be another benefit next week for the Sailor's club house at Vallejo, when on Saturday there will be a sort of musical tea at Mrs. Lowenberg's on Van Ness avenue. There are to be candy, cake and tea-cups for sale and several articles are to be raffled.

I forgot to tell you last week of Mrs. Horace Hill's musicale, which was most enjoyable. Carrie Little was the chief attraction, so many were anxious to hear her. The Parrott dinner dance in the evening was small but very pleasant; the De Guigne girls are much liked, and have been among the popular of the season's buds. Mrs. Peter Martin was fairly surfeited with the good things of the table last Friday between Jennie Blair's luncheon at the Richelieu, where thirty guests were asked to meet her, and Mr. Jim Phelan's dinner in the Red Room of the Bohemian Club, which was followed by a sort of vaudeville entertainment—music and monologues. The last of the Friday Fortnightlies that night, though much smaller than usual, was as pleasant as it could be. You have no idea how many of the buds declare they have been—to them—the most enjoyed dances of the season, and weary as they evidently are, regret to see the last of them. The piece de resistance, so to speak, was the officers of the Italian man-of-war, then in harbor, for though their dancing was not much to brag of, they were not at all a bad-looking lot, and wore very showy uniforms. Mabel Toy's tea, which was one of the events of last Saturday, was given for two girls, Duffy by name, who are here on a visit to her.

I have just got Mary Kip's announcement cards, and hear she looked just too utterly sweet as a bride in far away Omaha. The pity of it was that her friends here could not have seen her that day. Two engagements were announced during this week, those of Charlotte Moulder and Charles Carter Nichols, and of Olive Hamilton, over in Sausalito, and Winn Breedy, so you see there are more weddings to look forward to. Charlotte's sister, Mrs. Covode, is an awfully nice little woman, and she has been missed a good deal this winter, as being in mourning for her brother, she has taken no part in the gaieties of the season.

Polly Macfarlane has departed for her Honolulu home, leaving on the Ventura yesterday. She was kept on the jump most of the time she was here with all kinds of entertainments. Among the most recent were the dinner of Mrs. Grey, Bertie Bruce Stephenson's lovely little tea, Mrs. Scott Wilson's tea, Mrs. Dutton's card party, and she was a noted guest at Mrs. Currier's luncheon. Lily wants me to go over with her to Fort Baker to call on two new arrivals—the sisters of Captain Wilson, who have come out to spend some time with their brother, who is stationed there. She says they are very nice, and sure to be liked when known. Another pretty girl here just now is Miss Mamie Langhorne, who is visiting her sister-in-law, Mrs. Jim Langhorne, who gave her a tea last Friday. Lucy informs me it was a regular Southern gathering, and that Millie Ashe Sewell, who was there, told her the cold in the East is something awful, and she thought she would never leave New York alive; so to hear us complain of cold weather must sound like a farce to Eastern people. The Oscar Sewells are also here on a brief visit, and Mrs. Sewell has been lunched by Alice Wilkins and by Mrs. Jim Robinson, who is at the Knickerbocker.

The Doctor's Daughters are going to make a new departure this year, and instead of a doll-show—which, to tell the truth, had begun to pall—they will have one of living beauties this time—a horse show, no less—which will be given at the new Riding Club house in March, and they promise all sorts of wonderful things. I daresay they will all be carried out, for Jennie Blair is back again, and she is wonderfully energetic when there is anything to be done to benefit her beloved organization. The new bowling club house has caught on, already the clubs for practice are in full swing, and when Lent comes you will see they will be considered the correct thing. Then, besides playing bowles, there is a cafe, where one can lunch, dine or sup—for instance, Greer Harrison had a dinner and the Shotwells a supper there this week, and they are but two of many.

The Rawles have, I hear, commenced to build, so there will soon be another pleasant army house opened to the swim. Mrs. Rawles is a charming hostess, and Bessie, the only daughter, is very musical, singing remarkably well. The Gaston Ashes have gone to housekeeping in an apartment on Van Ness avenue and Green street.

Fred Greenwood has actually gone at last, after ever so many threatenings, but he takes in Europe first, instead of Japan, which may come later—it all depends on the war.

—Elsie.

The inaugural meeting of the California Polo and Pony Racing Association takes place at Del Monte Thursday, February 18th, and extends until Monday, February 22d. The polo matches will bring on the field the very cream of the crack players. The pony races, which perhaps appeal to and interest more keenly the average spectator, are scheduled for the 18th and 20th. The prizes offered are most liberal, and consist of purses and handsome silver cups. Among the probable competitors may be included such well known miniature racing machines as Messrs. Frank Carolan's "Fusillade," "Bonnie" and "Florodora"; Mr. Walter Hobart's well known speed marvel, "Silver Dick," and Mr. Clagstone's "Miss Miller." Mr. Rudolph Spreckels' "Becky" and "Peghome," and the stables of Messrs. Tobin, Dunphy, Driscoll, Bettner and a very strong contingent from the southern portions of the State, will be represented. The 15th Infantry band will be in daily attendance. A large exodus of society people is already assured. The succeeding week the association moves to Burlingame, where polo matches and one afternoon's racing on Mr. Frank Carolan's private track, are programmed. Mr. Thomas Driscoll is secretary of the Association, with offices at Room 39, fifth floor, Mills Building.

The arrivals this week at the Hotel Rafael are: C. A. Grow and wife, Mrs. H. A. Tubbs, A. H. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Rosenbaum, Lewis S. Rosenbaum, Ralph S. Rosenbaum, Fraulein Flach, E. Satslow, Miss Schreiber, Dr. Ed. Bowers and daughters, Miss Adelaide Lewis, Miss Etta Steinman, F. W. Wolfe and wife, R. B. H. Collier, Alexis T. Lanze, Mr. and Mrs. R. Belmont, Mrs. G. P. Simpson, R. W. Simpson.

Guests at Del Monte last week included: S. S. Howland and family, New York; Mrs. N. L. Wallace, New York; C. A. S. Wood, Portland, Ore.; Mr. and Mrs. John Sherman, Cleveland, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Percival, Covington, Ky.; Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Markay, Los Angeles, Cal.; Mr. and Mrs. Abe Meier, two children and governess, Portland, Oregon; Mr. and Mrs. Eising, New York; Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Kirkpatrick, Porma, Idaho; Harold Perkins, England; General and Mrs. A. A. Harbeck, U. S. A.; Robert C. Loughton, Vancouver, B. C.; Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Vole, New Jersey, A. D. Shepard, San Francisco; J. S. Wall and O. G. Orr, Chicago; F. F. Arrmann, New York; Mr. and Mrs. William Irvine,

A large Raymond & Whitcomb party arrived at Del Monte this week in charge of C. G. Smith. Another large party is expected next week in charge of W. G. Jones. Engagements are coming in very fast, and there will be soon few vacant rooms in Del Monte. Special attention is called to the polo tournament to be held at Del Monte February 18-22.

An elaborate luncheon was given by Mrs. Clinton Jones at the Colonial Hotel on Wednesday, February 10th. The decorations were the subject of great admiration, and were of yellow tulle, and the candelabras were covered with yellow shades. Daffodils and Marie Louise violets diversified the scene and lent a delightful perfume to the air. The service was a beautiful gold and white china from Limoge, and was the cause of many little exclamations from the guests. Those partaking of the luncheon were Mrs. Frank Latham, Abner S. Mann, Mrs. E. O. McCormick, Mrs. Laura B. Roe, Mrs. Maurice B. Casey, Mrs. Edward G. Schmiedell, Mrs. Seward McNear, Mrs. M. H. de Young, Mrs. John G. Barker, Mrs. Robert J. Davies, Mrs. James B. Easton, Eldridge & Co. are offering an unheard of opportunity to the public of San Francisco to invest in real estate that is sure of a quick and sensible increase in value in the very near future. They have arranged for an excursion, at an exceptionally low rate, to Chico and return. The occasion is the sale of a number of town lots and acreage in the prosperous Northern city. Whether the excursionist buys or does not buy, he may rest assured of a warm hospitality in the thriving city of the North. Chico has a great and glowing future, and is to be one of the greatest of all the commercial and shipping centers of California. The Western Pacific Railroad has finished a survey into Chico, and there is a sharp advance in realty values.

Chico has one of the largest and best-equipped fruit canneries in the State, with a capacity of 1500 cases a day of peeled fruit.

Chico has a large foundry and well-equipped machine shops, packing plants and local industries.

All kinds of fruit and vegetables grow here without irrigation. The annual rainfall averages 25 inches and is amply sufficient. A drouth has never been known.

Great Commotion Among Hotel and House-Keepers.

Since the announcement of the PATTOSIEN COMPANY'S RETIRING SALE, there is a general "clean-up" in most of the homes in this city and State. The low prices make the house-wives take advantage of this last of PATTOSIEN'S SALES. It is the intention to have the doors closed forever, about April the 1st.

The scores of folks you meet
In the office or the street,
That know by heart the technique of the sea!
They can estimate the chances
And forecast the circumstances
When the Russian fights the nimble Japanese.

Their logic is enthralling
And their earnestness appalling—
You would fancy that they savvied the whole lot;
But when you come to test 'em,
You can nearly always best 'em
By enquiring if they ever sailed a yacht.

Mrs. Botkin is going to get off, and justice will call for its due in vain. The woman's photographs show that imprisonment has been a sort of luxury to her, a place where for five years, at all events, she has been obliged to lead a sane and regular life. She wants to go home to her mother, like Kipling's married man who "wants to finish his little bit, for he wants to go home to his tea." But Mrs. Botkin has not yet by any means finished her "little bit" to the satisfaction of the public. She may read the reports concerning Mrs. Maybrick and then thank her lucky stars that she lives in a community where the fact that she is a poisoner does not weigh against the other fact that she is a comely woman. The advantage which beauty has over virtue should go far to convince a doubting world of our esthetic sense.

Judge Hebbard has issued a temporary restraining order which will, for the time being, put an end to the continual raids which are being made against that element of city life which parsons and policemen consider themselves entitled to hound and maltreat because of the very helplessness of the women. As soon as they separate themselves from the rest of the community, some clerical Sir Galahad who forgets charity in the pursuit of virtue, proceeds to drive them all over town, when they promptly avenge themselves by polluting the good. It is to be hoped that these black-coated vultures and a blackmailing police may leave them in peace for awhile.

The good luck of Jack London passeth understanding. It was a sure thing that war would break out if he were sent as a war correspondent, for the stars their courses fight for him. It is equally certain that he will distinguish himself, for to his remarkable natural ability he adds perseverance and unflagging industry. It falls to very few men to be imprisoned in an Oriental fortress, and then get clear with all his property intact. In fact, I should say this is the first case on record. He has gathered enough material for a new book already, and will doubtless make Japanese jails as interesting as he succeeded in making Whitechapel.

Our criminal population must be troubled with paresis. A few weeks ago, attention was called to the stupid tricks of trans-ferry highwaymen, and now a burglar party paid a surprise visit to a sign-painter's shop in this city. I thought that university students were the only people who stole signs. It is said that the burglars took gold leaf. Judging by the quality of that article with which we are usually supplied, they must have made precious little out of it.

There is a charming inconsistency about the colored girl who has come all the way from Kentucky to California to study, of all things, logic. There is a touch of pathos in the picture, too. A poor woman, who has to earn her own living, traveling two thousand miles to swallow the sawdust of a course in modern philosophy. We might put it down to the childish lack of practical sense of the colored race but for the fact that there are some hundreds of white girls, and boys, too, wasting their time in pursuits just as unpractical. Of all the farces of modern life, the most heart-breaking illusions, recommend me to the higher education.

"Cucullus non facit monachum." The old proverb receives a resurrection from the fact that two young men have been making collections in clerical garb, and pocketing the proceeds. It is an old trick, and generally successful. Unfortunately, however, there are too many people who are entitled to use the clerical dress who do not make much better use of it. What shall we say of local clergymen who use their ministerial position for the purpose of getting social or political position? The dress is there, but the clergyman is no more in it than were the two frauds just mentioned.

"It is a just world," says Rev. C. R. Brown of Oakland, complacently. The reverend gentleman has every reason to think so, but very little reason in stating the grounds for his belief. He speaks of the twenty thousand consumptives in the tenement districts of New York, and says that such things are a retribution upon society for its carelessness. That may be all very well, but it is not so easy for the individual consumptive to see where the justice comes in. Mr. Brown is a very useful clergyman, but he comes no nearer than the rest of us when he begins to guess at the reason of things.

It is wonderful how a tradition lingers in the mind of the common or garden reporter. That story about the members of the Weber-Field Company feeding the gulls with pate de fois gras will be repeated in New York, and the tale will be told of every leg show that comes here until it will be believed as an article of faith. Three weeks from now it will be seriously whispered in London as proof of the riches of California, and goodness knows how much money it will put into the hands of those Englishmen here who swindle their countrymen at home by bargains in orange ranches.

Some people have no sense of humor. The Alameda High School, for example, is to give Margaret Cameron's "Kleptomaniacs." The high school people are either very mischievous or very dull, for it makes a very pretty satire, as regards the title, at all events, on the Berkeley High School and the State University, where the genial habit of appropriation continues in full sway.

Mrs. John Martin is to the fore again, this time with an ax. "I did not pull her hair, nor did I chase her with an ax," she indignantly says of the prosecuting witness. I can very well believe that she did not pull Mrs. Bernadou's hair—she is not feminine enough. The ax is much more in her line, and she ought to get it.

With his usual ponderosity and originality, President Wheeler stated solemnly the other day: "Everyone must learn to do something in order to be prepared for life." Splendidly stimulating, is it not? It has the usual merit, however, of not being true. It is a much better guarantee of success to learn to "do somebody."

Japanese Fan Etiquette

"You want a fan?" echoed the smiling Japanese merchant. "What kind?"

The man looked around helplessly.

"Oh, any kind that's big and give a great deal of wind. I want to get half a dozen for the office while I think of 'it."

The Japanese gave him six big fans. There was a certain amount of pity in his unfading smile.

"You are so queer about fans, you Americans," he said, in his soft precise little fashion. "You want them only to make you cool."

"Why not?"

"Oh, it is all right; it is all right. You do not understand. A fan is nothing to you, but to us—why, in Japan and China a fan is a thing of importance."

"To cool one—yes, that is one use, but only one use. A fan talks, with us. It tells many things."

"You look at a Japanese fan. It means nothing to you. You think the color, the pictures are pretty, perhaps; that is all; but to us who know, the color, the shape, the decoration hold meaning."

"You think the landscapes are funny. We know they are pictures of real places and we can name the shrines and temples and mountains and rivers. The men and women all look alike to you, but they usually represent historic characters or characters in our romance and poetry."

"Fusiyama is just a mountain to you. It is sacred to us. You don't know our flowers and birds and their symbolism."

"I could give you this little paper fan with white storks flying over it and you'd never know that I was wishing you long life, and you wouldn't understand that this cobweb design is for mourning."

"I can't look at a Japanese fan in any one's hands without having a whole swarm of associations and fancy and sentiment spring up and buzz in my head and sometimes I wonder why you foreigners don't feel enough interest to wonder what your Japanese fan says and look up the meaning. I should think it would be an interesting fad, and you love fads."

"There are so many kinds of fans in Japan, and each kind has its own use. Even the dolls have their own fans, and the children have theirs."

"There's a tea fan used only at solemn tea feasts. The little cakes are handed with it, but one doesn't use it to fan with."

"Our dancers and geisha girls have their own type of fan, decorated appropriately, and our jugglers carry fans that suit their trade. There is a kitchen fan, to be used for bellows, and a bamboo water fan that is dipped in water often while being used, so that it makes the air it stirs cooler."

"Almost every political event of importance in Japan has been pictured on fans, and very often the rulers have to forbid the carrying of certain fans because they spread trouble and rebellion. You could have a whole history of Japan on fans, if you could find the right fans."

"Some of the old fans are not used now. The ancient court fans were folding fans of wood, and each noble family had its own flower that no one else dared use."

"The war fan is of iron, covered with lacquer, and the Generals have silk fans with iron sticks. Have you ever seen a dagger fan? The mobsmen in Japan carry them, but it is against the law to take them into China. Chinamen have them, all the same."

"Everybody carries a fan in China. It is even more general there than in Japan, and there's so much fan etiquette among the Chinese that I don't see how they have time to learn anything else."

"You know what the fan stands for in Japan, don't you? No? Why, it is the emblem of life and the rivet is the sword of the god Kashima."

"He received orders to subdue the world, so he ran his sword straight through the earth and left it there. The world would fall to pieces if the sword rivet were pulled out. That story suggested the making of the folding fans, but there's an old legend that says the widow of a famous Japanese patriot invented the folding fan. She went into a convent in Kioto after her husband's death and when a great saint was dying of fever she cured him by folding a piece of paper and fanning him night and day. The nuns copied the paper fan and the order is famous for its fans even now."

"Some day I will show you all my fans and tell you what each one means, but I don't see how you can buy fans, and buy more fans, and never ask, 'What do they say? what can they tell me?' We Japanese always ask 'Why? What? Where?' about everything."—Family Circle.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

COLUMBIA—Good actors and a poor play. Alexander the Great.
GRAND—We have seen better shows for less money. Weberfield.
CALIFORNIA—Back again to the woods. Murray and Mack.
FISCHER'S—A performance that is highly enjoyable. Roly Poly.
ORPHEUM—A good bill. An entire comedy menu.
ALCAZAR—The Gay Parisians. Very funny, that's all.
TIVOLI—When Johnny Comes Marching Home.
CENTRAL—A fairly good show. In Sight of Saint Paul's.
CHUTES—High class specialties. New attractions in Zoo.

At the Columbia, Alexander the Great becomes Alexander the Insignificant at the hands of a playwright named Kemper. Ward and James waddle through the performance in a mad endeavor to make something out of nothing. Spectacularly considered this is a good play. The scenic attachment is in good hands. Mr. Warde and Mr. James are to be complimented on their work in Alexander the Great. They have become so inured to it through repeated rehearsals that they have come to believe it a great play. Somebody ought to change the dope in their pipes, and give them an opportunity to wake up.

The best of actors, and Ward and James are of the best, could not make a good play of a lamentably poor one. Why do the critics refrain from the truth when dealing with the stage? Why not tell the truth? When an avalanche of bestranded and bankrupt Eastern companies are landed on San Francisco, why not take them out to the Old People's Home? It would be much cheaper and in the end a more profitable venture for the managers. Take the Weber & Field production at the Grand, as an instance. This show bears comparison to a circus in more ways than one.

As the prime attraction, the "piece de resistance," you have the perennial Russell. Her singing is mediocre. She can be considered beautiful but from one standard—the standard of preservation. For that matter, there are men who consider mummies beautiful. Joking aside, she is a wonderfully pretty woman for her age. No one was ever so rash as to aver that Lillian could act. I have questioned gray-bearded gents of the last century, and they tell me that it didn't take an astronomical telescope to discover this fact as long ago as 1812. Louis Mann is the only redeeming feature of the show, and his good work is spoiled by the team of Weberfields. To any possessed of a hide less thick than that of a rhinoceros, the coarse jokes and unveiled references to the Russell's many marriages, are disgusting. The mob follows the fashions and the mob thinks it is aping New York in its mad rush for seats at the Grand. Weber & Fields, my dear masters, have been dead ones in New York these many, many moons. There is no more coherence to the Weberfields productions than there is to a circus. It is a hodgepodge of bald-headed and ancient jokes that some clever antiquarian dug from the pyramids. There is only one excuse for the infliction, and that is the same excuse which is given by the gentlemen who run three-ringed shows—they need the money and they are going to get it. And so, they charge $2, while many a better show has been played in San Francisco for $1.

It is a fact that, with that rare provincialism that obtains in Gotham, the usual run of witticism at the New York playhouse of the Weberfields people has been a rehash of jokes at the expense of all cities, except New York. Any one who heard the production of Patti's "Farewell Song" will gauge the intellectual profundity of the Weberfield twinzes. Weber & Field are quoted by the Eastern critics as losing money on the diva.

The girls in "Whoop-dee-doo" are all pretty, their dancing is good, the scenery is beautiful, and there are a few fine groupings in the chorus. Now, as I am not an habitue of green-rooms, and as I prefer an acquaintance from the forefront of the footlights, I cannot enthuse over the principals in "Whoop-dee-doo." The second Whoop, "Catherine," was such an infliction that I fled in terror. In the first part there is a fat gentleman who does the head Amazon act. He's great, in his way, but if he ever strays as far as Burlingame, somebody down there is sure to snare him for a coachman. That's the place for him. He was certainly never cut out for an actor or singer. It was a novel idea to cast a fat man as leader of an Amazon march, and they tell me it took like wildfire in New York. We are not up to that sort of thing yet.

The show this week at the California does not deserve mention. It is poor of its kind, and when it is remembered that the kind spoken of is usually poor, a comprehensive opinion of the whole performance may be had in very compact form. Miss Sarah Truax, the clever actress, allows herself to be interviewed by the rising star of the world of critics, the only worthy opponent of He of the Many Interviews, and says that she considers the California Theatre a sort of hoodoo. Then she and the clever critic set about to find a good reason for the apathy of San Franciscans. All kinds of reasons are suggested, but never the real, simon-pure reason comes to the surface. Diogenes would throw away his lantern, grope around unerringly in the dark, get a full grasp on the collar of the management, and say with the glee of the righteous: "I have it; here's your hoodoo." Somebody ought to establish a "School of Politeness and Tact for the Exclusive Patronage of Box Office Employees and Theatrical Managers." Hard times are upon the ilk in New York, and hard times and empty houses are liable to descend upon their pretentious brethren of San Francisco. The press is the only protector the poor public has, and the News Letter with its Confidential Tip, is looked upon as an obstacle to the exploitationists. Give us good shows and we'll give you good praise, my masters.

At the Alcazar there is a laughable skit. "The Gay Parisians," which does not pretend to be more than it really is. It is to laugh from beginning to end. A harmless farce. It skates around on thin ice, but never falls into coarseness, nor is it ever open to criticism because of horse-play. Miss Block as the wife of Pinglet, loses much of her charm when capped with a red wig, but looks thoroughly Parisian. Osbourne is splendid, and the work of Francis Star, Maher and all the rest is above criticism. The make-ups are excellent.

At Fischer's "Roly Poly" is good without being extraordinary. The music is pleasing. Helen Russell sang well, but there is that haunting suspicion of a misfit about her clothes. There is a constant fear that some particular part of her costume is going to drop off. Where, O where, is Amber's dressmaker? Russell ought to be chloroformed and then fitted by this artist. I'll bet a simoleon of the realm, a golden one of twenty ducats, that she can show up to better advantage than the Amber in a snug and well-made gown. The lines are all there, but you are only allowed to guess at them. More's the pity, if my suspicions are well-founded. They used to pour Amber into a dress, and then melt her out of it for the next change.

* * *

Is there any good reason why smoking should not be abolished at Fischer's? It was a welcome change at the Tivoli. At Fischer's it is a constant and growing offense. This theatre aims at productions of pretension, and it is patronized by the very best people in San Francisco, and yet ladies are subject to this annoyance. I am very glad to see that the mention in this paper last week about an extension of time and a little more leniency in the treatment of servants has resulted in a reform. There are vastly fewer people who rise and disturb the audiences and the ladies and gentlemen on the stage than heretofore. This was especially noticeable at Fischer's, at the Orpheum, and at the Alcazar. I am perfectly willing that a servant girl and her lover should have a good time, but not at my expense.

* * *

Close association with Chinatown has given the public of San Francisco a deep and abiding veneration for old age. This is the only way in which I can account for the kindly reception accorded Patti, Langtry, and the rest of the old ladies who have recently visited us. This deference to the aged is really an admirable quality, when you come to think on't. It takes away the suggestion from us of following the fads of less cultured communities. Our dear theatre-goers may pat themselves on their respective backs and make a virtue of their idiosyncrasy.

At the Orpheum there is an excellent company, and Billy Van, Rose Beaumont and the rest continue giving an hour or two of rollicking fun.

At the Tivoli we still have "Johnny" marching on and off to continued applause and crowded houses. Ferris Hartman's legs get more and more crooked, and they tell me the management has consulted a physician. There is a danger that they may become permanently incapacitated, and if that is true, it would disable him in other plays. He has become so enamored with the part that he walked up to a bar the other day, with the leer and the walk, and the bartender, mistaking him for a bum lawyer, threatened to throw him out.

* * *

At the Central, "In Sight of St. Paul's" never gets any nearer sanctity than the title. The play is of the sensational melodramatic style, and is well rendered by the company. The company, by the way, deserves a better fate. The audience seems pleased, and, as I remarked before, this relegates the critic to a seat in the rear and way down.

* * *

The Weber & Field's company will leave soon after the performance of the 21st (Sunday night.)

* * *

"Roly Poly" at Fischer's will continue the bill. Dillon is growing into a great favorite with the Fischer audiences, and he is clever and conscientious enough to curb many of the mannerisms that jarred on us at first. Nellie Lynch is a cute little girl, and very clever.

Jack Clunie is the mystery of the day. Who is he, where is he, and why did Tom Clunie leave him over half a million? These are questions that many acquaintances of the late millionaire would like to have answered. D. M. Delmas, who is one of the attorneys for the boy, says he has never seen his client, nor does he know where he may be found. That statement was attributed to Mr. Delmas several days ago. Since then his knowledge may have been increased.

Tom Clunie, former Congressman from the Fifth District, was not a man of many confidences. It was known that he was wealthy, but that his estate should develop over a million and a quarter was cause for astonishment. Even greater was the surprise when it was learned that he had left an adopted son, now a chubby youngster in his ninth year. Nothing of this lad's parentage is publicly known. Those who knew Tom Clunie, though, think the boy must have had a very strong claim upon him, for he was hardly the man to give a fortune to a stranger.

Six years ago the little fellow, who was then known as Jack Clairing, passed the summer at a resort in the Santa Cruz Mountains, in charge of Miss Ada Edgerton, who has evidently had him in charge ever since, and who has him now. The boy was then over two years old. Miss Edgerton, who was a quiet young lady, kept very much to herself, devoting nearly all her attention to the child. She was accompanied by a lady who was said to be her aunt, and who, it was also said, was a sister of Charles Warren Stoddard. Miss Edgerton said the boy was the son of a distant relative, and that she was caring for him temporarily. Though she was very happy with the child, it was evident to the other sojourners at the resort that Miss Edgerton was not completely happy. At times the traces of grief were upon her face. Upon one occasion, her aunt explained that the young lady had been disappointed by the non-arrival of expected friends, and had given way to tears.

* * *

It was during this summer—that of 1898—that Tom Clunie was stricken with paralysis. He went to the Santa Cruz resort, accompanied by Burrell G. White, who now appears as one of the three trustees for the estate left to Jack Clunie. White seemed to act not only as Clunie's friend, but also as his attendant and nurse. Even at that time it was evident that Clunie set great store by the boy. Miss Edgerton, the child and the invalid took drives every morning over the mountain roads, the lady holding the reins, and the millionaire dividing his attentions between her and the lad. At the expiration of the summer season, Miss Edgerton and her charge returned to this city. She and Clunie and the boy were then to be frequently seen driving in the Park, or at the beach.

It now appears that Clunie did not adopt the boy until his separation from his wife in 1901. Miss Edgerton appeared as sponsor for the child at the time of his adoption. She said she had had charge of him since he was six months old. From all accounts, she seems to be the only person possessed of the secret of his birth. As it is evident from the number of lawyers arrayed around Tom Clunie's will that the battle over his estate will be a hard one, it is more than probable that unless present differences are settled by compromise, the history of the lad will become public property before the estate is distributed.

The Supervisors have a way of turning up a few thousand dollars every year by publishing the "Municipal Reports," heavy volumes, filled with statistics, which no one reads. Some few favored citizens are presented with copies bound in morocco, their names being printed, like Abou ben Adhem's, in letters of gold across the front cover. One of these gorgeous and gilded tomes was sent last week to Reuben Lloyd. The other day he acknowledged its receipt in a letter in which he said the pleasure aroused in him by the receipt of the book would have been greatly enhanced if the intelligent compiler of the golden letters had only remembered that his name is spelled "Reuben," and not, as the gleaming legend shows it, "Rewben." Lloyd will put the book in his cabinet of curios.

The romantic alliance of Thor O. Haydenfeldt and Josephine, his wife, has ended in the divorce court. Thor was one of the sons of that remarkable old Californian, Judge Solomon Heydenfeldt, and the boy did not fulfill the bright promise of his youth. He and his wife, who was a pretty Sacramento girl, went to the Klondike during the height of the gold excitement several years ago, and when they returned, they were filled with experience and yearnings for the land of sunshine and flowers. Thor lingered in town a few months, trying to raise the wind, and then went to Arizona on a business speculation. Leaving the Southern territory, he again headed for the Klondike. But in his search for gold it seems he lost the way to domestic happiness. In her complaint, his wife says that Thor, like the an-

Bob Bolton's failure may be attributed to just one fact—he is a victim of misplaced confidence. Bolton is personally a splendid fellow. He is quiet in his demeanor and a thorough gentleman. According to the stories told, he entrusted everything to his manager, and of course was one of the very last men on the street to suspect there was something wrong with his own business. If the manager had done anything criminal, he should be prosecuted, but Bob Bolton will never send him or any other man to jail. That is not his way. The fact is, he does not suffer from that absolute absence of sympathy and fellow-feeling for a wrong-doer which is so characteristic of the men that make great successes in the business world. Incidentally, the Bolton failure causes me to revert for but a moment to a remark I made a week or two ago in commenting upon the large number of defalcations the town has known recently, with no prosecutions following them. I said at that time: "Watch the man that handles the money." In these days of wide-spreading poolroom and race track gambling, more than one firm on the street would do well to keep tab on their cashiers and their financial managers.

Sam Davis, of Carson, is in town, settling up the estate of old "Mammy" Pleasant. Sam's friends say he stands to win about $38,000 by the death of the old colored woman. It seems that some time ago, fearing that the hand of death was then upon her, "Mammy" deeded to Davis and young Fred Bell several pieces of property said to be worth from $35,000 to $45,000. Upon her death, they placed the deeds upon record. She left a will by which she bequeathed everything of which she died possessed to the people in whose house she passed away. They thought they had come into a fortune, but the filing of the deeds to Davis and Bell upset their castles in Spain. It is more than probable that "Mammy" Pleasant left a good, healthy law-suit behind her. It is said that her friends will bring suit against the bank in which she deposited $100,000 worth of jewels years ago. The jewels were in a sealed package, marked "To be delivered only to Mrs. Pleasant, in person. Value, $100,000." When "Mammy" had a severe spell some time ago, she wrote an order on the bank to give the jewels to Mrs. Bell. It is said she put the order in her desk, thinking to give it to Mrs. Bell if her illness became very serious. But "Mammy" recovered. Now it is said that the order on the bank was presented, although "Mammy" did not hand it over, and it is further charged that the bank gave up the jewels on the order. If these statements can be borne out, there is plenty of ground work for a big law suit in which the heirs or grantees of Mrs. Pleasant will appear as plaintiffs.

That representative of the Kelly clan, who was recently superintendent of the Alms House, has managed to get himself into something of a scrape. Kelly was a protegee of James D. Phelan, and was given his job at the Alms House when Phelan was Mayor. It was a good position, carrying $200 a month salary and board and lodging. The two latter items are by no means small ones, for the superintendents of the Alms House and the County Hospital live like petty rulers in their principalities. But Kelly was never suited to his job. The place was too big for him. He swelled up and tried to fill it, but as big as he made his chest, he could not reach the necessary dimensions. Then he took to drink, and things were at sixes and sevens for a long time. The Hearst fund, which was for distribution among the inmates of the Alms House, he used liberally, aiding the poor people in many ways. He put tags against himself in the drawer, but while charging himself with taking the money he made no accounting of the manner of its distribution. Last week, one of his friends offered to return to the Board of Health about $70, which should have been to the credit of an inmate. I believe the Board refused to accept it. They want to have a quiet little talk with Mr. Kelly. He is reported to be taking the rest cure in a sanitarium.

W. M. Cubery, that veteran Democratic war-horse and battle-scarred Iroquois brave, is out with an open letter to John P. Irish. Cubery wants to know how Irish can reconcile his claims to Democracy with the awful fact that he is drawing down $5,000 a year as Naval Officer of this port, under a Republican administration, and with the even more terrible fact that he is on the pay-role of the Citizens' Alliance at $7,500 a year. The answer of Irish is easy enough. He is drawing down two salaries because he has two hands. John P. will not notice the indignant Cubery. A gentleman named Roosevelt, now in Washington, told Senator Perkins and Billy Ralston the other day that John P. Irish had been of great service to the Republican party. With that statement in the record, it is not apparent why the patriot from Alameda should worry over the screed of the Iroquois brave.

Financial Review.

The Work of of a Dastard.

The depositors, large and small, of the Oakland Bank of Savings, are very justly incensed at the action of the daily papers of this city in lending themselves to the vindictive attempt of some malicious individual to wreck the bank. Of course, no paper of standing would intentionally do such a thing, and it can only be ascribed to carelessness upon the part of some one, which seems in this case to have been very general, considering that all of the great metropolitan journals were worked to the advantage of a blackmailer. The reputation of a bank is as delicate a subject to handle as that of a woman. It takes little to blast it, and even a mere insinuation is apt to arouse suspicion which in the case of a bank means the creation of distrust, and every one knows what that is apt to lead to in the way of financial trouble. Had the run on this Oakland institution not been checked by the prompt support rendered by its friends and the good sense of the majority of its depositors, a panic might have ensued, spreading like the flames of a great conflagration, with results of the most disastrous character the limits of loss not being perhaps confined to the small territory across the bay. Of course there was nothing wrong with the financial standing of the Oakland Bank of Savings. Its financial condition is sound in every particular, and fully prepared to meet all demands upon it, with an able management, business men whose integrity has never been questioned. It will be hoped that the rascal who perpetrated the vile work, which should be placed in the same category in the criminal code of the State as train-wrecking and murder in the first degree, will be caught. Should this happen, the outraged depositors of this worthy institution should be presented with his worthless carcass in a package marked "Not to be returned, and no questions asked."

Local Stocks and Bonds.

There is little to say of the local market for stocks and bonds. Business in all lines has been quiet during the week, with few changes in prices. Attention is centered upon the approaching election of directors in the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company. A clean sweep there, which will mean the retirement of a lot of high-priced managerial ornaments, and the introduction of practical men acquainted with gas-making to the extent of producing a marketable article to meet the public demand, while extending at the same time courteous treatment to the company's customers. This will restore confidence in the future of the stock, which only an over-sanguine and facile temperament can possess under existing conditions. Any one who deals in the stock now takes chances with his money, for the reason that it is impossible to predict what may yet evolve from the chaotic situation. The abominable service of this over-capitalized corporation does not appeal to the sympathies of an outraged public, and the right class of promoters never had a better opportunity than that which now prevails to interest the great army of householders in this city in a new enterprise to supply a decent system of lighting at moderate rates. The corporation now in the business has just gone about far enough in its impudence and greed to be called down from its high horse and brought to a due recognition of the fact that, after all, it is but a servant of the public, and not its master, as one might suppose from the high and lofty airs its management now assumes.

Business is quiet on Pine street and probably will be until work begins on the 2350 level of Con.-Cal.-Virginia. Should the ore be found there, which some people in the swim expect, the market will not require any material support from Ophir, which is on the dividend paying basis for some time to come. Ore discoveries always boom prices on the Comstock, but strange to say, the very minute that it opens up in sufficient quantity to warrant the payment of dividends, the speculative element on the street immediately is on the look-out for new worlds to conquer, or in other words, for some other proposition where the quest for an ore body is still a gamble. This peculiar condition on Pine street will doubtless surprise new comers, who prefer to put their money on a certainty, rather than on an uncertainty, but the history of the Comstock will establish the fact. This, however, supplies a factor responsible for the wide fluctuations in the market, when some mining operation is in full blast, and changes from time to time in the formation, suggest the near approach to a ledge which eventually proves of high value or absolutely worthless. History also shows that there never has been a period of depression, continued no matter how long, that the day has not arrived when the patient investor, who has seen his shares pass out of sight and borne the brunt of assessment, has not had an opportunity to retrieve all losses and clean up with a handsome profit if prudent enough to take advantage of the opportunity. Some of the work now going on along the lode is of a highly interesting character, and bound to bring about active times and higher values in the near future. The bear tribe who have suffered so heavily within the past few weeks, and are now attempting to even up their losses, are in a fair way to get cinched again, with the chances that upon the next occasion they won't get off so lightly.

The foreign capital now invested in Japan in various enterprises amounts in all to 1,404,465,840 yen, of which all but 28,334,406 yen, or twenty per cent., is paid up. This in round numbers amounts to $700,000,000 in American money. Perhaps Russia will be allowed to gobble all this with the pugnacious little Jap—perhaps not!

The Central Pacific Railroad Company has just made a payment to the Government last week of $2,800,000. The amount represents one of the notes given to the Government in 1899 in settlement of the Central Pacific subsidy debt. Two notes were taken up each year on August 1st and February 1st. The last half-yearly payment of $2,940,000 matures February 1, 1909, at which time the debt of $58,812,714 will have been cancelled.

At the second annual meeting of the shareholders of the Union Trust Company, the following directors were re-elected: Isaias W. Hellman, Henry F. Allen, Antoine Boré, Charles de Guigne, William L. Gerstle, I. W. Hellman, Jr., J. L. Flood, Timothy Hopkins, George T. Marye, Jr., John D. Spreckels, Robert Watt, Henry E. Huntington, George A. Pope, and Jacob Stern. Subsequently the board organized by re-electing the following officers: President, Isaias W. Hellman; vice-president, Robert Watt; vice-president and manager, I. W. Hellman, Jr.; cashier and secretary, Charles J. Deering; assistant cashier and assistant secretary, J. M. Israel.

At the recent annual meeting of the Pacific Lighting Company the old officers and board of directors were re-elected as follows: C. O. G. Miller, president; George H. Collins, vice-president; A. Schilling, Charles Holbrook and F. W. Van Sicklen. Horace H. Miller was elected secretary.

The State Board of Bank Commissioners has just issued the statement of the aggregate condition of the nine savings banks doing business in San Francisco as of January 23, 1904, at the close of business: Total resources, aggregating $166,466,774, have increased $2,963,096.60 since the statement of September 8, 1903, and $11,703,983.17 since December 31, 1902. Deposits have increased $3,485,489.59 since September 8th, and $10,611,667.41 since December 31, 1902.

The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

Allen's Press Clipping Bureau has removed to the rooms, formerly occupied by Bradstreet's, at 230 California street, San Francisco, Cal.

Political

I was glad to learn at Santa Rosa last week that the Governor is very wisely about to take the advice of the News Letter, and make a change at the Home for the Feeble Minded, which might not inappropriately be styled the Home of Scandals during the past three years. It appears, if what the officials at the Santa Rosa Court House tell me is correct, that Dr. Dawson, Superintendent at the Home, is to be sent back to his St. Helena drug store, and Dr. Fred Hatch, at present President of the Lunacy Commission, is to be appointed in his place. The change is one that will be applauded all over the State, and I hasten to congratulate the Governor on the contemplated change. Dr. Hatch is one of the best-known authorities on insanity in the State, and those who know him intimately say he is kind-hearted, a good administrator, and just the man to make a success of the Home.

The trustees of the Home are not willing to be responsible for the mismanagement of Dr. Dawson any longer. It will be recalled by readers of the News Letter that it was under Dawson that all the scandals in connection with allowing girls to leave the institution have occurred. It was due to him, and his neglect of duty, that Rosa King, the unfortunate girl who committed suicide at ex-trustee Gould's residence in this city, was allowed to leave the shelter of the Home. The trustees naturally objected to being blamed for these scandals, especially trustees Bane and Lyons, who have often found their political duty of standing in with the Governor very difficult, and they are delighted to know that Dr. Hatch is going to take Dr. Dawson's place.

My attention was called while at Santa Rosa also to the plain violation of the law which the State Board of Examiners and Controller Colgan are permitting when they allow Dr. Dawson's son to draw salary as his secretary. The Lunacy law, I am told, directly forbids members of a Superintendent's family holding office under him, and therefore all the payments are illegal. I am sure the Controller, who is very careful, and who is the most popular man in Santa Rosa when he is there, need only have his attention called to this matter to insist upon the law being complied with. Secretary Mellicktoo is a stickler after the law, and he should explain why he allows its plain provisions to be violated.

Naturally, I asked who was likely to take Dr. Hatch's place as President of the Lunacy Board, and it appears that Dr. J. D. Young of Stockton Insane Asylum is considered the man. Dr. Young had figured lately a good deal as an expert in insanity in criminal matters, and has the confidence of the Governor. Only a few persons are eligible for the place, as the President of the Board of Lunacy must have several years' experience in the asylums before he can be appointed. Unlike the State Board of Corrections and Charities, he cannot be imported from Minnesota at State expense for moving his family. Of those eligible, Dr. Clarke is too old to care for the place; Dr. Stocking has only recently been appointed in charge of the Agnews Asylum; Dr. Stone is not even eligible to the place he now holds as Director at Napa Asylum, and Dr. King is too much of a litigant, not to speak of his connections with the Anderson outfit and its college. There is another Dr. Campbell in Southern California who is eligible, except that he is a homeopath, and the doctors would never consent to be ruled by that branch of the profession. Dr. Young is looked upon as the probable successor of Dr. Clarke at Stockton,

The most interesting subject of discussion in political circles at present is who will go to Chicago and St. Louis. The Republicans have candidates galore. For delegate at large, Governor Pardee would like to head the delegation; so would ex-Governor Gage and editors Otis, Spreckels and De Young are also willing. Senator Tom Flint thinks that he has presided over the Senate with ability enough to entitle him to be one of the delegates at large, and ex-Senator Felton, who has started into political life again since he was appointed upon the Prison Board, would be willing to help nominate Roosevelt. George Knight wants to be delegate at large, by virtue of the fact that he has a splendid voice, is a good talker, and has attended conventions before. U. S. Grant is a candidate from the South, and Abe Ruef is the choice of a good many persons from this city. All of those gentlemen, with the two United States Senators and Congressman Metcalf, want to be delegates at large, although there are only four places. Of course there are several names on the list that could be dropped, and no one, except the droppee, would care. There are possible combinations that would make the delegation as inharmonious as the two Kilkenney cats. Take, for instance, Gage and Otis; they don't speak, and could not travel on the same train even if one rode on the cow-catcher and the other held the green flag on the rear platform. Then there are Gage and Spreckels—that would be worse than Gage and Otis. There are Pardee and Gage, or Gage and Flint, or Pardee and Flint. In fact, Gage would find it difficult to manage with any one else, and so would Otis, who always fights the Republican ticket anyway. So both of them had better be left at home, and probably will be. Besides those I have mentioned, Hayes of San Jose and Short of Fresno would like to be delegates at large, and both are strong men, and have none of the antagonisms that the other men who have been prominent in politics for years have engendered.

The Democrats are even more at a loss whom to choose than the Republicans, and with them it is not simply a question of who shall go to a convention, but who shall have the vote of the delegation for President. They have Mayor Snyder of Los Angeles, ex-Governor Budd of Stockton or San Francisco, ex-Mayor Phelan of San Francisco, William Alford, Ed. Leake of Woodland, Congressman Bell, Dick Bemmer, Franklin K. Lane, Gavin McNab, J. V. Coleman, Joseph Slye, Will Green, ex-Congressman Caminetti, and a dozen others, but the great fact must be ascertained in their camp, "Who will you support for President?" Budd, of course, is for Hearst, and Phelan is not; Ed. Leake and Will Green ditto. McNab is now said to be for Hearst, but neither he nor Lane would be very enthusiastic, and the Hearst managers are afraid of them; they might be gotten away from the omnipresent editor at St. Louis too easily. Alford and Snyder are for anybody and anything that will help them along in their political ambitions, which tend toward Sacramento and the Governor's chair, and Dick Bemmer is traveling in their company. —Junius.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The Automobile Club of California has been turned down by the Park Commissioners. The request made by the club for extended privileges has been denied. At the last meeting, a committee composed of some of the most prominent men in the city appeared before the Board and asked that the overlook drive and a certain part of the great highway be opened to automobiles. The latter part of the request was made so the Cliff House might be reached without coming back to the Park entrance or to take the Cliff House hill road. But their endeavors were without avail, and the matter was laid over until the next meeting.

It is strange that such an intelligent body of men as the Board of Park Commissioners should for one instant withhold rights that belong to the automobilists. It is, however, a repetition of what had to be encountered when the club received the privilege to use the South Drive. Unlike that time, the Board cannot deny the request on the ground that it would be dangerous, as this modern mode of conveyance might frighten horses and thereby tend to the loss of life. That time is gone, and the horses of the city are not frightened by the horseless one.

But now some of the Commissioners are using the pretext that the automobiles are being driven beyond the speed limit, and if any more drives are opened to them it may cause accidents. If this is the only reason why the drives are not opened, the Commissioners have placed themselves in a sorry light, for they acknowledge they are unable to enforce the laws they make.

Let it be granted for the sake of argument that there are some automobilists who go through the Park at a speed greater than that set down by the law. Is that any reason why the automobilists as a body should be prohibited from the extension of the privilege now enjoyed. There is no one who would appreciate more the arresting of any one breaking the laws than the average automobilist. It has been suggested that this is not the true reason; that behind it all is a strong pressure being brought to bear to keep the drives of the Park closed as long as possible, as with the opening of the main channels through the pleasure ground the cabman and those who hire out carriages would have quite a source of revenue cut off.

If this is the case, San Francisco is in just as bad position as New York City was before the State law was enacted, which made it possible to enter Central Park. It was the cabmen's association of that city, a strong political organization, that brought a strong pull into play and kept the park closed. But there were too many progressive men interested in automobiles, and a State law was passed that cut down the barriers.

Some such measure will have to be worked out in this city before relief comes.

When the Park Commissioners insist on prohibiting the local automobile owners from using the Park drive it might be well to give a few facts about the automobile industry, to see if that will not convince them that it is time for them to become alive to the times and not allow Eastern visitors to smile at their out-of-date methods of controlling the Park.

One of the firms in the New York Automobile Show announced that its output up to December 31st had been $2,500,000, and future orders could not be filled until a late date.

The production in the United States prior to 1898 consisted of a few experimental machines. By 1900 the annual output was about 800, with an average cost of $1,000. 1901 saw an increase to 3,000 machines, valued at $2,400,000, or about $800 apiece. In 1902 the number had increased to 8,000, with a value of $6,800,000, an increase of $50 per machine.

In 1903 the actual sales were estimated at 11,000 cars, with a value of $12,000,000.

Last year about 200 foreign autos came into the country, valued at about $4,000 each. On the other hand, the exports of American automobiles have increased with wonderful rapidity. Prior to July 1, 1901, these exports were not classified separately, and so cannot be ascertained, but from that date to November 30, 1902. For the first eleven months of 1902 these exports amounted to $1,026,083, and for the corresponding period of 1903, $1,419,481. From this showing it is evident for the entire year the exports will reach the imposing total of a million and a half. The British trade returns, which give the number of motor cars, including motor cycles, imported into the United Kingdom for the eleven months ending November 30, 1903, at 5,892, valued at $8,020,093.50, or an increase over the preceding year of 2,315 machines and more than $2,500,000 in value.

With this ever increasing demand for the modern chariot, it is not likely that the Commissioners will think it safe for their reputations to hinder such an industry and destroy, or at least block, a local market.

The coming June will see another attempt to go from the Pacific to the Atlantic. This time, however, it will not be a question of whether the destination will be reached, but how quickly the distance may be covered.

B. B. Holcomb, who drove a Columbia car from Chicago to New York in 76 hours, thinks he can make the transcontinental journey in 400 hours by running the car day and night.

Some one has been writing to the Motor Age about a scheme in California to restore Mission roads for the use of automobiles. The writer states that the Southern owners will build as far as Santa Barbara, and then will leave the rest of the distance to the Northern men.

The writer should wake up. San Francisco owners cannot open their own park, let alone restoring "The King's Highway."

The Rambler Automobile Agency will open in its new quarters at 1331 Market street, corner 10th, on Monday, February 15th, with a complete stock of Rambler automobiles. The Rambler Company are the second largest manufacturers of automobiles in the United States, and make eight models of machine. The machine has earned a splendid reputation, as many owners here in San Francisco can testify, and the News Letter extends its best wishes for a prosperous year for the new agency, which is owned by Fred A. Jacobs, formerly vice-president of the National Automobile Company. It is a coincident that the quarters formerly occupied by the Rambler

The following are names of recent purchasers of Locomobile gasoline touring cars: Mr. Bliss, president Boston-Albany Railroad; W. A. Vogel, Brooklyn, N. Y.; E. S. Cole, Bridgeport, Conn.; C. S. The Pope-Toledo Mile-a-Minute touring cars arrived at the National Automobile Company's place last Saturday afternoon, and created quite a sensation for their beauty and quiet running. It seemed from the expressions of the visitors who called to look these two cars over that they were the handsomest things in the automobile line that have ever come to San Francisco.

Mr. B. D. Merchant received his four-cylinder Pope-Toledo from the National Automobile Company last week.

The National Automobile Company shipped a blue Pope-Toledo Mile-a-Minute four-cylinder car to Ellicott Evans of Pasadena the past week. Mr. Evans of Pasadena came to the city on the day of the arrival of the Pope-Toledos, and was one of the first to view them after their arrival at the National Automobile Company's garage. Mr. Boyer of the National Automobile Company, accompanied by Mr. Riley and Mr. Spears, were out through the Park in Mr. Evans' blue Toledo on last Sunday afternoon.

The Mobile Carriage Company just received advice that another shipment of Arrows will leave the factory about the 10th of February. These will be of different type, some with square and slanting hoods and canopy tops.

* * *

The Mobile Company closed a contract with Weber & Field's to provide them with automobiles during their two weeks' stay in San Francisco. This company has had the patronage of all the leading theatrical people visiting San Francisco, and their service has been such that they are well known throughout the East. When the theatrical people come to the Coast, they apparently place their orders with the Mobile Carriage Company without inquiries.

The Mobile Carriage Company has been advised by the George N. Pierce people that their carload of the French Arrows has been shipped, and will reach the Coast at an early date.

With a blare of trumpets, Chicago's fourth annual automobile show was opened to the public at the Coliseum February 6th. Covering the great expanse of floor space are displayed man's most modern machines of locomotion, these hundreds of vehicles being valued at more than $2,000,000. In every detail Chicago's show is the most diversified, the most comprehensive that has been attempted. There are more than 600 various types of machines on exhibition. These kings of the show, dotting the floor on raised platforms, are hedged in by exhibits of hundreds of accessories to these modern time-annihilating devices.

RENEWAL.

By Florence Earle Coates in Harper's Magazine

These sounds sonorous rolling!—
 These vibrant tones and clear!
 Listen! The bells are tolling
 The requiem of the year:
 The year that dies, as mute it lies
 Midst fallen leaves and sere!

Now by the fading embers
 That on earth's hearthstone glow,
 How sadly one remembers
 The things of long ago;
 The wistful things, with flame-bright wings,
 That vanished long ago.

The self-effacing sorrow,
 The generous desire,
 The pledges for the morrow,
 Enkindled at this fire!—
 Enkindled here, O dying year!
 Where smoulders low thy pyre.

What hope and what ambition,
 What dreams beyond recall!
 And look we for fruition,
 To find them ashes all?
 Is life the wraith of love—of faith?
 Then let the darkness fall!

The sparks—how fast they dwindle!
 How faint their being glows!
 Quickly! the fire rekindle—
 Ah, quickly, e'er it goes!
 Woo living breath from the lips of death!—
 From ashes bring the rose!

Kind God! The bells, in gladness!
 The rose of hope hath bloomed!
 For, consecrating sadness,
 Life hath its own resumed,
 And welcomes here the new-born year—
 A phoenix, unconsumed!

OPPORTUNITY.

By Blanche Trennor Heath in Lippincott's
 "I have no skill to lead," he cried,
 "But see, the breach within the wall!"
 He grasped a bugle at his side
 And blew a battle call.

They followed where the bugle rang;
 They smote the crumbling wall to ground—
 Foremost within the breach he sprang,
 The man the hour had found!

WISDOM.

By Theodorsia Garrison in Harper's Weekly
 I never knew what sorrow meant
 When I had tears to shed,
 The tears that washed out bitterness
 And left content instead.

I know at last what sorrow is
 Who have no tears to fall,
 But only for life's tragedies
 A laughter cynical.

TWO NURSES.

By Agnes Lee in Lippincott's
 In the soul's chamber, reft and bare,
 When the soul may not weep,
 Comes stealing in the Nurse, Despair,
 And drugs it off to sleep.

But in some watch, ere night be dead,
 Another takes her place;
 At dawn, above the soul's dim bed,
 Hope bends her beaming face.

The Baltimore fire is unique in more than one particular. It has not cost any lives; it is about the largest fire of recent times, and it has afforded the daily press an opportunity to display its crass ignorance.

According to the reports published by the daily press, the stock market (i. e., the insurance stocks) fled way down into the basement of the Stock Exchange building, and was so much waste paper.

As a matter of fact, the managers of fire insurance companies on California street did not seem to be flurried in the least.

It is conceded that the local Baltimore Fire Insurance Companies will go out of business, but there are Baltimore companies which will undoubtedly keep on doing business at the old stand.

The newspaper talk about a slump in the stocks of fire insurance companies is all bosh. Here in California we have two local fire insurance companies, and it is safe to say that they had achieved their share of Baltimore business.

In an interview, the officers of each company seemed not to be worried, and were not in the least upset. Their losses were not definitely known, but if they had lost the gigantic amount charged to them by the daily press, it might rattle, but still would not phase them.

California fire insurance companies are habituated to meeting losses caused by conflagrations. The Boston, the Chicago and the Pittsburg fires are old exceptions. They have been through, as it were, the fire before, and the Fireman's Fund and the Home Fire and Marine are among the Baltimore losers who are the least disturbed.

There are justly grounded fears that some of the Maryland Companies will be wiped out, but as before said, it is expected that these will be only the companies which have transacted a purely local business.

The two or three Maryland companies doing an agency business are expected to survive, and if perchance they should fail, they will only make a ruffle in the pool of the insurance world. The daily press to the contrary notwithstanding.

It would be futile for the News Letter to quote figures as to the amount of loss. It is too early, and figures at this writing can only be guess work.

* * *

This, however, the News Letter may say, that like the theatre disaster this Baltimore fire calls attention to the rubbish on our own door-step.

The business district of Baltimore, which is burned was comprised of a few A and of many B buildings. Baltimore had a fairly good fire department and plenty of water, and yet these brick, stone and granite structures burned like tow.

How a fire would act in San Francisco can be better imagined than described. If it commenced south of Market, in the vicinity of, say, Third and Howard, or north of Market, in the hotel district!

These localities, not forgetting the lumber district and the freight yards (of which we have already had a taste) are a menace to the city. When the fire comes, and come it will, there will be a wild time both among firemen and fire insurance companies' stocks.

Fire Marshall Towe agrees with this prognostication, as is evidenced by his report, made to the Board of Supervisors, in which he says:

"Many buildings have been constructed, under previous laws, wholly of wood, even as high as seven stories. They adjoin and abut in some cases. Many of them are centered in one of the hilly districts of our city. It has been the study of this Board and of the Fire Department, whose officers comprise this board, how to check a fire once started and extending from the building in which it originated in what may be termed the boarding-house district, where the buildings range from three to seven stories and are constructed wholly of frame. Should a fire start on a windy day it is possible for burning embers to be carried blocks away. The department would be taxed to its utmost and leave a valuable portion of the city at the mercy of the conflagration. This risk is with us every day, and, in answer to your resolution, we say the danger from fire is great—too great to be put in a written report.

"This is no new subject to this board. Its members have often talked it over at meetings and wished it were possible to pass an ordinance causing, hereafter, all buildings outside of the fire limits erected over three stories in height, attics and mansard roof included, to be constructed wholly of brick or stone, with no frame additions on the roof."

This strong language from an expert like Towe is worthy of note, and if Baltimore's business district, built of non-combustible material, burns, what would happen if "it got a start" in San Francisco?"

* * *

The Insurance Commissioner of California may be relied on to take prompt action in case of any of the smaller Eastern fire insurance companies being hard hit in the Baltimore fire. He would at once revoke the authority of the company to do business in this State. When the flurry is over, it will be found that there was a good deal more smoke than fire so far as the failure of insurance companies is concerned. The following is a list of the Maryland companies, showing their capital stock and net surplus:

	Capital Stock	Gross Assets	Surplus as to Policy-Holders December 31, 1904
Baltimore	$ 200,000	$ 610,712	$ 499,133
Balto. Eq. S'ty.		2,960,211	2,317,637
Firemen's	400,000	1,240,367	812,350
German	500,000	1,542,135	1,376,083
German-Am.	200,000	524,422	413,463
Home	200,000	466,147	295,420
Maryland	100,000	128,496	117,474
Old Town	100,000	134,924	127,540
Peabody	127,500	304,688	265,015
Security	100,000	144,683	125,527
Total	$1,927,500	$8,056,785	$6,349,651

* * *

George H. Tyson, the well-known general agent of the Phoenix Insurance Company and other good companies, states in an interview that the losses of his companies in the Baltimore conflagration will be about one and one-quarter million dollars, less than one-tenth of their policyholders' surplus held for such disasters. Now is the time to press forward for desirable business from the insuring public and demonstrate to them the advantage of insuring only with companies that are conflagration proof. Total losses paid in fifty years, including the great Chicago and Boston conflagrations, over fifty millions.

The Firemans Fund, following its old habit, sent to its Massachusetts general agent the following telegram:

"Charles W. Kellogg, Mason Building, Boston, Mass.—Telegrams received. Congratulations at learning that your original estimate was sufficiently liberal. I remit you $100,000. More as fast as needed. Make prompt and liberal settlement without discount, realizing that now, in the hour of their distress, our Baltimore policyholders are entitled to not only justice but liberality at our hands.
"WILLIAM J. DUTTON, Pres. Firemans Fund."

This is sufficient to establish the strength of California fire insurance companies. It is a safe guess that the $100,000 will come pretty near settling the total losses of the Firemans Fund, the daily press to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Home Fire and Marine and the Firemans Fund have been noted for years for their conservatism in lines, and they have not been caught in this fire to any extent which will deplete dividends.

George E. Butler received the following cablegram from the Phoenix: "Baltimore losses will be paid with funds from London office, leaving United States assets untouched." No one ever doubted the strength of the old Phoenix.

* * *

The Royal and Queen received the following telegram: "Rolla V. Watt, manager Royal Insurance Company: All funds needed in payment of Baltimore losses will be drawn from home office without disturbing United States investments. We are authorized to subscribe $10,000 to relief fund if such fund is found necessary to assist the poorer sufferers by this terrible calamity.—Edward F. Beddall, General Attorney for United States." The Baltimore losses of the Queen, the associate company with the Royal, were $450,000, or about 15 per cent of the company's annual premium income.

* * *

Edward Brown & Sons' Agency reports the following wires. The American of Philadelphia says: "Our interest in the Baltimore conflagration approximately $150,000."

Agricultural Insurance Company of New York: "Baltimore losses between $100,000 and $200,000."

Delaware of Delaware: "Loss, Baltimore nearly $100,000."

The Globe and Rutgers has no agency in Baltimore, and has sustained very little loss.

* * *

Mann & Wilson, managers, report: "The Baltimore Fire is the greatest of modern times, with the exception of that of Chicago. This conflagration occurred on Sunday morning, the 7th of February. On the afternoon of the succeeding day we received a telegram from the Home Office reading: 'Following the honorable course pursued by the New York Underwriters' Agency in all previous conflagrations, it is already adjusting and paying Baltimore losses.' This day we are in receipt of the following telegram: 'Combined losses, New York Underwriters and Hartford will not exceed $750,000.'"

The old Hartford, Palache and Hewitt managers, are not worried over the Baltimore loss, and base their confidence on the following wire: "The Hartford's premium income is far greater than that of any other company on the business of this Coast, but knowing full well the conflagration dangers in the great centers, the company has always regulated its lines accordingly, and the result is that while the Hartford does the third largest business in the State of Maryland, her estimated net losses in the enormous fire waste of Baltimore are the comparatively conservative amount of $750,000. The fire was not extinguished until Monday night, but on Tuesday we received the following telegram from President George L. Chase: 'Following the honorable course pursued by the Hartford Fire Insurance Company in all previous conflagrations, it is already adjusting and paying Baltimore losses.' In a time of such overwhelming disaster, promptness on the part of the insurance companies in meeting their obligations is the most effective aid to the sufferers. Such treatment on the part of the Hartford is precisely what policyholders in this great company are guaranteed, even though the amount involved was very much greater than the immense sum mentioned as involved in the Baltimore disaster. Such a terrible visitation always stimulates people to a new recognition of the value of insurance."

* * *

The other companies have been heard from to some extent; the L. & L. & G. are in receipt of a telegram estimating its losses at one million.

Korea as the Prize of War

J. Sloat Fassett has contributed an excellent article to the American Review of Reviews discussing the Korean situation. He says, in part:

"Behind the collision between Russia and Japan over Manchuria and Korea, the world sees the shadows of far greater questions—the mastery of the Pacific, the control of its commerce, the political supremacy in Asia—and in these questions no nation is more vitally interested than the United States.

"In fact, Americans, so far as business enterprises and the money invested in them are concerned, have larger interests in Korea than all the other nations combined. Americans constructed and sold to the Japanese the Chemulpō-Seoul railroad. Americans constructed for the Korean Government (and have not yet been entirely paid for the same), the electric railway in the city of Seoul itself, and some eighteen or twenty miles of suburban roads. Americans have also constructed lighting plants for the city of Seoul, and are investing in the development of a water system for the capital. Americans import into Korea immense quantities of kerosene oil, of canned goods, and of cotton cloth. Americans own, in association with English and French capitalists, the largest single enterprise in Korea, and one of the largest in Asia—a mining concession in the northern part of Korea. American missionaries, also, are doing a magnificent work in Korea. So that American interest is not alone the interest which attaches to exciting and important events, but is based upon the actual conditions of existing trade and property in Korea, as well as upon the future possibilities of the entire Asiatic commerce.

"The exciting causes of war are Manchuria and Korea, and the relations of Japan and Russia to these countries. Manchuria is one of the richest provinces of China. It is three times as large as the island empire of Japan. It has an excellent climate, a fertile soil, and abounds in rich mines of gold and coal, and iron and copper. It has fine harbors, which are, however, not ice-free. The larger portion of Manchuria was overrun and conquered by the Japanese in the war of 1894-95.

"Korea, however, is the bone of contention. It is the key to the present situation in the East. The strategic importance of Korea arouses a great interest in herself and her people, and in her relations to China and Russia and Japan. It is very difficult to convey to people who have always lived in the midst of our Occidental civilization anything like a realizing sense of the conditions prevailing among an Oriental people like the Koreans, who, until within a very few years, have been living in the atmosphere and in accordance with the customs of life and the habits of thought of the centuries before Christ.

"The form of government of Korea to-day is in name imperial. In 1897, after the close of the Chinese and Japanese war of 1894-95, the Korean king assumed the title of "Emperor," so as to enforce upon the attention of his own people the fact that he stood on the same basis as the ruler of Russia, the ruler of China, and the ruler of Japan. His power is unlimited. He has a cabinet of ministers, which constitutes his council. The members of this cabinet are changed by the imperial will, and the imperial will changes oftener than the phases of the moon. The empire is divided into districts and magistracies, which are governed by governors and magistrates appointed by the Emperor. These officers, in their turn, are not responsible to any but the sovereign, and are not affected by constitutional lets or hindrances of any kind. They have the power of life and death, and of the confiscation of property, subject only to the possible inquiry of the Emperor, whose attention may be brought to their acts by his professional spies and informers, who everywhere are passing up and down among the people. The entire government is based upon a system of squeeze, and the poor coolie is ground into the earth. He has no constitutional or legal protection. He must find his protection under the wing of some neighboring officer or nobleman of rank and power.

"The ideal solution of the Eastern question, as at present it manifests itself, would be to put Korea in commission, with her integrity and independence guaranteed by the great powers. For many centuries, she was the vassal both of China and Japan. She paid homage to them both, and she paid tribute to them both. She was the pretext and occasion for many a contest at arms between the Chinese and the Japanese people. This contest over Korea culminated in 1894, when China violated her treaty obligations and sent troops into Korea. Japan resented this, and after an engagement in which the Kowshing, a Chinese transport, was sunk, Japan formally declared war against China. This war was prosecuted by Japan with great vigor, both on sea and on land, and resulted in an uninterrupted series of victories for Japan. She drove the Chinese armies out of Korea, destroyed or captured all the Chinese navy that ventured into the Yellow Sea, invaded Manchuria and Shangtung, and captured the fortresses of Weihai-Wei and Port Arthur. She was thus in control of the Gulf of Pe-chi-li and the Yellow Sea. The world looked on with wonder and admiration at the fine discipline of the land and sea forces of Japan, and the vigor and efficiency with which the entire campaign was executed. Peace was declared in April, 1895, and a treaty was negotiated at Shimonoseki by Li Hung Chang, aided by John W. Foster, an American, for the Chinese, and Count Ito and Viscount Mutso, for the Japanese. By this treaty, the independence of Korea was recognized by both parties. All of that part of Manchuria which had been overrun by the Japanese armies, including the Liao-Tong peninsula, known as the Regent's Sword, and Port Arthur, was ceded to Japan. Japan also received a heavy indemnity in money and many other concessions which do not enter into the present difficulties. Japan thus came into possession of a rich territory—one of the richest in China—larger than her entire empire.

The immediate cause of the present difficulty between Russia and Japan is the failure of Russia to evacuate Manchuria, and Japan is determined to know, if possible, what Russia's future purposes are with reference to Manchuria and to Korea; for while Russia has been busy strengthening herself in Manchuria, she has been equally busy in endeavoring to strengthen herself in Korea, and in view of the centuries of continuous expansion of Russia, Japan may well be excused for being nervous. Japan has proposed that Russia shall recognize her interests in Korea as paramount, in return for the recognition by Japan of the paramountcy of Russian rights in Manchuria, agreeing that Russian rights in Korea shall be as liberally recognized as Japanese rights in Manchuria. Russia insists that she will not discuss Manchurian questions with Japan, but that she will consider a practical division of Korea. This proposition, naturally, is wholly unacceptable to Japan.

"The reason for Russia's persistent aggression toward Korea must be sought in her commercial interests. Russia desires Korea in order to open a way by land to seaports which shall be open the year round. Neither Vladivostock nor Dalny nor Port Arthur are such ports. The very improvements at Dalny have made it easier for the sea to freeze up. At enormous expense, Russia has almost completed a railroad across Asia, only to find herself with its termini in winter-locked harbors. To find an open harbor, Russia must either take possession in China of some harbor as far south as Chefoo, or she must take possession of Korea as far south as Chemulpo. Russia's only need of Korea is military and commercial. She does not need Korea as an outlet for her surplus population. She does not need the mines of Korea, nor does she need any power which might come from the accession of the Koreans to the Russian throne. She needs an outlet. Russia is, by reason of the very expenditures she has made in Manchuria, more determined than ever to be free to find open access to the waters of the Pacific Ocean.

"Japan desires Korea because her population is crowding the home island, and must have a place in which to overflow; because the climate, the soil, the products, the environment generally, are little different from those at home, and hence would make an attractive place for this overflow. Also, she wants Korea because she cannot afford to have Korea in the possession of her arch enemy, Russia. If Russia should take Korea, it would bring the Northern Bear to the very portals of the household of Japan. On the other hand, if Japan should take Korea, it would bring the little yellow man to the borders of Manchuria."

CARNEGIE AT HOME.

That Scotch varlet, Andrew Carnegie, had finished reading the formal statement of the new Commissioner of Police of New York City. "McAdoo, McAdoo," he ruminated slowly. "Wonder if he's Scotch?"

"What of it?" interposed Mrs. C.

"Everything, my dear. If he's Scotch, his name is a combination of 'muckle' and 'ado'; and 'muckle' means 'much.'"

"Now, what are you driving at, Andy?"

"I was thinking of the way a friend of ours near Skibo pronounces the title of my favorite Shakespearean comedy. He calls it 'McAdoo About Nothing.'"

"For heaven's sake, don't work that off publicly in New York. It would never be appreciated—not even by the Commissioner, and we may wish to ask him to dinner."

THE "AUTOCRANK" IN CHICAGO.

The automobile editor of the News Letter, now visiting Chicago and New York, writes from Chicago as follows:

Chicago, February 7, 1904.

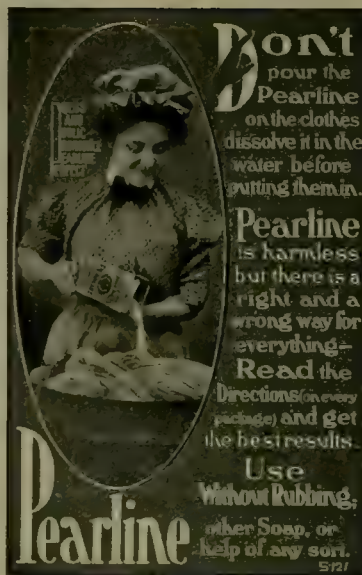

Chicago's big automobile show opened its doors at the Coliseum last night. Several thousand persons crowded the immense pavilion to see the great $3,000,000 exhibition. Society was there in all its glory, and many of the wealthy enthusiasts from New York, and even San Francisco, were there to see the greatest show of its kind in the Middle West. Many who had visited the New York show expressed their opinion that this show surpassed it. Even the noted horse shows which have taken place under the same roof were put in the shade. The Four Hundred did not have their private boxes, but there was not a big tonneau on exhibition that was not crowded with fashionable women who viewed the scene through their lognettes. My first impression on entering the pavilion was that it was a beauty show or a show in which the Four Hundred alone were on exhibition. Perched high on the various machines, their cloaks, furs and robes covered the machine in which they sat, thereby obstructing the enthusiast's view of the particular machine and which, of course, he desired to examine thoroughly.

Many of the "autophiles" of the most enthusiastic type were not pleased by the action of the first nighters, and I understand that for the balance of the show the ladies will be requested to leave their lognettes at home, and only those who desire to "try" a luxurious seat for a minute or so—as a prospective purchaser—will be allowed to climb in and out.

Among the exhibits were great touring cars built to hold eight to twelve persons, little autolets for one, gasoline broughams, electric runabouts, cabs, trucks, surreys, stanhopes and phaetons, not to speak of the mosquito fleet of motor cycles. Record-breaking machines were also on exhibit: The Columbia, which holds the record for the run from New York to Chicago, 1,177 miles in 76 hours; Web Jag's big White steamer, winner of the endurance contest, New York to Pittsburg; and the Packard Grey Wolf, a record breaker of light rigs.

Among the exhibits which attracted much attention were those of the Winton, Oldsmobile, Packard, White, Jones-Corbin, Knox, Haynes-Apperson, The Cadillac, Pierce, Northern, Rambler, Stevens-Duryea, Locomobile, and many others.

San Francisco certainly ought to give a show. The

COCKTAIL FACTS

About 90% of the Cocktails now drank are either Manhattans or Martinis; no good bar-keeper uses any bitters but "English Orange" in making them. The "CLUB COCKTAILS," Manhattans and Martinis, are made as they should be with English "Orange Bitters," are properly aged and are better than any fresh made cocktail possibly can be. A fresh made cocktail is like a new blend of any kind, unfit for use. Age is what makes a good Punch, age is what makes a good Cordial, age is what makes a good blended whiskey, age is what makes a palatable sauce, and above all age is what makes a good cocktail. These statements can be verified by any reputable blender.

First Financier—We are going to cut the dividend on Hoop stock.
Second Financier—Why, I had no idea that you had disposed of it all.

"What did you think of my death scene?" asked the actor. "Well, it seemed to me it came a little too late in the piece," was the reply.

Mrs. Misfit—Charles, do you think I am gowned well enough for the reception? Mr. Mitfit—Yes; how am I coated and panted?

"This is a dilution and a snare," remarked the man with the impressionistic complexion, as he realized that his whiskey had been watered.

"Gentleman," said the impassioned orator, "I cannot tell a lie." "Then what are you doing in politics?" interrupted a man in the audience.

Rodrick—I see some one has invented a musical automobile. Van Albert—Indeed! Wonder what tunes it will play? Rodrick—Breakdowns, I guess.

Dr. Ketchum—By Jove! These cab companies certainly know how to charge. His Wife—Never mind, dear! It's lucky that the president of the company is a patient of yours.

"You say that Lord Fucash's social position has improved since he married a rich American girl?" "Yes, indeed. Formerly he was only a nobleman; now he belongs to our heiresstocracy."

The Visitor—It's heartrending to hear your baby. He has been crying for the last hour. The New Mother—Oh, yes. But it's a strictly scientific, hygienic, lung-expansive and non-tissue-destroying cry.

Dimpleton—In the absence of the nurse, can't young Willie take care of the baby while we are out? Mrs. Dimpleton—I should say not. Why, I would as soon think of leaving the baby with you.

Returned Traveler—What has become of Jordie? When I went away from here ten years ago he was a budding politician. Old Resident—Well, he's more than that now. He's a grafting politician.

"I wonder," said Mr. Pshucks, the gifted tragedian, "who that man was that came to me after the play was over and told me my acting in the final scene had made him shed tears." "I think," replied the manager, "that was the new dramatic critic of the 'Daily Bread.'" The roast Mr. Pshucks got in next morning's issue of the "Daily Bread" seemed to indicate that the manager's impression was correct.

"Goodness! How those two men are swearing at each other!" "Yes, it's pretty fierce." "What's the matter with them?" "They're arguing about their respective religious beliefs."

THINGS THEATRICAL.

Announcements of the wondrous things coming to the Grand Opera House follow the release from bondage of some really wise old owls in local theatrical circles. When Morgenstern and Ackerman and the others who stand behind one of the local companies, got possession of the big house on the south side, they put it into the syndicate pot which in this city is stirred by the Columbia Theatre people. Before long Morgenstern and his associates saw that they were going to play Indian in the turkey, and the turkey buzzard story. In the plain vernacular of the day, they were going to get left. They saw that a few boards had been knocked out of the syndicate fence, and that some of the best attractions were crawling out, but they could not avail themselves of the good things, even though they had the house to play them in. They realized that they had made a big mistake in tying up with the Columbia people, and went to work to get free. They let money talk. The Columbia management added a sum or two on the right side of its ledger, but the Grand Opera House people will not be long making up that. Third and Mission streets will soon look as though grand opera was happening every night.

Colds and internal disturbances have been mixing things again at the Tivoli. Anna Lichter—Katy, the Southern Rose of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" is out. Caro Roma has taken her part. "For the good of the service," says the management. Unofficially, report has it that there has been a scrap. At least that is not the cause of Brownlow's temporary retirement. He is too hoarse to sing. Cunningham has taken his part, and Fogarty has climbed the ladder and is perching on Cunningham's round. The doctor and the peace-maker are at work straightening things out.

The friends of Ex-Senator John P. Jones, and they are legion, will be sorry to learn that he accidentally fell on a sidewalk at Washington, D. C., and suffered a severe strain of the ligaments of a lower limb. It is reported that the Senator will be confined to his apartments for some time as a result. His daughter, Miss Georgiana, who was in New York at the time, hurried to Washington. Mrs. Jones, however, is in Bermuda, where she has been visiting for her health, but is expected to arrive in California in a few weeks. In referring to Miss Georgiana Jones it will be remembered that the June Munsey Magazine printed a delightful rondeau from her pen. A number of literary productions by this talented young lady have been printed of late which give promise of a successful future in literary circles.

We are in receipt of the prospectus of the Liege Universal and International Exhibition. This will open at Liege, Belgium, in April, 1905. Liege is especially well situated for such an exhibition. Its population is a cordial, jolly one, and Belgium is yearly consuming more and more American goods. The Belgian Consul at San Francisco will furnish intending exhibitors and engineers with all necessary data.

—There's only one right way to clean a carpet, and that's the way employed by the Spaulding Carpet Cleaning Co., 353 Tehama street. By their improved machinery they clean a carpet thoroughly and quickly without injuring the fabric. You have no fuss, bother or anxiety. Simply have the Spauldings call for your carpet, and in a short time it will be returned looking like new.

A NOTABLE CONFERENCE.

Mr. Frank A. Symmes has just issued the call for the meeting of the State Conference of Charities and Corrections. It is to be held in San Francisco beginning Sunday, February 21st, and continuing for three days. Mr. Symmes is President of the Association, and Mrs. E. C. Tallant of Santa Barbara is vice-president. Mr. James P. Taylor of Oakland is one of the directorate; Miss Katharine C. Felton of San Francisco is the secretary and treasurer. The Honorable B. Lindsay will speak and Judge Frank Murasky is also scheduled to give his views on "The Child and the State." There are to be a number of other speakers, inclusive of Dr. Rixford, Dr. Kerr, Dr. Ward, Dr. Clark, Mr. John Chetwood, Dr. Hecht, Dr. Hoisholt, Dr. Dawson, Mr. Andrew M. Davis, Dr. Smith of St. Paul, Dr. Gates, Mr. Osgood Putnam, Reverend J. K. McLean, and Mr. Herbert W. Lewis. Dr. Smith of St. Paul has quite a reputation as a speaker, and those who go to hear him will not be disappointed. Mr. Davis will tell us about the "Charity Endorsement Committee and its Aims."

At this season the housekeeper and the business man is casting about for the most efficient house cleaner obtainable. The San Francisco Compressed Air Cleaning Company offers a mechanical means of getting over this annual difficulty. To be able to clean houses or business premises without disturbing the existing order of things, without dust or the thousand and one annoyances that are incidental to the task is certainly a great achievement. It saves the nerves and the pocket. It is sanitary. It offers the quickest means of accomplishing a practically perfect result. It is cheap and it is rapid. Your carpets remain on the floors, and, take it altogether, it is one of the greatest labor saving inventions of the age.

Thomas J. Smith, Irish comedian, will follow at the Grand with a six nights' engagement in "The Game-keeper." He is announced as having a strong company.

* * *

We are promised a treat at the Columbia, with Ward and James in Shakespearean roles. They will give us "Julius Caesar," "Othello," and "Macbeth."

* * *

Denman Thompson is announced as following Ward and James; then Mary Mannering, and then "The Silver Slipper." "The Silver Slipper" is a musical comedy production.

* * *

The Tivoli people are putting in a lot of work on "The Gypsy Baron," and this masterpiece of Johann Strauss should have an unprecedented run at the hands of the fine talent at the Eddy-street house.

* * *

The bill at the Orpheum for next week promises to be the best of the good bills presented this year. Billy Van will still be with us, and there is an addition of eight Vassar girls, who will give us an idea of the versatility that may be attained on musical instruments. We are promised a treat in this act. Harry Thomson, "Mayor of the Bowery," German comedian, will be with us again. There are many other attractive features in the bill.

* * *

The next attraction at the Central will be a frontier drama. It is called "The Men of Jimtown." The action of the play is laid in Oklahoma, on the borders of the Cherokee nation.

* * *

The Alcazar Company will appear in "Charity Ball" next week, and we may expect something good from this company. "The Charity Ball" is a drama of New York society, and is the joint work of H. C. de Mille and David Belasco. Following "The Charity Ball" will come "The Wrong Mr. Wright," and then the dramatic rendering of "Parsifal."

* * *

Kelly and Violette, the "Fashion Plate Singing Duo," and universal favorites, will appear at the Chutes this coming week, as will also Irving Jones, the diminutive colored individual who writes his own songs. Winstanley and Sullivan will continue their interesting dancing act; Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Hall will change their specialty, and Hanlon and Zanfrella, the flying aerialists, will offer new surprises. Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, promises new illustrated songs, and the animatoscope will complete an unusually interesting performance. The amateurs next Thursday night will be droll.

The management of Fischer's claims to have secured the two highest-salaried and best-known comedians in America, who will come here in about a month and will open in a musical production which had a whole season's run in New York alone.

—When you get your fall clothing made, also make arrangements to have it cleaned and pressed regularly at Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street. It is economy to do it.  All social items, announcements, advertising or other matter intended for publication in the current number of the NEWS LETTER should be sent to this office not later than 5 p. m. Thursday previous to day of issue.

Edward Gould is a director of forty-nine corporations, and every week he runs a tape measure around his waist to make sure that it's now an even fifty.

General Miles is at the head of a big oil syndicate with lands in Oklahoma. Is this a flank attack on Rockefeller's pet monopoly?

Ten thousand lithographers threaten to strike. Let 'em; we ought to be able to take our canned goods for awhile without three-color labels.

A Pennsylvania boy of eighteen has gone crazy from over-study. It seems hardly worth mentioning that he smoked 100 cigarettes a day.

A school of matrimony is proposed in a bill presented to the Iowa Legislature by a medical member. A latch-key should go with each diploma.

Young Mr. Morgan, returned from the Orient with a Japanese bride, says: "It is not true that I bought my wife; I won her." Ah, poker or razzle-dazzle?

Viceroy Alexieff is reported to be "bottled up" in Port Arthur. His staff is admitted to have been "tanked up" when the Japanese opened the siege.

"Hell," remarks a Minneapolis newspaper, "hath no fury like a teacher fired." Is it possible that the Twin Cities, too, have had their Kate Kennedy case?

The name of Japan's chief sea-fighter, Admiral Uriu, may sound to Western ears like some kind of kidney disorder, but to the Russian it spells yellow fever.

Now that a genius has dramatized the query: "How old is Ann?" we marvel that no playwright ever thought of the possibilities latent in "Who struck Billy Patterson?"

While war rages in the Orient, let us not overlook the fact that the editors of the New York World and Journal are in deadly conflict—of ink-pots and stink-pots. One of the mildest terms yet employed in this affair was "Mr. Peewee."

It was highly fitting to temper with mercy the justice measured out to Mrs. Bowers, the husband-poisoner, by sending her to prison for life, and not to the gallows. She might have given her spouse pounded glass, but instead she merely filled him with arsenic.

A Missouri university student has fractured the college bucksaw record with a performance of twelve cords of wood sawed in three days. If the fates shall spare him, what a politician he will make!

"Who," asks a Republican editor-orator in Utah, "shall drive the Democratic hearse?" Anybody but the young man whose name mention of the dead wagon suggests.

The Board of Education of Des Moines has gone in for dress reform, and ordered a cut in the length of schoolma'ams' skirts. Iowa takes everything hard—except its liquor.

Russia expects to be too busy fighting to take part in the St. Louis Exposition, but if Turkey keeps faith, the Midway will still be a place of delight to the unregenerate.

Until the Hawaiians are through rounding up the wild jackasses of the islands and converting them into smoked beef, it will be prudent for Congressman Livernash to remain in Washington.

From the finding of a roulette wheel and other gambling arrangements in a Trenton, N. J., preparatory school, we might infer that secondary education at the East includes teaching the young idea how to shoot craps.

A telegraph operator at Helping Hand, Kansas, hiccoughed steadily for fourteen days. He attributes his recovery to the fact that he was too busy with his malady to try any of the seventy-five remedies suggested to him.

Since Standard Oil controls the asbestos supply on earth and the Rockefeller family voice is the loudest that is heard from the "amen corner," it need not worry about the question whether hell belongs to the here or the hereafter.

Mayor Harrison of Chicago, reading that the Capitol at Washington was ringing with political speeches full of poker talk, at once swung into line with a published essay on "Four-flushing: An End of American Cities."

A captious press criticises Mayor McClellan of New York, who is accused of hiring a megaphone tooter to shout his public and private virtues at tourists while they gaze upon his house. Was it ever suspected that modesty ran in the McClellan family?

Congressman Shafrath of Colorado, finding that there had been fraud in twenty-nine of the precincts that gave him majorities, voluntarily announced that fact and relinquished his seat to the contestant. If there were no tacks in the seat, Shafrath should be presented with a halo at Government expense.

AN ABUSE OF CONFIDENCE.

The United States Government is in the same position as a newspaper when it is seeking information for the protection of the public. No blame can attach to the methods employed to best subserve the public interest. If a trusted employee through carelessness or spite gives out information which leads to the uncovering of criminal acts, the Government officers are justified in making the most of such information. No one but a fool would think of accusing a newspaper of unfair methods when it uses the same method in the protection of the public's interest. On the other hand, any Government official whose duty it is to uncover crime and any newspaper whose duty it is to purvey news to the public would be guilty of almost criminal neglect in failing to take advantage of any and all means to reach the desired end. Failing to do this would earn the derision of competitors and the blame of superiors.

It is a different proposition with the trusted agent, and any penalty cannot be too severe for such criminals. Any stenographer, transcribing notes, and then in a spirit of revenge or with a view to making a pecuniary profit selling same to interested parties, commits a crime for which there can be absolutely no palliation.

We have the case before us of the investigation now going on in Washington, in which several prominent citizens figure together with Mr. John A. Benson. A stenographer, said to be pretty, is also said to have been discharged because of alleged flirtatious conduct with a male employee. The lady in question is credited with being a widow. She and the gentleman, who is said to have devoted too many hours of their employer's time in the pleasure of love making, were discharged by the chief clerk. The man in the case then drops from the scene, but the woman does not. The statement comes from Washington that the agents of the Land Department hold her transcription of notes and a copy of her stenographic work while in the employ of Mr. Hyde. While we doubt the story that Mr. Hyde has ever been engaged in any questionable transaction, this article will not pretend to discuss that side of the question. The gentlemen involved by the action of the petticoated Nemesis are amply able to take care of themselves.

Our business is with the trusted employee. He or she occupies an enviable and indefensible position. If the business man is to be the prey of every miserable wretch who chooses to sell the information which is given in absolute confidence, it is high time some special legislation relegated the informant to long residence in a State penal institution. In a case before one of our local judges, not long ago, a young lady stenographer gave a very good definition of the duties of a trusted clerk. Being pressed by the attorney who had called her on the stand for information regarding certain work that she had been employed upon, she made answer as follows:

"I cannot remember anything about it, except that I was employed by Mr. ——. A stenographer should have no memory of her work any more than a machine has. The only thing I am interested in is the finished product, and the material that goes to make up the product is none of my business. Fifteen minutes afterward, except for the use of my employer, whose trust I will not abuse even after quitting his employ, my mind and memory are a blank. I cannot remember well enough to commit a breach of trust."

The confidence reposed in a stenographer should be as sacred as the confession given a priest or the trust reposed in a doctor.

SQUEEZED BY THE MILKMAN.

Between a more or less effective milk combine and a long-eared union of milkwagon drivers, led by a long-headed labor agitator, the man-in-the-middle is in for another squeeze. The combine, known as the Dairymen's Association, has operated thus far only to make its product thinner and bluer and more costly. Seeing its field invaded by a new company selling better milk at a lower price, the combine turns to one who has served it well before—turns to the long-headed leader of the long-eared, Alexander Dijeau, one of whose "grafts" carries the title of "business agent" of the Milkwagon Drivers' Union. Dijeau responds promptly, notifying the new concern that unless its prices are advanced to the combine schedule he will call out his union drivers. The Labor Council—be this recorded to its credit—warns Dijeau that it will endorse no such strike. This petty jobster and small grafter replies that when he says "strike" the drivers will strike, Council or no Council.

This, we submit, is pretty near the limit. Dijeau is of the Sam Parks stripe of walking delegate, and the sooner organized labor jettisons him the better for organized labor. Such a man never brings anything but discredit upon all that he touches. And Dijeau is not only the "handy man" of the milk combine, by grace of his connection with the Drivers' Union, but he holds the Scavengers' Union in the same predatory hand. Incidentally he draws a salary for the pretense of working in the Tax Collector's office. If he enjoys any other sources of questionable profit, they are not known to the police.

In this milk squeeze, the prospective sufferers were so many of them workingmen that the central organization of local unionism could not well do otherwise than refuse to fall in with the contemplated iniquity, but even the obviousness of that fact failed to move Major Schmitz, that ornamental "friend of the people," when complaint was made to him, based on the ground that the public had a right to insist upon better conduct from a civil service employee like Dijeau. What the Mayor did was to do nothing at all, as was to have been expected.

We do not hope that this strike may be averted. Let it come, and then, if organized labor fail to meet the situation with a remedy sufficiently drastic, perhaps a community that has shown signs of having suffered long enough from outrages of this kind will deal according to his merits with the greedy Dijeau and redeem his followers from a state of ignorance—or pignorance. New York put up with Sam Parks for a time and then put him up—in Sing Sing.

"FIXING" THE GAS RATES.

The thousands of citizens who have felt the heavy hand of the lighting monopoly will do well to watch closely the annual rate-fixing inquiry now being conducted by the Supervisors. That proceeding has not yet reached the stage where the gas trust tells what more it wants from its victims, but the amount of the extortion proposed may be guessed at from the figures already submitted. Before the deal which put an end to competition, the largest and oldest corporation in the field, the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company, had paid no dividends in months and its stock was being offered at about half its par value, with few, if any takers. The trust statement filed with the Supervisors shows net earnings for the last year of $574,956.60, dividends paid $396,210.83, and a surplus of $178,745.77. The stock is currently quoted at 58. Apparently things have begun to look up for the gas trust.

This carefully cooked-up statement is modestly silent about the "present value" of the monopoly's plants, but gives its present cost as $25,704,944.84. Call it $26,000,000, and note that down as the amount of alleged investment upon which the trust will demand a "reasonable return." This "present cost" includes the price paid by the monopoly for the Independent Company, which was between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000, covering the cost of that establishment, plus a royal profit to its owners. It includes, also, the cost of and profit upon two other rivals, the Equitable and the Pacific.

Brushing aside the sophistries and the bald deceptions that are called "high finance," it is plain that the gas trust wants the people to pay to it the vast sums which it paid to others for the exclusive lighting privilege of San Francisco, and a handsome profit beside. It may be conjectured, with no further information than is now at hand, that the monopoly will demand rates that will yield not less than 6 per cent net on its present cost, or $1,560,000, as against its stated net income of $574,956.60 for last year. We shall not be surprised if its hired "bluffers" boldly call for a rate in excess of $2 per thousand cubic feet, but we shall listen with attention while they try to explain a rate of 50 cents a thousand while the competition was at its keenest. We shall insist on knowing, also, what they are doing with the purchased plants, duplicating and triplicating that which sufficed prior to the big deal, before we submit to the saddling upon us of the monopoly's "present cost."

Already the inquiry has borne some fruit. The trust has admitted that it purveys practically no coal gas, selling instead a "water gas" which it confesses is 23 per cent carbon monoxide. In a word, it pleads guilty to the charge that it is responsible for a death role that grows appallingly. With all the sang froid of a highwayman caught in the act, it admits, also, that when citizens—it calls them "kickers"—have complained about poor light, it has so arranged an increase of pressure as to hoist the bills 20 per cent.

Here is a chance for a Board of Supervisors in which a community too-often deceived has still some confidence—a chance to put itself brilliantly on record as opposed to corporate greed in its most outrageous form. After that will come the trust's appeal to the courts, and then months of delay, while the monopoly goes on plundering those of its victims who escape its deadly carbon monoxide. Biding its time, however, the public will bear in mind that it has learned how to issue bonds, and that it has an expert's word for it that for $1,000,000 it can have its own lighting plant.

CIVIL SERVICE IN THE POLICE DEPARTMENT.

It is not saying too much in praise of civil service to note that already it has worked a distinct improvement in our police department. It is to be observed that the newcomers on the force are, in appearance, at least, superior to the passing generation of patrolmen—cleaner-cut, more alert, more intelligent. Under the old system of "pull" and petty politics, this department was the asylum of middle-aged ineptitude and laziness. Its favorite type was thick-fingered, thick-witted, paunchy, short of wind and illiterate to an unbelievable degree. Reasonable physical tests and competitive mental examinations have eliminated that class of applicants, and the merit system applied to promotion will mean shortly the predominance of only the fittest among the old-timers.

But, apparently, it will be some time before we have a detective department with intelligence enough to make it anything but a grim joke on the taxpayers who support it. This will probably be the last place to be touched by the rule of physical and mental fitness. As it is constituted now, this branch of the public service, which should represent the best the police department has of brains, resourcefulness and experience, is a Bureau of Incompetence. A certain low order of cunning it may boast, a certain familiarity with the ways of "crooked" people, but notoriously it cannot make even a pretense of unraveling the mysterious or of matching wits with any but the least shrewd of criminals. Judged by results, the detective department of the city, with all its authority, resources and records, is far less effective in the ferreting out of crime than any modern newspaper office, working without system or authority in such matters, employing men generally young and inexperienced.

For proof of the statement, which comes from bad citizens as well as good, that the police are always twenty-four hours behind the press, one needs only to turn to any one of the important criminal affairs of recent years. Most of us will recall with readiness how practically all the evidence on which Durrant went to the scaffold was obtained first by the newspapers. The mystery that lay thick about the death of hapless little Nora Fuller would be mystery still if it had been left to the detectives to solve. Still before the public is the case of Soeder, charged with the killing of his brother-in-law. This man has been held for trial after an examination at whose close a police judge swept aside the bulk of the police testimony as valueless, and declared that the evidence of certain witnesses alone would justify him in sending the defendant to the trial court. These certain witnesses were those brought forward by the newspapers.

Argument is not necessary to convince the thinking mind that such matters, involving the lives of human beings, are not the business of newspapers or newspaper reporters. These agencies are inherently irresponsible, always liable to perversion. They should have no part in the detection of criminals and the doing of justice. They could have no such part under an efficient police administration at the center of which must be an intelligent and skillful bureau of inquiry, call its agents what you please. The quality of brains in the present detective department is obviously poor, and it has not been improved by a long course of pickling in whiskey.

It was only necessary that a most deplorable accident should occur to point a moral to the tale the News Letter has been telling for weeks to focus public attention on the matter of elevator inspection. The Colonial Hotel, in this city, at the corner of Pine and Jones streets, was the scene of a terrible mangling and death of a poor human being; the direct result of the criminal negligence of our city officials. William Hill, a worthy young man and an employee of an express company, was busily engaged removing a trunk, when without any apparent reason the elevator shot up, and the unfortunate expressman's brains bespattered the car. Proper inspection would have prevented this terrible accident. Another human being has been sacrificed to the negligence, the culpable carelessness, of our city authorities. It is understood that an investigation is being made, and it is hoped the investigators will make a suggestion that a municipal inspector be appointed immediately.

TO PROMOTE TRADE WITH MANILA.

Congress is preparing to deal with a condition of very considerable moment to the commerce of ports on the Pacific Coast. This is the question of extending, under certain modifications, the United States navigation laws to the Philippine archipelago. It is contended that to bring the Philippines within the full operation of the navigation laws and compel all their commerce with this country to be carried in American bottoms would be to destroy important industries that have grown up between this country and the islands since they became part of the national domain. The most important of these is the trade in Manila hemp, which, under the rebate of the export duty—equal to 35 cents per 100 pounds—on hemp destined for the United States, has increased enormously in the past five years. A glance at the figures of this trade in that period will demonstrate this condition. The following figures were submitted to Congress by Representative Morrell of Pennsylvania:

1899	$6,666,886
1900	11,398,943
1901	14,453,110
1902	15,841,316
1903	21,701,575

During the same years the hemp exports to the United States have been:

1899	$2,492,274
1900	3,446,141
1901	2,402,867
1902	7,261,459
1903	12,314,312

At the same time the importations of hemp into the United States from other countries have decreased as follows:

1899	$2,817,137
1900	2,147,598
1901	2,870,812
1902	4,236,802
1903	982,837

This trade is all carried in foreign bottoms, and is chiefly done between Atlantic Coast ports and Manila. There are at present no American ships available for this commerce.

The policy of this country has always been to encourage the growth of American shipping, and this is the line that Congress is likely to take. At the same time precautions will be taken to prevent the destruction of an important and growing industry. With these objects in view, Representative Morrell is preparing a bill that provides for a rebate of 15 per cent of existing duties on all goods transported to the United States from the Philippines in American bottoms and that on all goods carrying no duty or a duty of 10 per cent or less ad valorem there shall be levied a discriminating duty of 10 per cent if such goods are not carried in ships of American register. It is obvious that a measure of this character offers inducements that must operate in favor of commerce with the Pacific Coast. The measure proposed by Mr. Morrell likewise provides that all vessels of foreign nationality carrying passengers from the islands to the United States shall be subject to a tax of ten per cent on passenger fares.

The present law, which makes no restrictions in favor of American shipping, expires by limitation on July 1st. If in the meantime Congress shall adopt some such measure as that proposed by Mr. Morrell, there is every probability of the establishment of a steamship line carrying passengers and freight direct between San Francisco and Manila.

THE HARVEST OF A WIDE-OPEN TOWN.

The natural and logical corollary of a wide-open town is demonstrated in the object lesson furnished by the robbery with violence of the Colonial Club. This place is not a club in the usual sense, but simply a gambling hell frequented by race-track habits and the customary fringe of touts and vagrants that prey on the unwary.

Some of these latter gentry appear to have conceived the idea that the Colonial Club was an easy place to hold up, and it appears their conclusion was well founded. Although well-known to the police as a gambling den, the patrolmen on duty pass it by on their blind side. Whatever happens there, they take no notice, and they would never think of intruding on the privacy of such a club.

There are, as a matter of fact, half a dozen other such "clubs" in full operation on the tenderloin. The police know them, but the administration of Mayor Schmitz is probably under obligations to the gamblers, and the patrolmen will not molest them without orders.

No Government can encourage one form of crime and expect to confine it within the limits of that particular form of vice. If you take down the bars for the gamblers, murder and robbery will surely follow in their train. They discovered that in Seattle some time ago. San Francisco is now in a fair way to reap the criminal harvest that inevitably follows the conduct of a wide-open town.

AN ENTERPRISING MAGAZINE.

Thirty days ahead of the daily press the Overland Monthly published the names, armament, torpedo equipment, tonnage, speed and number of men of all available Russian and Japanese vessels in Asiatic waters. The February number of this fine old magazine contained a full account. There are a few copies still to be had at news-stands.

A Baltimore fire incident was the affecting scene when the employees of a burning bank kissed its granite pillars good-bye—so much for the sentimental South.

New York complains of gas so poor that after dark the careful house-holder asks his wife for a grip and password to make sure that he has not got into the wrong flat.

A cross-eyed city administration in New York has chosen this time of flattened wallets to chase the money-lenders off the Island of Manhattan.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 8

Editor News Letter—I have been quite amused during the later few rainy days in noting the absence from the streets of what you folks call your carriages. It seems to me that the owners are afraid of having the varnish washed off their cabs, or it may be that the owners thereof are afraid of the identity of their filched monograms or their forebears, being disclosed by their being subjected to a washing with a little clean rain. Anyway, the San Francisco family turn-outs are kept in the carriage house in wet weather, according to my observations. Your better class of men here, I note in nasty weather, have the crudest ideas in regard to storm attire. I see the clarks and working men wearing all kinds of funny coloured storm coats. Checked things and coats of abominably noisy colours. It really can't be done by a man who desires to do things in good form. These tweedy-looking affairs called rubber-lined in your stores, and the Cravenette things, are simply impossible to a man who is a correct dresser. Let me tell you. An eight or ten ounce English silk mackintosh, cream white in color, Albert cut (down to the ankles), a deer stalker hat of color to match the mackintosh, a pair of castor gloves, a heavy-soled English-made pair of laced walking boots, well treed and boned, trowsers turned up at the bottom, and there you have it. Good form for either walk, drive or covert, if afoot. These mackintoshes can be had for five or six guineas, and they are so light that a chap can carry them in his pocket, and $30 or $40 is in reach of any gentleman. You know that your fellows don't really seem to know how to shoe themselves for stormy weather—you seem scared of the wet, and you wear goloshes. These things make one's feet look like monstrosities, and give you coughs and colds, and among persons of pretensions are unpermissible. No wonder when your belles of the Coast see you accoutered like you are they prefer to go abroad and marry a well dressed and well bred Englishman. It shows their good taste, even if sometimes they do pay for their enjoyment. Goloshes are as much a part of a gentleman's wardrobe as are pattens. I am also annoyed by the manner in which you chaps carry your umbrellas. You let them flop around and turn itself inside out in the wind; you poke people in the face and stomach with its ferule, and finally and worst of all, you carry it, dripping water all over the steps and halls of every building or apartment you enter. Now, an umbrella to a well-bred and properly-clad man is useless. He does not need one. It is a nuisance of the worst kind. There is always a place to hang your mackintosh without ruining the floor, but San Francisco nor London furnishings, outside of the establishment that maintain a hall man, make no providing for a nasty wet umbrella. With a lady, of course, you need one, only to save her, and in the name of gallantry you can flood rugs and polished hall floors ad nauseam if the hostess does not call the footman to eject you. Without a lady, carry your umbrella closely rolled; let it be of silk, and it takes the place of a stick in your storm dressing. Don't, in the name of all that is correct, extend it to shelter yourself. Your wear should do that. I really desire to give you men another hint, I think your behavior when acting as escort to a lady is not proper. I note the gentlewomen here permit you to grasp their arms—to almost lift them into the carriage. You presume on their good nature or your relations less. A gentleman always offers a lady his arm and assists her into the carriage or elsewhere by just touching her hand. You chaps here assume an air of possession over the lady who has favored you with her company. This is permissible only in the happening that you are escorting the one woman who is other than wife, near relative or fiancée. The attentions given to the sweeter sex by your men here, as a general thing, savor too much to me of a relationship that is not disclosed to the public or a caress. Both are objectionable. The one thing the well-bred gentleman hides, and the other thing he reserves for privacy. Gentlemen owe to gentlewomen in public the utmost deference, the most formal courtesy, and the greatest care that no act on their part shall be susceptible of the slightest misconstruction or wrong comment. The honor of a woman is builded by a life time, and I know where life times have been wrecked by some cad who, owing to his lack of what was good form, compromised the lady who was foolish enough to be seen with him. Really, good form is doing the right thing in the right place at the right time. We gentlemen chaps can take care of ourselves among ourselves, but my lady mother and my teachers taught that it was the hall mark of a well-bred man to always take care of the lady. I learned this, and learned it hard, or I would not be signing this Japan's Rapid Pace. Nothing has surprised and astonished the world so much in recent years as Japan's perfect preparedness for war and the rapid pace in executing her plans of both attack and defense. Her army is like a flying column, and her warships sail hither and yon, and both striking fatal blows upon the Russian front with almost mathematical precision. The Russians are dazed and bewildered, and the other nations amazed at the thoroughness of the "little brown people's" plan of campaign, and the whirlwind like swiftness of its unfordment by land and by sea. From the initial shot Japan's war establishment has moved directly upon the objective point with a degree of audacity that only perfect confidence in its own prowess could engender. And it can be said that the gage of battle was announced to Russia with so much vehemence and self-confidence that the Bear has not yet recovered from the shock. Japan's first broadside gained her the admiration of the world, and the right to full membership in the family of nations. But the game is not yet finished. The staying qualities of Japan are yet to be tried, though the indications are that they will grow in strength and determination as new demands are made upon her spirit of sacrifice.

Nearing the Firing Line. But however furious and self-confident the armed hosts of Japan may be sweeping away Russian resistance, the fact still remains that several of the spectator nations are getting dangerously close to the firing line, notwithstanding their proclamations of neutrality. Before a shot was fired the News Letter pointed out how it would be almost impossible for certain outside nations to help becoming involved, if war ensued, through their commercial interests, and already signs may be seen in the United States and Great Britain of hasty preparations for eventualities. And what is intensifying the strain is that complications have arisen that involve contradictory views of national integrity and honesty of purpose. There is too much open expression of sympathy with Japan and too much rejoicing over Japanese victories in the United States and England to please Russia. And there are too many experienced officers of the American navy on board Japanese warships, and Great Britain is winking too loud at Japan to use her harbors in her Chinese territory as a base of naval operations for Russia to place much faith in the sincerity of the neutrality of the Anglo-Saxons. It is a little spark as yet, but it is capable of starting a great fire, especially that it is being housed by willing tinder. Then, again, a Japanese ambassador to a European court made the diplomatic mistake early this week, while "feeling good" over his country's victims, of publicly saying that Great Britain, and the United States, by inference, were Japan's passive allies, but were prepared to become very active allies if occasion should require. This foolish utterance has angered Russia greatly, so much so that the Russian Viceroy in the Far East has already refused to recognize certain United States Consulates. To put it in plain words, the St. Petersburg Government believes that the United States and England are hunting for an excuse to blend their battle-flags with those of Japan on promises of great commercial and industrial advantages in Korea and Manchuria, which two countries, it is already settled, will become a part of the Japanese Empire in the event of Russia's defeat. It may be observed in this connection that the Czar's surmises as to the Anglo-Saxons are not altogether of the imagination. Practically all the people of the United States are openly and generally vehemently patting Japan on the back, metaphorically speaking, and this, too, angers the autocrat of Russia. These complications are very volcanic in their nature.

Other Serious Complications. What game France is trying to play no mortal could tell. Certain officials of State are demanding that the ties which have bound that nation and Russia in close bonds of friendship for so many years be broken without ceremony. They claim that the Czar has played France for a fool long enough, and now that the point has been reached where France is asked to pull the Bear's chestnuts out of the fire, it is time for dissolution and annulment of the rapprochement. Another faction of French State officials want the nation's war establishment put in complete preparedness to strike England a terrific blow in the event of her being involved in the Russo-Japanese war. But all France is agreed that if there is to be a cutting up of China, the Paris Government must be there prepared to demand and take a big slice. Thus is France trying her best to mix in all along the line. German influence is busy urging French statesmen to go back on Russia. It is to Germany's interest to weaken France by complications at this time, for Frenchmen of all walks are hoping that the Russo-Japanese war may involve Germany so much that Alsace and Lorraine will be easy to retake.

Further Dangerous Complications. While China is assuming a policy of strict neutrality, it is very clear that there is an understanding with Japan to the latter's liking. This is seen in the admission of the Peking Government that so angry are Chinamen everywhere at Russia's brutal and murderous treatment of their fellow countrymen when the Bear was taking possession of Manchuria that the authorities are utterly powerless to restrain them in their purpose to aid Japan. The consequence is, thousands of Chinamen, of the worst class generally, are flocking to the front to seek revenge for Russian barbarities, but they go as "irregulars," and we all know that that means a great mob of irresponsible cut-throats playing upon the Russian flanks and destroying Russian towns and settlements. Still it will help Japan. Of course Russia understands the game of treachery China is playing, and she will have to take cognizance of it by adopting retaliatory measures by invading China, but in doing that she will run square up against Secretary Hay's pronouncement that neither one of the belligerents shall enter Chinese territory for any purpose.

Still Other Complications. The prediction of the News Letter that the Balkan States and Turkey would take advantage of Russia's engagements in the Far East to settle their difficulties has materialized a little ahead of time. The Sultan has already invaded Bulgaria with the advance guard of a large army that is to follow immediately. But as the Sublime

Port has intimated it to be his purpose to extend the Ottoman Empire in Europe by conquering the European Near East, he is likely to find every civilized nation willing and ready to send a contingent of soldiers, who would act in harmony against him. It is one thing, he is likely to ascertain, to thrash the Bulgarians for offenses, but quite another thing to extend his vile and monstrous system of government over Christian lands in Europe.

A Small Complication. In his rage, or during a fit of insanity, the Czar issued a proclamation a few days ago extending his jurisdiction over Thibet. For years the suzerainty of the Empire of China over Thibet has been recognized by all the nations, and at this minute British soldiers are camped in Thibet, by the consent of the Peking Government, for the purpose of eventually changing the suzerainty from the Emperor of China to the King of England. Evidently the Czar meant his proclamation of suzerainty as a notice to King Edward to countermarch his soldiers out of Thibet. Of course, King Edward will reply by augmenting the strength of the garrison already located there.

THE DUKE OF NORFOLK'S WEDDING.

It is to be hoped that the luck of the Premier Duke of England will change with his wedding. Of all men his is one of the most pathetic of modern figures. The representative of one of the greatest and oldest families in the modern world, for the "blood of all the Howards" is proverbial, a most estimable gentleman, kind and benevolent, and filled with a passion for civic duty although politics are distasteful to him, he has by a curious and inexplicable decree of Providence been compelled to suffer to an extent that falls to the lot of few men. He had but one child heir to the Dukedom, and that child so painfully afflicted that death came as a merciful release. His wife died. At an age when most men would have considered their services to the State at an end, and that they were entitled to pass the remainder of their days in well-earned leisure, he equipped a force at his own expense, and led them to war in South Africa, where he met with a painful accident which laid him up for a considerable time. He is the best representative of that old English Catholicism which has suffered so much, and which, by reason of its steadfastness, has a great hold upon the sympathies and respect of Protestant England.

His beautiful wife, the Honorable Gwendolen Mary Maxwell, is the daughter of Lord Herres, who belongs to an ancient and devoted Catholic family which has suffered much for its devotion to principle and faith, and has always been found fighting for ideals rendered obsolete by the transition of time and the change in sentiment.

There is something very old-world, yet charming, about this marriage, and the greatest enemies of the old British aristocracy cannot but have the best wishes for the happiness and prosperity of the pair.

THREE STALWARTS GONE.

The past week has been of note as recording the passing of many stalwart figures in national as well as local history. Senator Hanna's taking off is a distinct loss to the nation, and the full effect of his demise will not come until his counsel is needed in the deliberations of the Republican party. He was one of the few men, who make history, who was able to live down in a very few years the calumnies of a yellow press. No one man was ever more persistently calumnated, caricatured and cruelly lied about than Marcus Alonzo Hanna. And yet he died holding the respect of all men, and most of all, the laboring element. The labor leaders of the East, the Americans among them, had come to look upon Senator Hanna as their best friend when in difficulty.

Hayward Crosses the Divide.

Alvinza Hayward is dead, and with his passing California has lost one of its best practical miners and representative mining men. He was endowed with a spirit of enterprise which failure never seemed to daunt, and an indomitable will power which carried him over all difficulties. There are very few men of his class left in the State, and the younger generation of men will do well if they only aspire to emulate the example of the old regime to which Hayward belongs in their methods and practical knowledge of how to open up a mine and carry on work underground. Mr. Hayward has left a number of friends who have been attached to him for nearly a life time, and who will deeply regret his rather unexpected demise. He was a native of Vermont, 82 years of age. He came to California in 1850, and has seldom been out of the State since then, devoting all his time and energy to the developing of the industrial interests with which he was connected. He left a large fortune behind him in real and personal property.

W. W. Foote, bon vivant, and general all-around good fellow, is also gone. He died at the home of J. V. Coleman. Foote was, as a lawyer and man, an ornament to the community in which he lived. He came from a stock of gentlemen born, and with him it was always a case of "noblesse oblige." His was a rugged personality, and he was possessed of a keen sense of what should constitute rectitude in life. Some years ago he announced that he should never again take a criminal case. He could not reconcile himself to defending one he suspected of guilt, and he had suffered tortures at having freed men he thought guilty from the toils of the law.

He said to a friend: "I shall never again undertake the defense of a criminal. There is only one contingency that will tempt me, and that is the defense of a friend or of some poor devil who may have unwittingly committed a crime." Those who remember the brilliant future Foote had before him as a criminal lawyer will realize the prize he lost when he gave up criminal practice. It is only an instance of the great force of character in the man.

We who are of a younger generation, and who will not have the opportunities to try us as by fire that was birthright of these three men, men of iron and red blood, may well wonder whether there is among us the material to take the place of departing stalwarts.

The Library Table

Irish Fiction and Poetry.

Mr. Yeats has started the ball to clear the ground for the Celtic Renaissance, and now comes Lady Gregory and Mr. Krans to give it further impetus. Mr. Krans, in his essay of 335 pages makes an exhaustive survey of Irish fiction up to the middle of the last century. The volume is one of the Studies in Comparative Literature issued under the auspices of Columbia University.

Lady Gregory gives the English reader a chance to estimate the poetic activity of the nineteenth century Celt by translating the poems of the blind bard Rafferty, who died about sixty years ago. In addition, Lady Gregory gives translations of ballads that she collected on the Arran Island off the coast of Galway.

The future of the Gaelic revival in the history of the literature of this century depends on the answer to this question: Will the Irish-speaking Celts ever produce poets who will transform these exquisite phrases, these half-articulate yearnings, into lyrics that will make it necessary for the Anglo-Saxon to learn Irish as he must now learn Greek in order not to miss some of the finest poetry in the world?

"Irish Life in Irish Fiction." By Horatio Sheafe Krans, New York. The Macmillan Co. The Columbia University Press.

"Poets and Dreamers." Studies and Translations from the Irish. By Lady Gregory, New York. Chas. Scribner's Sons.

The Ambassadors.

James's books have been likened to a Persian carpet—which appears to be a formless mixture of lines and colors—until standing at the right angle and in the right light one perceives the figure running through the whole design. In his latest work, James has added a new tint to this figure. This time it is the effect of European life upon the standard of thought and conduct of a group of Americans. First upon Chad Newsome, then upon Shetter, and only the fixed Puritan scruffles of Sarah Pocock enabled her to sweep the cobwebs from their eyes, and make them see the irreconcilable difference between Woolett and Paris.

"The Ambassadors," by Henry James. Harper & Brothers, Publishers.

"The O'Ruddy."

Mr. Robert Barr has just completed an unfinished novel of Stephen Crane. It is understood that after a considerable part of this story was written, Mr. Crane went over his plans for the rest with Mr. Barr; consequently there is a degree of consistency in style and plot. "The O'Ruddy" is the story of an audacious Irishman who goes to England with certain documents which involve the ownership of a great English estate. He becomes involved in a feud with the family; the papers are stolen and returned to him; he gives them to the daughter, but they are mysteriously returned to him. He wins renown as a swordsman, and caps his career by seizing the castle over which there is dispute, and finally compromises by marrying the heroine. It is a lively tale, well worth the reading.

"The O'Ruddy," by Stephen Crane and Robert Barr. Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York, publishers.

The International Studio for February opens with an article on the paintings and etchings of Sir Chas.

Holroyd by A. L. Baldry, with a number of beautiful reproductions in color and black and white, both of the artist's figure drawing, etching and landscape painting. There are few modern artists more individual and less conventional than Sir Charles Holroyd, at the same time showing themselves the product of scholarly and well-trained intelligence. A subject that will be of great interest to Americans will be that treated by Professor Hans W. Singer, entitled, "Recent German Lithographs in Colors," with illustrations which are of a beauty to which only a magazine of the Studio's pictorial quality can attain. An interesting study of the French Pastellists of the 18th Century is contributed by Armand Dayot. There is something specially attractive about the consideration of a school of Pastellists when one remembers the fragility of this particular field of art, and the consequent brevity of existence of its sparkling masterpieces. Mr. A. S. Levetus publishes an interesting article on Modern Austrian Wicker Furniture, than which nothing could be more delightful for American summer homes, being both cool and artistic, and in keeping with their luxurious rusticity.

"The World's Almanac for 1904," issued by the Press Publishing Co., New York, is the most complete almanac and encyclopedia published. The 1904 number is an officially compiled guide to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and is a valuable reference book for business and professional men. Sent by mail for 35 cents.

"Who's Who in America" is a valuable book for those who are interested in the men and women of the United States, whose position or achievements make his or her personality of general interest. It tells the things every intelligent person wants to know about those who are most conspicuous in every walk of life. The present edition contains about 4,000 new names, making a total of 14,443 names. Published by A. N. Marquis & Co., Chicago. Price, $3.50.

In the latest volume of the American Sportsman's Library, Mr. Graham tells us that the regular breeds of sporting dogs are British, and all others rubbish. The American dog, however, becomes faster, brighter and more enduring than his English brother, showing the effect of environment and conditions—for Americans will forgive all defects in their dogs except the "inability to stand the pace."

"The Sporting Dog," by Joseph A. Graham. Macmillan Co., Publishers.

The February number of "For California," the monthly publication of the California Promotion Committee, contains some interesting statistics upon the growth of the State, showing that California has developed more rapidly since the census of 1900 than in the previous decade. The estimates of the committee are based upon the returns from the County Clerks of the various counties and from other reliable sources.

"Agnosticism" is a little book written in a charmingly simple style, and is among the best of Mr. Dole's books. Published by James H. West Company, Boston. Price, postpaid, in cloth, 30 cents; in paper, 12 cents.

Society

Dear Bessie—It was quite the correct thing to attend the Mardi Gras this year, and I had what a young English friend insists all Americans describe as "a real tall time." But do not for a moment think I am going to give you a description of it. I was never very good at that sort of thing, but I can say that the decorations were beautiful, pale gold and violet the color scheme of all four rooms, with red and yellow lights—how I wish you could have seen them! There were canopies, festoons of evergreens, red and yellow lanterns, and the yellow lanterns and the boxes were hung with Oriental draperies and huge red poppies. Of course, Ed. Greenway was boss of the floor arrangements, and was very much in his element. There was no Carnival Queen nor regular Canival King, such as there used to be, but instead the grand march was headed by an Egyptian pageant with Newton Tharp as a king of the Pharaoh period, and Isis, the Egyptian goddess, personated by a pretty girl from Los Angeles named Goodrich, born on a platform by six priests, surrounded by maids in waiting and other attendants. Prominent among those in costume were: Mrs. Peter as Cleopatra; Ethel Hager as a danseuse; Olga Atherton as Dolly Varden; Jane Sweigert as Columbia; Mrs. Frank Carolan as an Egyptian; Julia Buckbee as an old English countrywoman; Mrs. Rudolph Spreckels as a Colonial Dame; Maye Colburne as a dancing girl; Mrs. Monte Wilson as a Dutch girl; Helen de Young as a Dresden shepherdess; Pearl Landers as a Scotch girl; Mrs. Jack Spreckels as a Russian peasant; Elsie Sperry as a pool table; Grace Spreckels as a devil.

Of course there were heaps of other pretty costumes, but I have no space to enumerate them all, and this will give you an idea at least of what a pretty sight it must have been once the ball got well started.

We had a glorious time at the last of the Greenway dances, and extra efforts were made to have it the success of the season. The decorations were excellent, and such heaps of American beauty roses everywhere, while the supper was way up, of course. Mrs. Peter wore lavender this time, with the inevitable spangles which seem to be a part of all her ball gowns, and Hannah Hobart, who was seen for the first time since her return, looked lovely in white satin and pearls. Most of the girls wore white, and among those who preferred colors were Celia Tobin, Christine Pomeroy, Bessie Mills, Lucy King and Susie Blanding in pink; Gertrude Dutton and Genevieve King in yellow, and Gertrude Smith and Helen de Young, who wore red. There were a lot of dinners prior to the dance, but all seem to think that Mrs. Joe Grant carried off the palm. Mrs. Tim Hopkins gave a St. Valentine luncheon at the Palace on Saturday to a lot of the buds; it was very pretty, pink roses, pink lights and pink hearts being a combination hard to beat. Mrs. Oscar Sewell also gave a luncheon at the Palace that day, and Elsie Gregory had fourteen at her pink luncheon; while both Mrs. Runyon and Mrs. Maurice Casey had fifty guests at their seven-handed euchre parties that afternoon. St. Valentine has been highly honored this year, so many entertainments being named for the little God of Love. Helen Pettigrew called her tea a St. Valentine, and really it best deserved the title, for it was given on Sunday, and was very jolly, and on Monday there were a lot more bearing that name.

The damp weather did not appear to have much effect upon the size of the gatherings at either Mrs. Will Tevis's bridge party, which she gave on Monday for Millie Ashe Sewell, nor the luncheons at the University Club, given by Mrs. Andrew Welch for Florence Callaghan, and by Mrs. Drysdale for a lot of the season's buds; her table decorations, which were Valentine in character, were extremely pretty. Mrs. Greyson Dutton's seven-handed euchre party at the St. Dunstan on Monday was very pleasant. I asked Marjory if she did not have something intensely interesting to confide; she blushed very prettily and looked conscious, but said nothing. The Gaiety Club had its last dance on Monday night (and oh, how it did rain), at Margaret Newhall's, as Frances Allen was not yet equal to the excitement of having it there, and Lucy told me it was likely they would have another dance after Lent.

Tuesday was a great one for weddings—three of them, no less—and all of them at high noon. The one which came as rather a surprise, for it was not expected until after Easter at earliest, was that of Helen Walker Tay and Judge Henshaw, which took place at the Walker home on Broadway, where Judge McFarland tied the nuptial knot. It was a very quiet affair, with only just relatives at the ceremony, and the wedding breakfast, which followed it. In decided contrast to this was the wedding of Elsa Cook and "Teddy" Greenfield, as his friends usually call him, which came off at St. Stephen's Church on Fulton street, where the Rector, the Rev. E. Bradley, performed the ceremony. The church was very prettily decorated in green and white; Helen Cook, who was her sister's maid of honor, Quita Kerby and Bessie Gowan, the bridesmaids, wore gowns of white chiffon cloth and white lace hats trimmed with green leaves. Elsa's gown was of white crepe and lace, and Louis Beedy was best man. The third wedding was that of Kitty DuVal and Oliver Dibble at St. Mary's Cathedral, where Father Prendegast officiated.

There were no fuss or feathers here either, no attendants, only a few relatives present at the ceremony, and Kitty wore a pretty brown cloth costume with a hat to match, and looked the very picture of happiness. Between luncheons and weddings almost every one was kept on the move. Among the former were Mrs. Lansing's luncheon at the University Club for Frances Harris; Mrs. George Boardman's, which she gave at home, as did also Mrs. Frank Sullivan, with Mrs. Peter for chief guest, and Mrs. Bailey Norris, whose luncheon was for Miss Herrick, who is here on a visit to the Homer Kings. Beatrice Fife's tea in the afternoon was quite a pretty affair, though the girls did not exert themselves to any great degree, afraid of tiring themselves for the evening, I daresay.

Margaret Burnett, who at last formally announced a few days ago her engagement to Fritz Jewel, which had been suspected for some time, was very quietly married at St. Brigid's Church on Monday; only the family were present at the ceremony, which was performed by Father Wyman, so you see quiet weddings have been the rule of late, and after all is it not the better way?

Henry W. Bradley, of the well-known law firm of Bradley and McKinstry, and Miss Leonora Beatrice Cusick were married on Wednesday afternoon, the 10th inst., at the Church of the Advent by the Rev. Chas. N. Lathrop. The groom is the eldest son of the late H. W. Bradley, of the old photographic firm of Bradley & Rulofson. He was supported by his brother Giles, and the bride by her sister Mary. The bride is a daughter of Mr. John Cusick, and an old-time and intimate friend of Harry T. Creswell.

Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield Baker of San Francisco were guests at Del Monte last week. Miss Frances Carroll, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Holland and Mr. Robert Heyneman were also noted as having enjoyed the hospitality of that famous hostelry.

Monterey is seeing large crowds of the socially elect on the occasion of the California Polo and Pony Racing Association. About three hundred people went down from San Francisco for the opening meet and these were augmented by the regular guests and citizens from Monterey and the officers from the Presidio. Tom Driscoll's team—the Whites—as they are known—carried off the first match in the Polo contest. The "White" team is composed of such crack players as Walter Hobart, Mr. Lawson, Mr. Garland and Mr. Driscoll. The track is said to be in prime condition. On Friday, Saturday and Sunday of next week the same ponies and the same players will participate at the Burlingame meet. Special trains will be run and every accommodation secured for those who attend, and all indications point to as successful affair as that held at Del Monte. Late trains will bring San Francisco people home at a reasonable hour.

The California Camera Club of San Francisco will give a snow outing to the Sierras at Truckee and Donner Lake, Saturday, 20th, 6 p. m., to Monday, February 22d, 6 p. m. There certainly can be no more delightful sport at this time of year than a day spent amid the snow. A special Pullman car will be chartered for the occasion. The fare, including Pullman sleeper, will be $12.50. The Sierras have had an unusually heavy snow fall during the late storm, and this outing promises to be a grand trip.

Tickets may be procured from H. B. Hosmer, 538 Market street, or Miss Voy, at the club.

The next board meeting of the California International Sunshine Society will be held at the home of the State President, 1622 Clay street, on Thursday morning, February 18th, at eleven o'clock. Besides the reading of reports and letters from various parts of the country, the subject will be discussed as to the advisability of obtaining a room or rooms for public headquarters. The rapid growth of the work demands such a place if funds can be obtained. Miss Cecile Rogers, who has just been appointed to the office of corresponding secretary, has just returned from an absence of five years spent at Leipsic. Miss Meta Stofen, who is now the recording secretary of the board, is the business secretary of the Alden Club, and one of the most enthusiastic workers in Sunshine.

Mr. and Mrs. John McCormack have announced the marriage of their daughter, Genevieve Claire, to Mr. John F. Sullivan, on Monday, February 15, 1904. The newly married couple will be at home Tuesdays after March 1st, at El Monterey, 1224 Pine street.

A RUN ON THE BANKS IN THIS CITY.

For the last few days there has been a run on the banks, which puzzled bankers. It looked like the uncalled for run they had on the Oakland Bank. By looking into the matter, the bankers found out that the public has been drawing rather heavy to buy Furniture and Carpets at the big RETIRING SALE of PATTOSIEN COMPANY. The depositors claim they can now make more money by buying carpets and furniture at the SALE than they can save on interest in five years.

The appetizing things that come from the broiler at Moraghan's Grill, in the California Market, are responsible for the crowd that goes there for luncheon. It has become a regular business men's exchange. The quality of the chops, steaks, oysters and game served cannot be surpassed. More than that, the wants of the guests are attended to by perfectly trained waiters.

When you get your fall clothing made, also make arrangements to have it cleaned and pressed regularly at Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street. It is economy to do it. A suit will last twice as long if well cared for. They also clean gloves, neckties, curtains, laces, draperies and all such articles.

German method. Thoroughly taught. Reasonable, Mrs. M. G. Durette, 323 Ellis Street, Here's an episode in rhyme,

 (Most appropriate to our time),
 Of an Oakland judge that's somewhat of an ass,
 With a criminal before him,
 Said the judge as he looked o'er him,
 "You're a member of the law-abiding class."

Well, not exactly that;
 But he said right plain and pat
 He was not of those called "criminal" by name,
 But he doubtless stole the money,
 And his moral code was funny.
 So he sent him to San Quentin just the same.

More breach of trust and embezzlement: This time a man whose natural strength of character has led to his promotion to a good position in the business world and a captaincy in the National Guard. Much pity will be wasted on Ballinger, but the time has come when these constant breaches of trust are a menace to the stability of business life and an unmistakable detriment to public morals. There is something very rotten somewhere. Of course, the first instinct is to cry out for severe punishment upon the offenders, and they should be severely punished, but will that stop the condition of things? Suppose McKowen had got the ten years which the law imposes in such cases, would it have been any real deterrent to others? It is true that seven years, really not five, appears a ridiculously small penalty, in view of the enormity of the offense, but would the additional years have done any real good? The fact is, we have lost our heads in the money scramble and the dishonesty of some of our firms has its effect upon the morals of the subordinate. One Eppinger makes numbers of Ballingers.

"The pulpit, drum ecclesiastic" is being beaten again. It is wonderful how bellicose our parsons are. Here is the Reverend William Rader giving reasons why America should not favor Russia. Can we not escape politics even in church? Are our ministers of State so incapable that the ministers of religion must come to their assistance? We go to church for quiet and thoughtful contemplation of matters removed from the din and discord of the street, and are treated to an amateur discussion of international politics. Will the clergy never learn that the occupation of a pulpit is no proof of omniscience, and that such minor matters as economics, jurisprudence and diplomacy require a certain amount of specialized study?

The legal authorities in Oakland should now be satisfied, seeing that Mrs. Lindblom fainted on the stand. Inhabitants of wild and barbarous districts are inclined to torture their prisoners. The method of procedure favored by this particular tribe seems to consist in catching a female prisoner in her own bathroom, and then teasing her into unconsciousness. Incidentally, a recent occurrence in the same town shows that it is not safe to indulge in epileptic fits within the city limits, for you may be robbed. Above all things, however, it must be borne in mind that Oakland, having too many writers within its borders, local authors are forbidden the right of self-defense.

There is no such a thing as decent reticence in the daily press. We are informed with all manner of embroidered description that the miserable murderer Labrousse cries incessantly. Not a sob or sigh is spared to our gaze, our feelings are lacerated and our tranquility disturbed by the gratuitous infliction upon us of the physical infirmities of this individual. The scavenger work of society must be done, and there are officials, from the Coroner to the hangman, who are well paid to do it, but why the press should insist on unloading all the filth upon our breakfast tables is one of those incomprehensible mysteries which only the brain of a managing editor can grasp.

The co-eds. of the State University furnish a very good instance of the feminine estimation of the masculine appetite. They taxed themselves fifteen cents each for the lunch which they gave to the mere men. Suppose each co-ed. imagined that she was providing for a particular male student; otherwise there would have been no fun in the proceeding, she considered that fifteen cents represented his lurching capacity. That accounts for the worn look on the faces of the male commuters. Everybody knows that the Oaklander is obliged to turn his pockets out every evening, and life is a constant struggle between lunch and the slot machine.

The ranch swindle proposition is up again. Last week I called attention to the schemes by which young Englishmen are brought here and victimized. In face of the numerous examples, one almost feels inclined to say: "Serves them right." They cannot seem to believe that work is worth having unless they pay for it. Lots of them in Canada are paying five hundred dollars a year for the privilege of working as farm hands. For a successful people, they are remarkably slow to learn. The worst of it is that most of these young fellows are the sons of clergymen and professional men who can ill afford the money.

L. F. B. Goodrich, who embezzled a gasoline launch, appears to be rather a doer of good deeds than a criminal. The Supreme Court sententiously repeats the legal definition that embezzlement is the conversion of other people's property. If anything is in greater need of conversion than the ordinary gasoline launch, I should like to see it. It is to be hoped that the imprisoned missionary, when he comes out will not give up the good work, but will forthwith turn his attention to the gasoline motor car.

There is already some lively investment in contraband of war. Collector Stratton allows ships to clear at their own risk, and this is in accordance with the policy pursued at Vancouver. The delight consists not only in the profit but in the gambling. Many a staid old baldhead, who shudders at cards and fancies the Stock Exchange wicked, will have a try at pork, beef or flour for the war. The sport might almost tempt a Quaker, were it not for the fact that Japanese cruisers are not easy to dodge.

I notice that repeated attacks upon amateur sport are being made, and that the Olympic Club so far has been able to maintain a fair standard. Greer Harrison has about as good an idea of what constitutes sport as any man alive. Unfortunately he also has the idea that he is a judge of literature. On that proposition I side with Ambrose Bierce.

Is it not a little indecent to describe the results of Professor Loeb's experiments in fertilizing eggs as "the practical bearing of scientific theory?"

An Objection to Tourist Travers

Editor News Letter—How much longer, may I ask, do you intend to inflict the babblings of Mr. Fernauld Travers upon your patient and long-suffering readers?

Granted that there is some foundation for the criticisms he makes on our manners and methods, we do not care for this "seeing ourselves as others—especially tourists—see us" literature for our Sunday reading. Plain speech and "frankness for your own good" is a dangerous thing, but "Fools rush in"—you know; and one could hardly call Mr. Travers an "angel," could one?

If, as he persistently tells us, he is accustomed to the elegancies and refinements of life, which he does not find here, why does he not return to his native land and enjoy its "halls and ancestral homes."

Who is he, and what is he, that he should foist his personal opinions upon us? Such a stickler for good form should know that a constant use of the first personal pronoun is extremely bad form. Also, while on the point of diction, in what hall or ancestral home does one learn a servant his duties. Not being entirely unfamiliar with the aforesaid halls and homes, I can state with authority that English servants are taught, not learned. Trades-people may learn their clerks—I do not know the custom prevailing among that class.

His arrogant presumption in telling us we are all wrong, according to his ideas, would indicate England for his birthplace. It takes an Englishman to be thoroughly satisfied with all that appertains to himself, and furthermore to sit in judgment on the rest of the world not so favored as he in being born in the "tight little island."

May one inquire, if the question is not too awkward, why the gentleman remains in a city where his feelings are so constantly lacerated by our crudity of manners? How San Francisco looks to him is not at all interesting to us. Does he know of the unwritten law which makes it a breach of good manners to criticise where one has received hospitality; even if no names are mentioned?

If "beefsteak" for dinner is so unpardonable, according to Mr. Travers's ideas, he probably has never enjoyed the privilege of dining in that exclusive little place on Fleet street, down by the Strand, where a sirloin and tankard of ale is considered the thing, even for titled personages.

Bah! Mr. Tourist Travers, we've had enough of your views of San Francisco. They bore us extremely. We can dispense with your valuable society, even for six months of the year, and I am sure the benefit therefrom would be mutual.

Good-bye, Mr. Travers. I trust the editor will see to it that it is not au revoir. —Resident.

—One goes naturally to Swain's on Sutter street for a good luncheon. There is nothing in town that can compare with this place as a place of rest and refreshment after the toils of shopping. They are always ready to deliver ice-cream and pastry—always the best, and their promptness can be depended upon.

—Tesla Briquettes, the popular domestic fuel, are only $7.50 per ton; half ton $4; quarter ton $2. Full weight guaranteed. In economy, cleanliness and heat producing qualities Briquettes are superior to coal. Sold only by the Tesla Coal Company, -Jtn and Channel. Phone South 95.

—If you want to eat the best, drink the best, and be among the best people, go to Techau Tavern, which is second to no restaurant in San Francisco. It is the favorite after-the-theatre resort, and deserves its fine reputation.

Orange Judd's Opinion of Dr. Oneal.

"The editor of the Orange Judd Farmer has just received a copy of Dr. Oren Oneal's new book—24th edition—entitled "Eye Diseases Cured Without Surgery." It is printed in colors, containing new pictures of the doctor and much valuable information regarding the care of the eyes, diet, exercises, baths, etc. Dr. Oneal writes us that he will be pleased to send this book free of charge to any reader of our paper who is interested enough to write for it. A postal card will do. If you or any of your friends have any form of eye disease or trouble, the book will be interesting and a valuable aid. The doctor will also go a step further and write you a personal letter of advice, entirely free of charge, if you will write him a history of your case in your own words as you understand it. We know the doctor personally. He has been advertising in our columns for years, and we can vouch for his entire reliability. Ordinarily our guarantee would cover this point, but we wish to state for the satisfaction of any who are in doubt, that we have never had a single complaint regarding Dr. Oneal. He treats patients all over the world, and thousands of our readers have placed their cases in his hands. Of course he does not guarantee to cure all, but he always fulfills every promise, and will not take a case unless there is hope of benefiting it and he certainly does cure when others say there is no hope. Write for the book to-day. Dr. Oren Oneal, Suite 10, 52 Dearborn St., Chicago."—Orange Judd Farmer.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

COLUMBIA—Warde and James—Shakespearean roles, good.

ORPHEUM—Highly entertaining vaudeville.

CENTRAL—"Men of Jimtown" Very amusing.

TIVOLI—Johnny marches himself out this week. Great success.

GRAND—Weberfields—The goose has stopped laying.

FISCHER'S—"Roly-Poly"—Entertaining good houses.

ALCAZAR—The Charity Ball—A splendid performance.

CHUTES—The best of the year. New attractions in Zoo.

The fourth matinee of the "Paul Gerson School of Acting," at the California Theatre, was a great success. There was, as usual on such occasions, a certain amount of trepidation and hesitancy among the participants, but, on the whole, the performance, as rendered, was a highly successful and creditable one. Indeed, it may be said that some of the young aspirants for histrionic laurels displayed a talent that was superior to much of the professional ability displayed in the California for many moons.

The programme was pleasantly interspersed with music by Bonelli's orchestra and by students of the same master. The first number, as an introductory, was by the mandolin orchestra.

Following this came the comedy in one act, by William Dean Howells, "The Mouse Trap." Miss Blanche Marlin, Miss Marie Thompson, Miss Helen Harrison, Miss Maud Neil, Miss Maud Baxter and Miss Beatrice Magdalen are deserving of great praise for their conscientious work. Mr. Campbell, as portrayed by Mr. Nat Phillips, was a good piece of work.

* * *

"The Rightful Heir," one of Lord Lytton's productions, claims from the actor an extensive power in the emotional line, and was well-nigh impossible of rendering by Miss Decker and Mr. Phillips. Mr. Phillips's stature is against him, but his work is good, and was a far better conception of the character than that of Lady Beaufort, by Miss Decker. This character was entirely beyond the young lady.

Little Ruth Schwab was unfortunate enough to be cast in one of Harris' songs, "Always in the Way," and the diminutive little lady made the most of a very mawkish song.

"The Jade," by Ada Lee Bascom, was an improvement over "The Bacchante," and the stage work of the Gerson school was good throughout. The participants were: Mr. Redmond Flood, Mr. Ernest Llewellyn, Mr. Allen Stanford, Mr. Victor Ferran, Miss Gladys Gordon, Miss Anita Murray.

* * *

It was a triumph for the Alcazar Theatre to possess a company of ladies and gentlemen that could produce so good a performance of the "Charity Ball." Every member of the company had his or her part of the play letter-perfect on the first night. Marie Howe was a revelation. She carried the part of the Rector's mother to perfection. Luke Conness, as the scheming stockbroker, finally won over by the entreaties of his brother (Mr. Durkin), carried his part exceedingly well, and to Miss Frances Starr all praise is due for a splendid conception of the part of "Bess." She is a great favorite with the audience, and they are indulgent, but once away from the Alcazar she will meet with unmerciful handling by critics. She has a few mannerisms she should study hard to curb. Mr. Durkin invested the character of John Van Buren, the rector, with a repose that even Herbert Kelcey could not match. Mr. Harry Hilliard's "Alec. Robinson" was good, but was open in places to the same criticism we have indulged ourselves in before; his voice has at times a note of insincerity that jars on his audiences. Miss Belgarde had a chance to display her beautiful shoulders and an opportunity to show a very clear conception of the average New York society woman.

* * *

"Macbeth" will be given by Warde and James on Saturday night at the Columbia. As a performance and an example of fine acting, the Shakespearean revival has been a great success, but the audiences have been very light. It is to be hoped that there will be an improvement in the last days of the engagement.

* * *

"The Men of Jimtown" is a very enjoyable farce, as given at the Central, and is a relief from the dreary monotony of the preceding plays.

* * *

"Johnny" will keep right on marching at the Tivoli, as a phenomenal success, until the 20th of the Month, Monday, when "The Gypsy Baron" will be put on.

* * *

At the Grand, Weber & Fields still continue extracting the shekels of the unwary, through the charm of the superannuated Russell and the antiquated jokes of imported fat-headed men and women. The audiences are getting thinner and the receipts smaller and smaller.

* * *

"Roly Poly" goes on drawing good houses at Fischer's, and it is a credit to the discernment of the San Francisco theatre-goers that it was not necessary to hit them with a club to make them realize that the show at Fischer's is a good one.

* * *

The Kilties are coming, and they will show up at the Alhambra next week.

* * *

The Vassar girls at the Orpheum have been the meat of the show, and it is with genuine regret the people will see them go. There are two numbers on the Orpheum programme that fill me with lassitude. One is "The King of the Bowery." The King should join Murray & Mack, and get back to the Bowery as quick as the trio could jump the ties. The other offending attraction is Ziska and King. There is no good reason why they should ever have been allowed to destroy crockery which might have been put to better use.

* * *

In musical circles the farewell concert to be given at Steinway Hall by Donald DeV. Graham is the talk of the town. Society is sure to turn out and give one of its favorites a fine send-off. Lovers of music are sure to have a treat. The concert is to occur on February 27th, and those to assist Mr. Graham are Mesdames Camille D'Arville and Beauchard, with Harry Gillig, and Nathan Landsberger as the violinist. The list of partonesses ensures a magnificent array of gowns, and the success of the concert. Mr. Donald DeV. Graham goes to England for the purpose of settling some highly important family matters.

It was at a recent performance of "A Doll's House" in Brooklyn, and in a certain quarter of the theatre there was some violently persistent applause for a bit of particularly bad acting. A man turned a frowning face around to look curiously at the center of this disturbance. That center happened to be a woman, who, replying to the silent reproof, said with a snap in her voice: "Well, I guess I can applaud my own husband, can't I?"

* * *

An "all star" feature bill is announced at the Chutes this coming week, all of the acts being of a high order of merit. Ziska and King, renowned as "the magician and his valet," will make their first appearance here, as will also Tippel and Klement, novelty musical comedians, direct from New York. The Melnotte Sisters, stunning singing and dancing soubrettes, promise to create a sensation, and Irving Jones, the little colored man who writes his own songs, will appear for the last times.

* * *

There should be intense joy in the select circles that patronize the Central. There will be a real yacht operated on the front of the stage, and "The King of the Opium Ring" is sure to be a success. A steam tug, full of the handy officers of the law, will be found an interesting feature, and there will be smugglers of opium and "heathen Chinese" galore.

* * *

The Pasmores and the Brodea Ladies' Quartette will give a souvenir musicale in the Young Men's Christian Association Auditorium on Monday evening, under the auspices of the Pi Psi Sigma Club.

* * *

Thomas J. Smith, the favorite young Irish singing comedian, in his new drama, "The Game Keeper," will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House the week beginning next Monday matinee (Washington's birthday).

* * *

Lee Errol and Al Filson will present Judson Brusie's "Black Cat" at the Orpheum next week, and there is a bushel of fun promised. George Day, monologist, will convulse the audience, and there is a dearth of good things to follow.

* * *

Leahy, of the Tivoli is back again, and he promises a number of great surprises as a result of his efforts during the coming year. "Mr. Pickwick," based on Dickens' masterpiece, music by Manuel Klein, words by Charles Klein, and lyrics by Grant Stewart, will be the first of these novelties to be given. "Mr. Pickwick" will follow "The Gypsy Baron."

* * *

One of the most successful farce comedies ever written, "The Wrong Mr. Wright," by George H. Broadhurst, will have its first production at the Alcazar next week. The opening performance will be at the special matinee on Washington's birthday.

* * *

"The Rounders," the greatest success that the Casino in New York City ever experienced, will be the musical comedy to follow "Roly Poly" when that piece is taken off at Fischer's Theatre.

The attraction at the Columbia Theatre for the two weeks commencing next Monday night, February 22d, will be the famous author-actor, Denman Thompson, in his celebrated rural drama, "The Old Homestead." This is the eighteenth annual tour of the play.

Good stories drift up from the Police Courts occasionally. A practitioner told me one the other day, in which those famous jurists, Judge Joachimsen and Judge Treadwell were the moving figures. Both have now been retired to private life by a long-suffering public, but at the time of which I write Joachimsen was on the bench, and Treadwell was pleading before him in behalf of a hot-tempered and hard-fisted politician who had knocked out another man who had called him a vile name.

The testimony showed that the complainant had gone around town for two months applying to the politician every vile epithet to be found in an extensive vocabulary of cuss words.

"And when my offended client met this man," said Treadwell, "he could no longer restrain himself under this torrent of abuse. This prosecuting witness called my client a name which in this Western country can be resented only by violence. He reflected upon my client's ancestry."

"Oh, tush, tush," Joachimsen interrupted, "your client had no right to take the law into his own hands. Every citizen must respect the law. I see no good excuse for this assault."

"I should like to argue the matter," said Treadwell.

"Proceed," said the court.

"Your Honor," said Treadwell, "you are a low-down blankety-blank," and Treadwell poured forth enough violent language to warrant wholesale manslaughter.

"What's that! What's that!" Joachimsen yelled, white with rage and horror. "Mr. Bailiff, restrain that man! Put him in irons! Take him below! Never heard of such an outrage! To assault the court in this manner is infamous, sir! Infamous, sir!"

The bailiff and several policemen rushed at Treadwell, but he calmly stood his ground.

"Your Honor," he said, "I am only quoting the words used by this prosecuting witness in traducing my client. Though they were not addressed to you, even you, seated calmly upon the bench; you, a man of even judicial temperament, not given to violence—even you, I say, become indignant at hearing them, and lose your usual self-control. There seems to be, even in your mind, some provocation in these words. Was there no provocation, then, when my client was thus addressed? What did he do? He knocked down the man who had thus assailed him. It was, sir, a justifiable act, sir. You would have done the same, Your Honor. I ask the case be dismissed."

"Hum! Hum!" the Judge murmured, as he endeavored to regain a dignified composure. "Yes, there seems to have been considerable provocation. The case is dismissed."

A week later Charley Ackerman told Joachimsen that Treadwell had bet a Spanish dinner for a dozen that he would call Joachimsen a vile name in open court and the judge would not resent it.

"I paid for the dinner," said Ackerman.

But Judge Joachimsen got even—and that is another story.

Some months later, Treadwell appeared in Joachimsen's court as attorney for a man against whom the police had placed three charges, all arising out of the same set of circumstances. The testimony in the three cases was the same. Treadwell won two of the cases, and was addressing the jury in the third case. He was arguing that his client had been once in jeopardy, that it was improper to place him a third time on trial, after he had been twice acquitted on the same testimony, and that the placing of the third charge against him was malicious.

"Why, gentlemen," said Treadwell, "these three cases, as a matter of fact, are all the same cases masquerading under different names. To illustrate: If I should take a monkey, gentlemen, and dress him in children's clothes, his appearance might be somewhat changed, but he would remain a monkey, gentlemen; he would remain a monkey. To again illustrate: If His Honor, gentlemen, should remove from his head that skull cap which now adorns his dome of thought, and put on instead a tall silk hat, why, what would remain, gentlemen, what would remain?"

"Stop! Stop!" Joachimsen interrupted, "not a monkey, sir; not a monkey, sir. You are insolent, sir!"

"But you anticipate, Your Honor," Treadwell protested. "I was about to say—"

"A monkey, sir, a monkey, sir," Joachimsen shouted. "I do not anticipate. You are insolent, sir. I fine you $100 for contempt of court. Mr. Bailiff, take him away."

And Treadwell was sent below, the while the ruffled court removed the skull cap, rubbed his shining poll, and mused: "A monkey, hey. I'll show him this time. He can eat all the Spanish dinners he wants down in the city prison."

Billy Foote was the last of that group of Democratic politicians who were known some years ago as the "old Bills." Among them were Bill English, who has passed away; Warren English, Foote, Mike Tarpey, and other residents of Alameda County, who had much to do with shaping the destinies of their party in the years ago, when that party had a destiny which could be shaped. English was for a long time chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee; Foote, as Railroad Commissioner twenty years ago added much to the strength of the Democracy; Tarpey was close up "to" Uncle George Hearst, and was possessed of a forceful personality which caused things to be done when there was a possibility of accomplishment. That was all long ago, before Jim Budd came down from Stockton with the glad hand and the ability to annex a fortune, before Lane was even heard of; before McNab had come out from behind the desk at the Occidental Hotel; before that gilded political brick, Charles Wesley Reed, had scraped the mud of the prune orchard from his clothes, and discovered that, after all, he was a false alarm; it was before the Examiner, by false cues, had led the Old Guard out into the wilderness, and left the remnants of the forces that once marched behind the banners of Jefferson to the Brauharts, the Brandensteins, the Poppers, the Godchauxs and the D'Anconas.

Foote was one of the fighting men in his day. Pug-nacity was his chief characteristic. He came honestly by it, for he was a veteran of the Rebellion in his twentieth year. He never forgot the stirring days of his boyhood, and he fought to the finish.

Carter Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, had an article in an Eastern publication, recently, on municipal "four flushing," meaning thereby the manner in which City Councilmen and Supervisors deceive the public by playing to the galleries. Harrison tells of many Chicago ordinances which were never meant to be enforced, and never are enforced. The same tale might be told of our local laws. The Supervisors are just now "four flushing" in Chinatown. That place has been a plague spot for two decades, yet the Supervisors, instead of making the property owners clean it up, are spending the city's money and four flushing in the game of making the public believe they are genuine life savers. The anti-expectoration ordinance is a good thing in itself, but the Supervisors were four flushing when they passed it. So with the ordinances regulating the height of awnings, prohibiting the washing of steps or sidewalks except between certain hours, ordering that waiting horses should be tied to rings or posts, and a dozen others. Just now the popular game is baiting the gas and water companies. Just watch the leaders of the majority in the Board do their great four flushing act.

Harriet Floyd Gopchevitch was ever of an eccentric nature. Those who knew her as a girl, while astonished by her marriage to the gripman, yet said: "Well, it was characteristic of her." Hers was a brief story and a sad one. With hundreds of thousands at her command, and in her own right; with all the benefits of education and travel; with a luxurious home and the entree into good society, she fell in love with a Servian who sent his cable car daily past her house. She waited for her Milos, rode with him, listened to loving words whispered in his softest Servian as the car ran through the fog banks. Gopchevitch said he was a prince in disguise; that one of his ancestors helped the founder of the Servian monarchy to herd swine, and was ennobled after the swineherd had fought his way to the throne. His sweetheart believed the tale, and three months ago they were married. The eccentric woman was buried from the Russian cathedral last week. Gopchevitch, who was working for twenty-five cents an hour this time last year, is now, by his wife's bounty, heir to a life estate in her properties worth $2,500 a month. To her cousins and aunts she left old pistols and other curios and a few hundred dollars; to a school girl friend she bequeathed $10,000 and the Sacramento-street house, but to the cable-car Prince his loving wife left an income of $30,000 a year. The Gopchevitches are well known in the Servian colony. Ten years ago the "Prince's" older brother was in daily trouble here on account of the many feuds having their origin in the rows over the Russian cathedral. The elder Gopchevitch was a fighter, and he has left his mark on more than one of his enemies. Bozo Radovitch, the liquor dealer, knows him well.

John P. Young, of the Chronicle, is off to Europe. He has earned a long vacation. Last week, in an auction house on Sutter street, 3,000 books that he had collected during the past twenty years, were sold under the hammer. To one who has followed Young's editorials on the money question, the mass of literature on financial problems that appeared in the auction catalogue proved interesting. You know ten years ago Young was a staunch silver man, and he wrote some of the best literature published in advocacy of the white metal. But when the Republican platform came down solid on a sound money basis, he reached the conclusion, as he afterward expressed it, that he had once lapsed "under the hallucination that tampering with the money standard brings great evils in its train." Therefore, when he started on his vacation he sold his books.

It was stated in last week's News Letter that Mr. Burrell G. White accompanied the late Thomas J. Clunie to the Santa Cruz Mountains as friend and attendant. This seems to have been a mis-statement, as the following letter will explain:

"Editor News Letter—In the last number of the News Letter I am credited with a trip to the Santa Cruz Mountains in 1898 as 'friend, nurse and attendant' to my late friend, Thomas J. Clunie. That is an outing which I missed. I did not accompany him on any such trip. I had not even met him at that time, nor have I since been reduced to an attendant's position—but thanks for the advertisement. Understand, however, that I shall not pay for it.

In seriousness, though, I should like you to correct the statement. I have told many people that I knew nothing of the adopted son until after General Clunie's death, and they, seeing the article above referred to, will believe that I am either a fool or a liar. I may be either or both, but there is no urgent occasion for the determination of that question at the present time.

Very truly yours,
BURRELL G. WHITE."

The News Letter expressed an opinion in last week's number that the Baltimore fire would not create any disaster among the insurance companies involved other than the Maryland companies. It was to be expected that those being local organizations, and of small calibre, would have larger lines at risk in their own bailiwick than would be taken by outside companies of the same financial strength. Events have proven this to be true. An Associated Press Despatch from Baltimore, under date of the 15th, announces that a receiver has been appointed for the Peabody Fire Insurance Company of Baltimore—losses $700,000. This was a 22-calibre affair, having total assets of but $304,687. The same despatch announces that the Firemens of Baltimore was also an applicant for the shelter of the protecting arms of the usually friendly receiver. The application was not granted, but is to be adjudicated on the 22d. Now the case of the Firemens is distinctly different to that of the Peabody, although the same theory of overloading in a company's native town still follows. The Firemens had gross assets of $1,240,366. That amount was understood to be behind the insurance policies issued by the company. It had a cash capital of $400,000, and it looks to a man up a tree that the application for a receiver is made to save this part of the million and a quarter assets. The London and Liverpool and Globe lose a million, and it is hardly in reason to suppose that the Firemens would carry as much in a congested district as would a company like the London and Liverpool and Globe. If it did, its stockholders deserve to pay the policyholders for their foolishness; if it did not, it is trusted that the courts will see to it that the stockholders pay as far as they are able. The method of escaping liability by the receiver-ship route should not be made too easy. The assets of the Firemens will be depleted by a rapid cancellation of all its outstanding insurance, and its local office here was promptly made a run on for cancellations. Then followed the reassuring telegram of the company's president, and later one from the secretary, and an examination of the detailed statement lent courage to the opinion that the Firemens would weather the storm, and it is thought now that in honesty it could if it would. The origin of the fire still remains a mystery, but Maryland is a State which employs a Fire Marshal. His duties, as defined by the Act of 1889, of the Maryland Legislature, Chapter 248, which created the office, are to examine into the causes, circumstances and origin of all fires occurring in the State to which his attention may be called, and which, in his judgment, require examination, and it may be that he will develop the cause and reveal another hazard to the underwriters.

* * *

Up to this writing there has been no rumors of any other than Baltimore companies being crippled; on the contrary, a nation has had paraded before it such an aggregation of millions for the security of fire insurance contracts as was never placed in evidence before.

* * *

The companies represented in the Stovel agency have come through the fire all right, with the exception of the Firemens, and since the outside business of that company has been re-insured in the Providence-Washington and the Firemans Fund, the only effect on the agency will be to reduce its carrying capacity. It is safe to say Mr. Stovel will not have much difficulty in finding another company to replace the Firemens.

* * *

One satisfaction to all Californians is the fact that the Firemans Fund of San Francisco was among the first on the ash-pile at Baltimore, following the same lines that it pursued in the conflagrations of Chicago, Virginia City, Nev., Boston, Seattle and Spokane. All names to be remembered, and each of which is a laurel leaf of solidity and a jewel of public confidence in the old Firemans Fund. In spite of passing through all these conflagrations, the Fund has grown until it is now the largest American company west of New York—a company doing a national business, with its home office in San Francisco, with assets of about $6,000,000, and a net surplus of $2,156,118. The careful underwriting of the company is shown by the fact that, while other companies with less loss-paying ability are involved in the Baltimore fire to the amount of a million or more, the total loss of the Firemans Fund in that great conflagration will not exceed a quarter of a million dollars.

* * *

Gordon & Frazer, managers of the Trader's, gleefully sent out a circular, of which the following is an excerpt: "The Trader's Insurance Company of Chicago's losses in the Baltimore fire were $170,000. At that time there was in bank $264,000 cash; therefore, it was not necessary to sell any securities to promptly pay their losses. The company's assets on December 31, 1903, were $2,777,358.09, an increase of nearly $200,000 over their 1902 statement, and its net surplus over all liabilities, including capital stock, was $1,079,462.61."

* * *

Cesar Berthau, manager of the Aachen and Munich Fire Insurance Company, published to his policyholders and agents, under date of February 12th, the receipt of the following cablegram from Aachen, Germany:

"Bertheau, San Francisco: Remitting Baltimore loss of one hundred and eighty thousand in full, leaving American funds undisturbed."

With assets of $7,500,000 and surplus to policyholders of $5,000,000, the Aachen & Munich Fire Insurance Company stands among the leading companies of the world, and its policies offer to its patrons absolute security and prompt indemnity.

C. H. Ward, manager of the old German of Freeport, passed a few pleasant congratulations around among the older managers of the street, and then produced a telegram from Mr. William Trembor, secretary of the German of Freeport, which was as follows:

"C. H. Ward, Manager, No. 337 Pine street, San Francisco, Cal.: No losses in Baltimore. We were just preparing to enter Maryland."

The German has assets of $4,910,606, with net surplus of $1,503,595. Its business for the year 1903 showed an increase of assets of $546,499.57; an increase in re-insurance reserve of $313,515.80; an increase in net surplus of $249,685.48, and it has since organization paid losses to January 1, 1904, $17,759,917.07.

* * *

The Home Fire Insurance Company of New York has evidently not thought it worth while to issue any circular about the Baltimore fire, or if it has, it has not reached this office. It relies on its well-known strength of $18,040,793, with a surplus to policy-holders of $9,574,751. This is enough in itself to maintain confidence.

The Ocean Guaranty and Accident Ins. Co., the largest liability company in the world, is looking over this territory, with a view of appointing an agent. Mr. Duncan A. Reed, the manager of the company, has been seen on the street several times with Mr. F. B. Lloyd, and if it is his intention to have this gentleman represent the company, he could not do better if he tried. Mr. Lloyd took the American Bonding and Indemnity Company of Baltimore, Maryland, last year, and increased the business 100 per cent. He also represents the New Amsterdam and increased their business to $40,000.

The Maryland Casualty Company, one of the strongest accident and liability companies in the world, passed through the great Baltimore conflagration practically unscathed, and afforded a striking illustration of indomitable energy and business ability. Although the home office was reduced to ashes, the securities of the company were unharmed. Business proceeded without a single day's intermittence, and plans are already in preparation for the erection of a new building, which will be ready for occupancy within a year. The Maryland is well-known in San Francisco, and its accident policies have the reputation of being the most liberal issued. Its career has been marked by conservative business foresight and unexcelled executive ability.

A WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY OUTING.

Many will take advantage of the extraordinary low rate offered by the Southern Pacific railroad to go to Monterey on Washington's birthday. The ten dollar rate is good to return Monday night, and includes board at the Hotel Del Monte. These tickets are on sale to-day. There is a low railroad rate ($4.50 for round trip) with tickets good until Tuesday night.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.
F. E. BECK, Manager. P. G. EASTWICK, JR., Ast. Mgr

Although it is eight months before the members of the next Legislature will be nominated by the different parties, the crop of candidates is already very large, and as there is a United States Senator to be elected next January, the assortment is likely to be still more varied before the ides of November. The Senators from the odd numbered Senatorial districts go out this year, and the first name on the list alphabetically is Charles M. Belshaw. There are a whole lot of men who do not like Belshaw, and who prefer some one less aristocratic, for Charles is a good deal of an aristocrat, and so when it comes to a re-nomination he will have, in fact is having, a hard time to get the prize he seeks.

* * *

J. D. Byrnes of the 29th District, is dead, and as he came from San Mateo, his successor may be named from the other county in the district, Santa Cruz, although H. W. Brown, member of the Assembly from San Mateo would like the nomination, but Brown is like Belshaw, a good deal of a reformer, which means a great deal of a kicker, and no one knows where he will stand on any given topic.

* * *

Bob Devlin of Sacramento is spoken of for Congress, and although he has treated the suggestion as gingerly as a maiden with her first proposal, no one doubts that he will take the nomination if he can get it, and he has the reputation of being a very sharp politician. Of course he will have to make a fight because of the deeds or misdeeds of the Prison Board, of which he is a member, but he shrewdly managed to be in Europe when the outbreak at Folsom occurred, and in that way escaped some of the blame that the other members incurred by keeping Wilkinson in office. If he runs for Congress, of course he cannot run for the State Senate, and then Greer of Sacramento and Grove L. Johnson would like the place, and Hatfield, a prominent lawyer of the same town, would also be willing to serve.

Tom Flint's term is also up, and it is said he wants to be returned, although it was announced when he was a candidate for Governor that he would not ask to be sent back to the Upper House. His district now includes San Luis Obispo County, and that means that the Assemblyman from that county, Warren John, probably, will be a candidate for Senator. John, who is now employed in the office of Collector of Internal Revenues in this city, is a very popular young man, and the foreign element in that section is particularly devoted to him.

Greenwell, Santa Barbara, is one of Senator Bard's employees, the manager of a ranch or something of the kind, and went to the State Senate to help elect Bard Senator on the distinct understanding that he was to be given the place of Collector of Customs at Los Angeles. In the Senate he made the unique record of not introducing a bill, nor making a single speech, and Bard did not keep his promise, but allowed John C. Cline to retain the Collectorship at the suggestion of ex-Senator Bulla, so Greenwell retired in disgust, and it is understood wants no more Legislature in his. Ex-Assemblyman C. W. Merritt wants the place, and says he can get both the nomination and the election, which of course settles the matter if he is correct.

Senator Hubbell of the 30th district, who was one of the most brilliant members of the last Senate, and who possessed the unique record of being a member of the Senate of Indiana while he was a member elect of the Senate of California, died last April, and a successor has to be elected to fill his place. Frank C. Prescott, Assemblyman in the last session from San Bernardino, is a candidate, and as he made an excellent record, has a strong backing. Another candidate is W. T. Leeke of Ontario. Leeke was Supervisor of Indian Schools for California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, and Nevada, under President Harrison. He is now the President of the San Antonio Water Company, and is a representative man in his community, although not nearly as well known as Prescott. Senator Lardner expects to come back from Placer and El Dorado Counties and the chances are that his expectations will be realized.

Senator Lucksinger of Vallejo is now the postmaster of that town, so he cannot be a candidate for his old place, and no definite successor has yet been selected, although the editor of the Vallejo Chronicle is understood to be willing to add the duties of law making to those he now fills.

Senator Lukens of Alameda and Muentzer of Stockton both want to come back, and probably both will. Lukens was the mouthpiece of the State administration, the California Lodge, in the last session, and whenever he spoke the knowing ones always heard the voice of Pardee. The Governor will try to see that he goes back, and as nearly all the voters in Alameda hold office, and the few who don't expect to secure places very shortly, there should be no trouble in nominating him and electing him almost without opposition. In Santa Clara Louis Oneal is, of course, a candidate for re-election, but there is some question whether he can make it. Mr. Lyons, a brother-in-law of the Hayes brothers, also wants the place, and if Dr. A. E. Osborne is not nominated for Congress he may be chosen as Senatorial candidate. The nomination of either Oneal or Lyons would be a renewal of the old fight between Johnnie MacKenzie, represented by Oneal, and Lyons representing the Hayes brothers, and as nobody knows which of those factions is now on top, it is an open question which of them would be able to secure the nomination.

Tom Selvage wants to come back from Humboldt to fight the administration, which turned him down for Code Commissioner, and if he succeeds he will make it very unpleasant for the Governor. Assemblyman George T. Rolley, also thinks that he would like to be Senator from the First. Editor Tyrell of Grass Valley thinks he can be returned easily, and those from his district to whom I have talked agree with him.

San Francisco will have an extra Senator to elect, owing to the death of Senator G. H. Williams, and if the cards are propitious, I am told that the private secretary of Mayor Schmitz will be the candidate. Senators Nelson and Wolf will be both candidates for re-election, as Wolf has given up his desire to go to Congress, and Nelson made a phenomenal run in a Democratic district.

BY THE AUTOCBANK

The outlook for the restoration of the King's Highway through California is assuming a more pleasing aspect. The local automobilists have received the support of the California Associated Cyclers, a body that governs the amateur wheeling in the State. This gives a color to the proposition that has changed the whole complication of affairs.

It is possible for the cyclers to call to their aid the great army of noiseless steed enthusiasts, and when it is taken into consideration how many wheels there are in use at the present time, one can easily realize what a voting strength is at command.

With the present legislators, nothing can be accomplished, but if the automobilists and cyclists work hand in hand at election, men may be chosen who will go to Sacramento pledged for good roads. There should be no party cry but the watch word of good roads.

Elect men to power for such an object just for one term, and the good they will do will force both the Republicans and Democrats to make it a plank in the platforms adopted at the conventions.

Good roads will never be achieved any other way than at the polls, except out of the individual pockets, and that would be impossible when a road from San Diego to the Oregon line is contemplated.

* * *

A committee on Automobile Traffic, appointed in Paris, has made a series of experiments in the Bois de Boulogne for the purpose of comparing the quickness with which horse vehicles and automobiles can be stopped. The macadamized road was muddy, and it was to be expected that the hoofs of the horses would find a better hold than the rubber tires of the motors. The latter, however, showed themselves superior in this respect.

Two vehicles with one horse each, two with two horses each, and one with a pony, competed with an automobile of 6 and 40 horsepower.

At a speed of 7½ miles per hour, the horse vehicles could only be completely stopped at 30 feet; the two motors at 10 feet. At a speed of 10 miles per hour the one-horse vehicle stopped at 40 feet; the motors at 13½ feet. At a speed of 12½ miles per hour, the distance increased to 43 1-3 feet and 16¾ feet respectively. As the horses were overworked, the automobiles made further tests alone, resulting in stopping at 33 1-3 feet at a speed of 16 miles per hour, and at 60 feet at a speed of 25 miles per hour.

Here, then, we have some data which it would be well for the Park Commissioner to consider when they raise a barrier to the drives of the Park on the chances of accidents.

The automobile has always proven to be far safer than the horse in competent hands. That those who use the Park drives are competent only rests with the official examiner. And that person has been the right person in the right place, as has been proven by the fact that up to the present time no accidents have happened on the South Drive.

W. K. Vanderbilt did the trick to a nicety in the races at Ormonde, Fla. He is quoted as saying that he "might have made the mile in 37 seconds," and in fact he claims that he did it in 35 seconds in practice. He worked harder than most of the men who took part in the races. On the day of his arrival he was out for a three hours' drive up and down the beach before breakfast, going out again before and after dinner. Always ready on call, always ready to go right out to race, offering no suggestions at all and riding his best at all times, Mr. Vanderbilt gained friends by the hundreds at this meet. His every victory was popular, for every one was his friend. His car was always ready—he caused not a moment's delay, and jumped for his seat the very moment a race was called.

On April 26, 1901, the first license was issued to an automobilist in New York, and by January 1, 1904, the number had reached 8,835. Up to January 1, 1903, only 2,037 permits were issued, which shows what an increase there has been in the sport in the last year in New York.

During the past week a new company for the hire of automobiles has been formed, which is known as the "Scott-Blakeslee Winton Automobile Rental Co." They have taken offices with the Pioneer Automobile Company, and have put into effect a service which consists of four of the latest model Winton Touring Cars. Owing to the strong demand for Winton cars by people taking drives through the city, Messrs. Blakeslee and Scott intend to use nothing but Winton Touring Cars.

* * *

George Roos was out in his brother's White touring car last week. Mr. Roos also had two other White cars in commission. It was a special invitation of Mr. Roos for a day's outing through the Presidio, Cliff House drive and through the Park. These special outings are becoming very popular with those who entertain.

The National Automobile Company report that during the past week, notwithstanding the bad weather they have closed several sales for the Mile-a-Minute Pope-Toledo.

B. D. Merchant and wife, and party of friends, were out through the Park last Sunday, for a ride in his new Pope-Toledo car.

J. A. Murray, a banker of Butte, Mont., has ordered a specially-painted White Touring Car. Mr. Murray will receive his car in this city, and will then tour the State as far south as San Diego.

* * *

Another carload of Wintons arrived in San Francisco last week, and some were delivered to customers according to the booking of their orders. Messrs. S. C. Hammond, L. G. Rowell and R. C. Kirkwood are the happy possessors of these cars now. This makes nine 1904 Wintons already delivered on the Coast, and another carload will be received within the next few days. Mrs. A. Hochheimer last week gave a little Winton automobile party to her daughter and friends, when a delightful drive through the Park and Presidio was very much enjoyed. Mrs. Hochheimer's home is in Willows, Glenn County, although she is spending the winter at Hotel Riche-lieu in this city, and she is, perhaps, one of the strongest Winton advocates of the automobile in this city.

* * *

Thomas H. White, head of the White Company, is about to tour California. At the present time Mr. White is in San Diego with a party of friends.

Samuel Hammond made a trip from Oakland to San Jose and return last week.

Max Rosenfeld, of the Pioneer Automobile Co., toured Alameda last week.

Car. His son, O. Letts Oliver, has given up the good yacht Wave for an Oldsmobile runabout.

E. B. Brinegar, President of the Pioneer Automobile Company, has just returned from the New York show. While East he spent a month visiting the different factories. After looking them over thoroughly he did not try for any new lines. He is satisfied with the standard machines which his company is handling.

The Mobile Carriage Company has just sold Mr. H. C. Tilden a French Arrow touring car, which is of special design, built on the order of the purchaser, color being red, slanting hood and canopy top, which will be delivered about March 1st. Mr. Tilden is expecting much pleasure from the long-distance tours he will take during the spring.

Ex-Governor Moore, of Washington, who is at present in San Rafael, will shortly start for Los Angeles in his White touring car.

R. C. Kirkwood and Hector Bradford, of San Jose, have bought new 1904 Winton touring cars.

The Pacific Motor Car Company report the sale of three St. Louis touring cars this week. They were purchased by Otto tum Suden, Joseph Geary and Harold T. Armstrong.

Perhaps one of the most conspicuous-looking vehicles seen on the driveways in the Park and Presidio is the racy looking little French rig belonging to Mr. De La Montanya. This machine the Marquis sent over to Paris for, and after having same set up at the Pioneer Automobile Company's new garage, has been using the same extensively in the city. The machine is a very neat but odd-looking vehicle, owing to the natural wood finish of the tonneau and rear parts, and the flaring mud guards and coat of yellow paint. The Marquis stables his machine with the Pioneer people, and both he and his wife being strong advocates of the game of bowling, find unlimited pleasure in enjoying the privileges of the Jefferson Square Club over the garage in the Pioneer Automobile Company's new building.

One of the members of the Pacific Motor Car Company has left for the East to try and secure more of the St. Louis touring cars, as the demand for them has been so great in San Francisco.

G. W. Starr of Grass Valley is another enthusiast who will tour to Los Angeles this summer in his White touring car.

On last Thursday, Mr. Riley and Mr. Peabody of the National Automobile Company, took one of the new Pope-Toledo four-cylinder touring car out for a run to San Jose. They found the roads in good shape—no dust—but when returning a heavy rain made the roads very muddy. They say they had a very pleasant trip, in spite of the rain, and were very well satisfied with the riding and the running of the car.

The Mobile Carriage Company, in order to supply the demand, is placing in passenger service French

Dr. Parker of Portland has received a 1904 White touring car.

F. A. Garbutt, the enthusiastic Los Angeles automobilist, has sold his touring car, which he has raced for the last two years, and has ordered a 1904 model White touring car specially painted.

E. O. Lindblom of Dawson has purchased a White touring car.

J. D. Spreckels, William Tevis, President F. A. Hyde and C. A. Hawkins will tour Yosemite Valley as soon as the road is open.

Miss Lillian Russell visited the races at Ingleside last Tuesday in a 1904 model Winton touring car, with which she expressed herself as being much delighted, and being an automobile owner herself and a strong advocate of the sport, her expression naturally pleases the Pioneer people immensely. Miss Russell owns and drives a 20 horse-power Decauville French machine in New York City. This machine cost about $10,000 laid down in New York, and when Miss Russell was apprised of the fact that a 20 horse-power Winton is procurable at $2,650, she seemed very much surprised.

J. C. Ainsworth, president of the United States National Bank, Portland, has just received his second White touring car.

The above eloquent cablegram tells of the troubles encountered on the high seas by Elijah. It is told by his companions on the journey that more than once Dowie tried to emulate the whale in the story of Jonah. The Prophet succeeded in spoiling his whiskers, and managed to lose much of his dignity. He only recovered his equanimity when a stranger in Honolulu mistook him for Sanford B. Dole. Then he swelled well-nigh to bursting point.

Financial Review.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

The local market for stocks and bonds has been exceedingly dull during the past week, and in bonds business has been much lighter than it usually is at this season of the year. As for the share market, speculation is practically dead, which is not to be wondered at when such staple industrials as Metropolitan Gas stock has been juggled with like a veritable wild-cat by a set of ambitious wire-pullers, whose skill as promoters is evidenced by a combination which, if exploited to the core, would be the laughing stock of all creation. An over-weighted, over-capitalized, top-heavy concern, erected upon the basis of an old-time structure which, to prove effective, in itself stands sorely in need of being modernized. When an official explanation is required in apology for the meaneast quality of products, that the conduits are in such miserable condition through age that a powerful air pressure must be introduced in order to improve the volume of service, things must be in a bad condition indeed. It is not surprising, under the circumstances, that consumers complain of exorbitant bills in which they are paying largely for air, nor that the death rate has been largely increased by asphyxiation, caused by the poisonous fumes of cheap water gas, dispensed in lieu of the old-fashioned and comparatively innocuous product of coal. It certainly is not the public demand for the shares which keeps the shares propped up at present prices, nor is there any evidence that investors are scrambling wildly for stock in this much-vaunted combine. A new and modern gas works would sweep the present institution off the earth, and the sooner this matter is taken up the better. It is useless wasting time over discussing rates with the combine inflated as it is beyond all reason. What figure do rates cut with an institution which can readily even matters up with helpless consumers by the introduction of more air pressure at the sweet will of a management which doubtless has little love for an already rebellious public. The stock of this company has shown a light advance during the week as the purchase of a very small amount of stock. In other descriptions, the shares of Spring Valley Water ruled steady and firm at from 38 to 38 $\frac{1}{4}$.

Prominent Miners in Legal Fray.

The news that the Hammond-Wiltsee-Doolittle mining clique had sued the Bradley-Crocker combination, came upon a large number of people in this city like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky. The trouble arises over the ownership of some dredging land near Oroville, which the plaintiffs say they should control had not the defendants managed to increase their holding of shares by the issuance of company stock in a way which is deemed improper. The strangest part of the business is to find Bradley on the opposite side of the fence to Hammond after the intimacy which has prevailed between them for years. On the former's part, a belief exists, it would appear from the published statement of the case, the land in question is of little or no value, and that the vendors had had the best of the bargain. It is likely that owing to the relations between the leading parties to the suit, on both sides, that the litigation will be cut short by compromise of some character which will settle the question in dispute without widening the present breach.

An Honorable Settlement.

The firm of Bolton, de Ruyter & Co. have made a settlement with their creditors on a basis of 100 cents on the dollar, payable as follows: Fifty per cent cash, payable immediately; 25 per cent in thirty days, and the balance of 25 per cent payable in or before six months, without interest. This is a proposition out of the ordinary run in up-to-date failures. It speaks well for the firm, and suggests a possibility that an extension of time upon the part of the creditors would have enabled the firm to have pulled through the temporary financial embarrassment and continued business. As it is, the general impression prevails that the firm will retire from the field, Mr. Bolton taking up again his original business on the floor of the local stock and bond exchange.

Unwhipped of Justice.

William B. Ewing, the promoter convicted the other day in the United States Court of swindling, widows and orphans being his favorite prey, is, at latest accounts, walking around on bail. Whitaker Wright would probably have been alive to-day had not the law of the country where he was tried ordained that conviction is followed by immediate transmission to the penitentiary. It seems difficult work for even the powerful arm of the Federal Government to assert itself against the criminal backed with the means to put up a fight. Such a condition of affairs is truly deplorable.

The market for North-end Pine-St. Market. Comstock shares firmed up considerably during the week, and the bears suffered again. A most important discovery on the 2,000 level of Ophir knocked a lot of their pet theories about the extent of the ore body now being developed, and they are likely to suffer a still further demoralization from this time forward. Within the next six months there will not be one of the clique left on the street worth a brass farthing, judging from present indications in the deep levels of the leading North-end mines. The movement in prices for some time past has enabled a good many people to make money, and no fault will be found with what can only be a good trading market, by any one outside of the disgruntled dogs-in-the-manger, who have infested the street for months past. From all points along the lode the news is favorable enough to warrant a buoyant market and higher prices for a long time to come.

It is reported on excellent authority that the net earnings of the Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company for 1903 amounted to about $878,000. The company has now practically paid off all the floating debt, and the outlook for the future is considered excellent. This year's crop is estimated at about 35,000 tons of sugar; at present the cane being crushed is producing about five per cent more saccharine matter than at the same time last year. If this continues, the output of sugar will be over the estimate.

At the recent annual meeting of the members of the San Francisco Clearing House, the following officers were elected: William Alvord, president; Homer S. King, vice-president; and Fred W. Zeile, secretary. William Alvord, as president, is chairman of the Clearing House Committee, and the following were elected members of that committee: I. Steinhart, S. G. Murphy, James K. Wilson, and A. Kains, the latter being elected secretary. Charles Sleeper was re-elected manager, and J. T. Burke assistant manager.

A CASE OF GRAFT REFUSED.

Casey of the back-stretched hand, boss of the Board of Works, coarse and unlettered, grasping politician and pot-house statesman, has lifted his burly and ponderous fist. He hath spoken, and the flower vendors must go. It was not to be expected that Casey possessed enough of the love of the beautiful to prevent the projection of his unsavory personality into our every-day lives. First the Hand was Back-Stretched and the boot-black had to seek other quarters, and now it is the poor flower-seller, whose baskets have been the glory of the town, a sight for the traveler and a lasting advertisement of our winter climate that must go. Casey of the Back-Stretched Hand saw his chance. He would make a virtue of his rapacity. Is the indignation of an entire community to be of no avail against the acts of this water-front vulgarian, whelped by the accident of politics?

Two Valentines

I.

"Uncle Jack, do you know anything about hearts?"

Uncle Jack raised his head from the arms on which it had been pillowed in that most despairing of all masculine attitudes and looked down on the troubled fact at his elbow.

"Do you know anything about hearts?" repeated the little boy, anxiously.

"Wish I did," growled Uncle Jack; "what's the matter, youngster?"

"Does that look anything like a heart?" A pair of scissors was clasped in one rough little hand and the other held up a three-cornered bit of paper, in the center of which had been pasted the head of a smiling lady.

Uncle Jack took the paper in his own hand and contemplated it thoughtfully. "Well, well," he murmured, "I don't know that it looks like a heart—exactly—but it looks very much the way mine feels—all jagged around the edges and a girl's face in the center. What do you want it for, sonny?"

"It's a valentine for Celia," replied the little boy, leaning confidently against his uncle's knee. "I thought yesterday I wouldn't give her any—'cause I was mad then; so I didn't buy the pretty one in the window—the one I meant to buy for her, 'cause she choosed it every time when we looked at 'em on our way home from school. And now, to-day, you see, I am not mad, and I wish I'd got it, 'cause she liked it so much."

"Bless his heart," growled Uncle Jack; "does it begin so early?" and he lifted the small boy on his knee.

"And this is St. Valentine's Day?" he asked.

"Yes, and the stores are shut up 'cause it's Sunday and I can't go and buy the pretty one; so you see I must make a valentine and take it round to her this afternoon."

"Of course," said Uncle Jack. "You wouldn't want her to keep on thinking you were mad."

"Oh, no—and I hope she didn't cry."

"Do little girls cry when you are 'mad' with them?"

"Celia does."

"Celia? Is she Miss Burroughs' little niece?"

"Miss Burroughs is her aunty—our aunty, 'cause Celia's things are mine, too—when—when we're not mad."

"Oh!" said Uncle Jack. "And are your things Celia's? Am I Celia's Uncle Jack?"

"Course," was the decided answer.

"Well, that's very nice, I'm sure. I'd rather have Celia for a niece than any little girl I know. You can tell her so if you like, Stuart."

Stuart took the valentine from Uncle Jack's hand and regarded it critically. "Couldn't you help me make a better one?" he asked, wistfully.

"Perhaps so," said Uncle Jack, opening a drawer in his desk. On the top lay a sheet of thick, creamy paper. Borrowing Stuart's scissors, Uncle Jack at last succeeded in cutting out a very presentable heart, and to the center of this the face of the smiling lady was transferred. Then Stuart laboriously printed around the edges: "I love you. Be my valentine. I am not mad any more."

"Why were you 'mad'?" asked Uncle Jack, musingly, as he watched the slow progress of the lettering.

"Oh, 'cause," said Stuart shyly, "she forgot to keep a promise."

"That was bad," said Uncle Jack, sympathetically.

"I asked her to march with me in dancing-school and Billy Hart got there first and—she took him."

"You shouldn't let Billy get there first," observed Uncle Jack, a little bitterly.

"But she ought to have waited," declared Stuart.

"Then why are you sending her a valentine?" went on his curious uncle.

"'Cause I can't stay mad," admitted the little boy; "it's—it's too gloomy."

"Just my case exactly," muttered Uncle Jack.

Stuart looked up quickly. It was his turn now.

"Do you ever go to dancing-school?" he asked, searchingly.

"I go to dances sometimes," replied his victim.

"And did a little girl forget you?"

Uncle Jack nodded gloomily.

Stuart drew nearer, his big eyes very wide open.

"Has she got soft yellow hair and does she wear it curled when she goes to dancing-school?"

"Yes," said Uncle Jack.

"Are her eyes big and blue like Celia's?"

Again Uncle Jack nodded.

"Is she as pretty as Celia?"

"Prettier."

"Does she give you half her cookies?"

"No-o."

"Celia does," with an air of triumph. "Does she kiss you when you make up?"

"She won't let me kiss her."

"Is she mad?"

"I don't know," groaned Uncle Jack.

"Are you mad?"

"Not now."

"Do you have all her aunts and uncles and mothers and fathers and cousins for yours?"

"I wish to goodness I did!"

"Then"—Stuart drew nearer and looked up in Uncle Jack's face—"then why don't you send her a valentine?" he asked.

Uncle Jack seemed to meditate on this advice.

"Do you think it would be a good idea?" he asked at length.

"Yes; we can cut out another heart and put a picture on it, and I'll make the letters for you if you like."

"Thanks awfully," said Uncle Jack, "but I would not dare do that. I tell you the kind of valentine I'd like to send my little girl. I'd like to get a big bunch of violets; but it's Sunday, you see, and I can't."

Stuart was all attention. Uncle Jack had helped him make his heart for Celia; he had listened to his nephew's troubles and given manly sympathy, and he had not laughed. He had even exchanged confidences. Should Stuart prove the deserter now?

"You can get some violets," he declared eagerly. "I know the flower-man and he'll get 'em for me. I sometimes buy a little bunch for Celia or teacher. I'll go now. Got five cents?"

"Bless you, boy," cried Uncle Jack. "I want a bunch as big as your head!"

Stuart started. "That'll be more than five cents," he objected.

"Can't help it. Bring the bill to me. A bunch as big as your head, remember."

Stuart was quite overcome by the magnificence of this order, but still he lingered.

"Say, Uncle Jack, don't you believe she'll be sorry when she sees 'em?"

"I hope so," said Uncle Jack, sighing.

"Say, will you go to take 'em to her when I go to Celia's? Does she live near Celia's?"

Uncle Jack hesitated a moment, then he laughed. "Yes, I'll go with you," he said. "Come, youngster, get a move on!"

II.

It was late in the afternoon when Uncle Jack and Stuart set out on their tender errand. Uncle Jack carried a violet box, and Stuart held carefully a large white envelope.

"Where does your little girl live?" was Stuart's first question.

Uncle Jack smiled. "That's a secret," he said. "I'll tell you by and by, though."

There was a pleasant mystical flavor about this that pleased Stuart, but when they reached Celia's gate Uncle Jack turned in with him. "Are you going to wait for me?" asked the little boy.

"Of course," said Uncle Jack, with a pleasant air of comradeship.

Stuart rang the bell, and in the interval of waiting peered anxiously in at the side lights. "I wonder if she's come herself," he whispered, excitedly; but when the door was opened it was not Celia, but Celia's aunty who stood before them.

She was a very pretty aunty, with blue eyes like Celia's and soft golden hair, and a happy face that "looked like it loved you," as Stuart and Celia had often agreed. She wore a soft blue gown, a little darker than her eyes, and she looked herself like a lady on a valentine as she stood framed in the white doorway.

Stuart was disappointed, but Uncle Jack did not seem to be.

"Why!" said Celia's aunty, as if she were surprised and then her cheeks turned a soft rose-color. "Won't you come in?" she said in a soft voice.

"I will," replied Stuart, promptly. "I want to see Celia; and he said he'd wait for me—but you won't have time to stop, will you?" he added, turning to his uncle. In truth, Uncle Jack had intended merely to leave his valentine at the door, but the glimpse of Celia's aunty had made him change his mind.

"I think I can stop for a little while," he said, returning his nephew's confidential glance, so they followed Miss Burroughs into the dim, pleasant parlor.

There was a cheerful fire in the hearth, with comfortable chairs drawn up about it—a pleasant stopping place on a February afternoon. Celia's aunty sank into one of the chairs, and Uncle Jack took another, but Stuart looked about restlessly.

"Where's Celia?" he asked.

"In the nursery, looking at her valentines," replied

Celia's aunty. "But wait a minute, dear. What have you in that big envelope?"

She lifted Stuart on her knee and bent her pretty head close to his, for she knew that Uncle Jack was watching her and she did not want to look in his eyes.

Stuart displayed his treasure. "It isn't as pretty as the valentine in the window," he said, regretfully, "but I couldn't get that on Sunday. "Do you think she'll like it?"

"Of course. Did you make it all yourself, Stuart?"

"No. Uncle Jack cut the heart out for me; he knows more about hearts than I do."

"Oh!"

"I made one first," went on Stuart, "but it wasn't just right. Uncle Jack said it looked like his heart, though."

"Really! What does Uncle Jack's heart look like, Stuart?"

Celia's aunty was very rosy again, but she was looking very straight at the little boy in her lap. Stuart thought she had forgotten that Uncle Jack was there.

"Oh, it was all crumpled and snipped up," he replied.

"And with a girl's face in it—don't forget that, youngster," said Uncle Jack, softly.

"Yes, I cut her out of an advertisement card. Isn't she pretty?" said Stuart pointing to the picture. "And see the printing! I did that, myself."

Celia's aunty read it carefully. "And why were you 'mad' with Celia?" she asked gravely.

"Oh, 'cause she didn't dance with me when she'd promised."

"Really? I'm sorry," was the gentle reply. "I will tell Celia so. Now, you'd better run and find her, and kiss and be friends again."

But Stuart lingered to look up in her face. Then suddenly his arms went about the pretty neck. "I wish you were my aunty really!" he exclaimed.

The lady drew him close with a gentle shake. "Oh, you foolish little boy!" she said, laughing.

Stuart was slipping from her lap to the floor, when he was seized with another inspiration.

"Uncle Jack," he said, "can I show her your valentine?"

"I don't mind," said Uncle Jack, carelessly. He was lounging back in the easy-chair, his hands clasped behind his head, and his eyes twinkled.

Stuart took up the violet box and opened it with great care. "They're for the little girl Uncle Jack likes best," he explained. "Uncle Jack was mad with her, too, but he isn't any more, and so he got these for a valentine. My! Ain't they sweet!"

"Very sweet," said the lady, softly.

"Don't you think she'll like them?"

"She ought to."

"Uncle Jack says she's an awful pretty little girl—prettier than Celia—but I don't believe that, do you?"

"No, indeed," said Celia's aunty, warmly. Then she lifted the great bunch of violets, and a paper heart was discovered on the bottom of the box. "What is this?" she smiled.

"Hush!" exclaimed Stuart in a stage whisper. "Uncle Jack doesn't know about that. I did it for him 'cause he was afraid to. I made it just like mine, only it isn't cut so nice. But I guess she'll like it. It seems more like a valentine than flowers do."

"But I don't believe Uncle Jack wanted to say that in his valentine," whispered Celia's aunty.

Stuart nodded vigorously. "Yes, he did; he was just scared. But I'm not. That little card down there's the one he put in. Doesn't Uncle Jack write funny? I can't read it, can you?"

Evidently Celia's aunty could read it, for the pretty color rushed over her face again and she brushed the cool violets across it. Uncle Jack was leading forward, one of his big hands on the arm of the chair, his eyes full of tender beseeching.

Stuart looked from one to another; then the light of understanding dawned in his wondering eyes.

"Are big girls like you little girls to fellows Uncle Jack's size?" he questioned, solemnly.

Celia's aunty did not answer, but Stuart knew he was right. "Well, then," he said, philosophically, "if you're Uncle Jack's little girl, why don't you kiss and be friends again, like you told Celia and me to?"

Celia's aunty laughed and hid her face in the violets. "Big little girls don't make up that way," she murmured.

Stuart looked at her a moment thoughtfully. "Uncle Jack said you wouldn't let him kiss you, but——" he touched her cheek, caressingly with one small brown hand—"you'll kiss me, won't you?"

"Of course, you dear little goose!" exclaimed Celia's aunty, and she bent down her pretty head and kissed him with her warm red lips.

Stuart received the kiss gravely. Then he slipped from her lap and turned to the young man opposite.

"Here, Uncle Jack," he said, "here's your kiss. I don't need it. Now you can be friends again. I guess she liked your valentine." This last in a satisfied whisper.

Uncle Jack stooped and kissed the upturned lips. Then he laid a gentle hand on Stuart's shoulder and turned him toward the door.

"Thanks, little fellow," he said. "Now you'd better run and find Celia."—Kate Patch in Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Baltimore's Part in History

The recent great fire in Baltimore has destroyed nearly all of the historical portion of the city. With the exception of the Cathedral and the Washington Monument there is little left of the Baltimore that one reads about in history.

Pratt street, for instance, which lay right in the burned district, was the scene of the first blood shed in the Civil War. Along that street in ante-bellum days it was customary to pull the railroad cars, on their way from New York to Washington. The cars arrived at the Philadelphia, Wilmington Depot, north of the town, and were dragged by long teams of a dozen mules strung out tandem to each car, and driven by a man who ran beside them cracking a long whip and blowing a tin horn. On April 19, 1861, the Massachusetts militia, on their way to Washington, in response to the call of President Lincoln, were being pulled through the city along Pratt street as above described, when a mob of Southern sympathizers attacked the cars and a riot ensued.

The Holiday Street Theatre, which seems to have been destroyed, was one of the historical playhouses of the country. The elder Booth and many celebrated actors first made their debut on its stage. All the old-time actors have played there—Mrs. Drew, Forrest, Booth, Barrett, etc.

The Marsh Market, as it was called in early days, or the Maryland Institute as it was known in later years, was an historical building that stood on lower Baltimore street. It was in that building that the second Democratic convention of 1860 assembled. It was in this hall that, during the war, Artemus Ward created great excitement during a lecture which he was delivering in the presence of a number of Union Generals. It was just after Stonewall Jackson's Northern raid, and Ward, in the course of his remarks, said: "We have very many able Generals among us." Of course all the Generals present smiled and straightened up. "There are," said Ward, for instance, and he named several Union Generals, and then added, "and Stonewall Jackson." Everybody was astonished, and several cried out "Treason! Treason!" while the officers arose to leave. Just then Ward said quietly: "But the trouble with him (Jackson) is that he is with us a little too often." Everybody, of course, laughed, and the disaffection was changed into applause.

The Sun building, which was blown up in a vain effort to stop the flames, was the first iron building erected in America, and I think in the world. I do not mean interiorly of iron, but outside. The Sun was founded by George William Childs and John Abel in a small house on Light street; that has evidently been destroyed also. The Sun was for a time suppressed by the Government during the Civil War and Abel imprisoned.

Next to the Sun building was the Third National Bank, the scene of one of the most extraordinary robberies in the history of the country. Several months before the robbery a man well dressed and of good appearance hired an office on the ground floor of the adjoining building to the bank. He had a number of boxes brought to the room, and when some one asked him what he was going to do, he said he had not decided, but that he might open a bank. One of the national holidays that year occurred on either a Saturday or a Monday, and consequently the bank remained closed two days. When it was opened again it was discovered that some one had burrowed under the intervening wall and entered the safe from the floor, robbing it of a very large sum of money.

Another building that seems to have been burned stood on Lexington and St. Paul streets, and was for years the home of Mrs. Jerome Bonaparte, the first wife of King Jerome, the famous Betsy Patterson. She was the grandmother of Charles Jerome Bonaparte, who has recently attracted attention as special counsel in the Postal investigations. Mrs. Bonaparte boarded in the house referred to for many years, and died there.

On the edge of the burned district stood the Battle Monument, erected to commemorate the battle of Fort McHenry, immortalized by Keyes in "The Star Spangled Banner."

Facing the monument was the former residence of Fedy Johnson, later occupied by a club, but now of course, burned down. Here the great lawyer lived and from there he left when he went as American Minister to England. When he left for his mission, in a fit of absent-mindedness he pinned a note on his door, as he was in the habit of doing when he went to dinner every day: "Gone to dinner—will be back in an hour," and there on the door the notice remained until several years later he returned and took it down himself.

Across from the Johnson residence was Barnum's Hotel, one of the famous hotels of the country in its day. It was the rendezvous of Southern statesmen before the war. Barnum, the owner, became very rich, leaving a million dollars to one of his sons on condition that he would not become a Catholic priest. Young Barnum, however, entered the Jesuit order, gave up his great inheritance, and for many years was a missionary in Northern Alaska.

The Maryland Institute was also the place where the body of Lincoln was laid out when it was brought through Baltimore after his assassination, on its way to Springfield.

IN WINTER, WHEN THE NIGHTS ARE LONG.

By Francis H. Lee in The Book Lover.
In winter, when the nights are long,
I sit and dream before the fire;
My heart is light, my love is strong
For books, dear friends that never tire,
In winter, when the nights are long.

I read from eve till midnight comes;
I stir my soul with history;
My spirit then with heroes roams;
I quaff of poets' mystery
From out the worn, beloved tomes.

In winter, when the nights are long,
When lamp burns bright and fire burns low,
I hear again full many a song,
And voices out of the long ago,
In winter, when the nights are long.

Loved poems! Ah! how sweet you seem,
Ballade, rondeau, and villanelle;
Before the glow I sit and dream,
Your music casts o'er me its spell,
As shadows dance and embers gleam.

In winter, when the nights are long,
I revel. Some the summer praise,
Its gentle breeze, its sunlight strong;
But let me dedicate my lays
To winter, when the nights are long.

DUST.

By Virginia Woodward Cloud in Smart Set
Spurned by the foot, its mystery blows,
Dust of the galley, dust of a king,
Of lover who sang love's dearest rose—
The laughter of Time is a silent thing.

Dust of the lute and of lips that are dead;
Golden lily and flowering quince,
Pain forgotten and passion fled,
Hearts that have loved and wept long since.

Seed of the mold and of winding-sheet.
Grain of gold from a crumbled crown,
Myrrh and aloe and time-spent sweet—
Dust, on a breath of the East blown down.

Snared in a web of wind and of sun,
Mingle and mix they, serf and king,
Stripe and scepter at last are one—
The laughter of Time is a silent thing.

TRAGEDY.

By McCrea Pickering in Smart Set
Only a simple woman she, whom Love
In some sad, listless way, grew weary of.
So plain the fact, so commonplace the thing,
Empty and cheap and void of coloring.
Yet all the tragedies of earth, I wis,
Have nothing in their wounds that hurt like this.
No grand, sharp blow, sudden to ease the pain;
Only the ceaseless ache of heart and brain.
The uselessness of toil and life and soul—
A causeless journey to a dreary goal.
Only a simple woman she, whom Love
Waxed weary of.

GENESIS.

By Arthur Gibson Hull in The Reader.
Between his palms the Potter twirled
The patient clay,
Damp with his spittle, lightly hurled
It then away.
Far down the void of black-breasted Night,
Betwixt the lean Moon and the sodden light
Of a chill dead dawn, it fell. Behold, the world!

"Elijah Dowie," according to a cablegram from Australia, won out by a mere whisker in a footrace with a Sydney mob which liked neither the man nor his doctrines.

Michael Davitt has given President Roosevelt a stout blackthorn, and the minor statesmen who frequent the White House are wishing that he had chosen a slap-stick instead.

Captain Richmond Pearson-Hobson is syndicating for a credulous herd of newspapers what he does not know about the war in the Orient. In fine, the free-kisser has become a paid guesser.

The crew of a Government dredger at Astoria, Ore., has struck because hash was served to it seven days in succession. Consider the poor soldier who gets it every day in the year, and is so bound by discipline that even his stomach dare not revolt.

THE ARROGANCE OF OFFICE.

Abolition of the free flower market on the city's most conspicuous corner was a piece of unadulterated Schmitzism. The member of that office-hungry tribe, who is at the head of the municipal Government, has kept in the background, but another blood-brother of the Mayor, pushes into public notice his insolent person, grown sleek and fat in two years of job-holding, accepts responsibility for this meanness, and tells the citizens who protest against it that their objections are only laughable; that their protests merely strengthen his determination to keep his order in force.

The pretense that the flower-peddlers were chased away from Market and Kearny streets because they obstructed the sidewalk will not be seriously urged. As we understand it, the civic bodies which went through the motions of asking the Board of Public Works to break up this flower market, did not attempt to base their action and request on this ground. They called it a violation of the charter, inasmuch as the vendors in question held no permits from the Board of Public Works. Now, such permits cannot be granted over the objection of the owner of abutting property, but in this case it is well understood that the public-spirited citizen whose property is affected not only permits but desires the peddlers to remain. It is equally well understood that the Board of Public Works will not grant permits for the use of these particular sidewalks, but that it will gladly extend such privileges in other parts of the city. The civic bodies interested make no secret of the fact that this move is based on alleged damage to the trade of the shop-keeping florists done by these licensed basket-merchants. This, too, is a false pretense. It is notorious that these peddlers in all the years they have hawked their fragrant wares on the Kearny-street corner have never touched the high-grade patronage of the shopmen, that their customers are and always have been the poor, who spend dimes on flowers where the well-to-do spend dollars, or the casual buyer, whose impulse would not carry him to any shop, however near.

The real reason for this detestable revelation of the Schmitz family's mean-mindedness is to be found in its grudge against the citizen who has done most to keep the free flower market in existence, the citizen on whose corner the peddlers stood until the Schmitz brothers chased them away. His one motive in permitting and desiring them to remain was for the good of San Francisco. Apparently his fellow-citizens are overwhelmingly of his mind, believing with him that here was the best advertisement we could have of our vaunted climate—a bright spot of beauty in the midst of sordid ugliness, an odorous proof of California's unending spring, so set down against the roar of traffic as to drive itself home to the mind of the busiest passer-by, a telling argument to the stranger from arid lands or shores heat-cursed when they are not blizzard-smitten, a thing of daily pride and comfort to our own people.

The grudge is due to this citizen's intelligent and patriotic opposition to the municipal shame and disgrace that have come upon us with the Schmitz family. It would be hard to figure out a revenge more senseless, more petty in its malice than has been accomplished in the driving away of the flower-vendors. The man at whom it was aimed is unhurt except in his civic pride. A few poor men have been robbed of their chance to earn a scanty living. Down-town San Francisco has been robbed of the one thing it boasted of—California's fragrant, colorful fairness.

And this is Schmitzism.

A STUMP SPEECHIFYING EXPERT.

As an example of official bad manners, Russel L. Dunn, the so-called expert, employed at the instance of Mayor Schmitz to appraise the property of the Spring Valley Water Company, easily takes first place. Mr. Dunn is traveling around the city addressing public meetings, in the course of which he loses no opportunity to make slighting remarks concerning the City Engineer, Mr. Grunsky, whom the people of San Francisco know to be a competent man.

The value of Mr. Dunn's services remains to be demonstrated. He has filed a long and windy report which contains almost everything but the one thing he was asked to ascertain. It is something like the report of an inquest that omits the verdict. The expert in his report instructs the Board of Supervisors in almost every conceivable topic except the single one at issue, which is, of course, the value of the property. In view of these facts, an inquiry into the value of Dunn's services seems pertinent. It is no part of the duty of an expert to travel about the city making stump speeches, and if he would spend more time ascertaining that for which he is paid it would be more to the purpose.

ONLY A LITTLE ONE.

In line with the infinite variety of graft that has grown up under our somewhat confused and scrambling form or forms of Government, there is nothing quite so grotesque as the annual distribution of seed by the Agricultural Department and members of Congress. It is amusing enough to find this queer function of Government make the inspiring cause of floods of eloquence that occupied the time of Congress for the period of about one business day, and it is not less grotesque that the sum and substance of all this storm and tempest of oratory is that after all the steal is only a little one—only a matter of $200,000 a year, or perhaps something more.

Of course it is only a little one, and for that reason perhaps no one cares to object very strenuously, but by way of comment, it developed in course of the debate that certain constituents of Southern members were not content with seed. One had written to his Congressman for a pair of trousers. Another wanted a hat for himself and one for his wife. Congress thought these requests excruciatingly funny, but in fact these simple Southerners are more logical than the supposedly enlightened body that laughed at them. It is considered a proper function of Government to give away to its people a package of seed there is equally good reason why they should be supplied from the same source with boots and shoes and breakfast food.

It seems worth while to quote what the reporters doubtless would characterize as "a magnificent burst of oratory," that flowed from the lips of Hon. Ezekiel Candler, of Mississippi, who is the inspired prophet of free seed. Thus Mr. Candler:

"It is the farmer who in time of peace brings the balance of trade to our shores, and it is the farmer who in time of war stands ready to go to the front and bare his breast to defend the country that he loves. It is the farmer's wife who kisses her bright-faced boy good-bye and faces the loneliness, difficulties and dangers of isolated country life and tells him to go and remain so long as his services are necessary in the defense of his country and for the good of his people. It is she who under like circumstances gives her husband to the same cause, and whether it be in success or in difficulties, whether it be in

Funeral Flowers

Oh, those glorious nights! What crowds of gaily dressed women and fashionable loungers strut up and down before the glittering cafes on the Boulevards and the popular resorts for ices on the terraces. Here comes the flower-girls with their baskets circulating among the crowd.

The beautiful young idlers accept with delight these gathered, mysterious flowers. Mysterious! Are they not? Know, gentle reader, that there exists right in the heart of Paris a certain questionable agency having an understanding with the leading undertakers and even with the grave-diggers which permits them to take away all the magnificent bouquets, wreaths and roses by the hundred which—through a sentiment of filial or conjugal affection—are daily placed on the newly-made graves and catafalques which bend beneath their weight.

These flowers are usually forgotten after the funeral services and never thought of again. People are in a hurry to get back; that is easily understood. Then it is that our amiable croque mors (hired mourners) give themselves up to the pleasure of gathering these flowers, for they have no idea of forgetting them. These gentlemen do not live in the clouds; they are practical people. Silently they gather them up by the armful and hurriedly throw them over the wall into a conveniently open tomb; it is but the question of a moment, and it is all done. Then some of the quickest and most shrewd among them bear off their precious cargo to their flower girl friends, who, with the deft and light touch of their fairy-like fingers, transform these melancholy spoils into many a graceful corsage bouquet, hand bouquet and single spray of roses.

In the evening, with the first rays of artificial light come our jaunty young flower girls each gracefully carrying her basket of flowers up and down the Boulevards, on the Terraces, into a thousand pleasure resorts, and the well-dressed loungers, anxious to win the favors of certain fashionable women who have inspired them with a tender sentiment, buy these flowers at exorbitant prices, and offer them to these ladies, whose faces are white with paint.

They accept them with a smile of indifference, sometimes holding them in their hands or wearing them on their bosoms, and the reflection of the gas-light on their faces gives them a wan and death-like look.

So it is that these pallid spectral beings, decorated with these funeral flowers, wear without knowing it the emblem of that love which they give and which they receive.

Events and Probabilities.

Events at home and abroad the past week reflected several new international tangles in the near future. Perhaps the most important of the several probabilities to this country is the annexation of San Domingo. Our warships and marines poured shot and shell into the gathered hosts of the revolutionary party a few days ago, but not until there was very much more than a reasonable cause. The rebels fired first. But the significant thing about our recently taken position in the affairs of San Domingo may be found in a semi-official statement from Washington, which is to the effect that so soon as the Panama Canal treaty becomes operative, a rapid movement will be made to acquire San Domingo under the "manifest destiny" unwritten law. Following in the footsteps of this act, Panama will be gathered into our territorial expansion basket. These events are considered as certain actualities by the Washington Government, and the argument is that San Domingo is needed to complete the chain of naval stations between Porto Rico and the Pacific Ocean via Panama. Public opinion seems to approve of the plan because we already have Porto Rico, a base of operations in Cuba, and as good as a strip of land ten miles wide across Panama. But to complete the chain, the whole of Panama and San Domingo are needed, so that, with the several fortified harbors on the north coast of the Gulf of Mexico, a hostile force would have to run a gauntlet of fire for 1,500 miles to reach the canal. This is not sentimentalism on the part of American public opinion, but a precautionary measure suggested by clear foresight into possible national needs.

In the Far East.

Perhaps a better idea of the territory that Japan is trying to acquire on the mainland and what Russia is trying to retain possession of will be had when it is known that in square miles Korea and Manchuria combined have nearly three times as many as the whole of California, or nearly a third greater than Texas. Korea has a population of about 9,000,000, and Manchuria had a population of over 3,000,000 when Russia took possession. Japan has become master in the waters of the Far East, and the scene of strife will soon be, if it is not already, transferred to land engagements. A great battle between land forces has not yet been fought, but when the contact is made it will not be decisive, no matter how disastrous it may be to the one or the other. Neither side is disposed to yield short of such victories as will make the one or the other unqualifiedly supreme. Japan is really fighting for national existence, and Russia is fighting for the retention of a territory whose possibilities in wealth development are beyond measurement; besides, if Russia conquers even more square miles than Manchuria and Korea contain, still more land will be required of China, nor could China alone prevent it. It is easy enough to see that in such an event France and Germany, in fact all the nations of Europe save Great Britain, would have commercial advantages in Russia's possessions, and in the then dominated China by Russian influence; nor would the United States come in for a share. In short, the United States and England would be barred out. Now, when it is understood that the commercial and industrial future of the United States and Great Britain must rely upon open doors and unrestricted course in the regions that Russia is trying to absorb for much of their growth, it should be easy enough to see that as a mere business proposition it would be idiotic for these two Anglo-Saxon nations to sit idly by while Russia was fencing them out of Asia's most extensive and richest fields of trade interchange, which would then include Japan as well. Russia's triumph over Japan would weaken England's hold in India and America's footing in the Philippines. Thibet would have to yield to the Bear, and together with Russia's present population, the Czar's direct and indirect dominion would include a good deal more than one-third of the entire world's population, with the United States and Great Britain always under the ban of a commercial and industrial boycott. In fact, a victorious Russia would mean a backward movement for the wheels of civilization, for the theories, customs, economic philosophy and science of Government of Russians are so at war with the progressive thought and activity of the Anglo-Saxon that no pains would be spared by the Czar's Government and his vast dominions to check, if not crush out the progressive spirit of these two promoters of good Government, of trade expansion, of law and order, and of a high individual, national and world standard of political, social and business ethics—the United States and Great Britain. No, Russia will not be allowed to sweep Japan out of her line of march towards her Asiatic grab, which is degradation for the people and absorption of all wealth procuring and civilizing opportunities and agencies. The god of Justice and human rights will not permit such a visitation of dire calamity upon Asia and the world.

Situation in Europe.

All Europe knows that it is just now dwelling far up on a volcanic mountain, and it knows that the smoke it sees comes from fires just below the crust, and a lot of prayers and supplications are being sent up for a hand to smother the fires. But meanwhile, lest the prayers are not granted, there is great stir and activity everywhere in military and naval circles. And it would seem that the demon of war is getting willing ears to hear his song in all countries. Probably before this issue of the News Letter is off the press the Russian Black Sea fleet will have passed the Dardanelles en route to the Far East. This it could not do without the consent of Turkey, and as Russia is so sorely pressed by Japan's navy, no doubt she will have the Porte's consent in exchange for a free hand for the Turks in the Balkans. But against this possibility England is augmenting her naval squadron in the Mediterranean to the dimensions of a fleet. Russia's Baltic fleet is making a pretense of going to the Far East, but it is not likely that the Czar would leave his capital without a water defense. But there is no doubt that Russia is pushing the Siberian Railway to its utmost capacity to carry reinforcements to Manchuria. She realizes, as all the world does, that she is already practically out of the game so far as war craft is concerned, and that she must win or lose on land. It is reported from St. Petersburg that more than 600,000 of Russia's troops are under orders for the Far East. It may be said that the real war has not yet begun.

A Great Achievement in Science

Ponce de Leon was a dreamer. He sailed in quest of the Fountain of Everlasting Youth and found it not. Still his quest resulted in the discovery of a beautiful land. Ponce de Leon did not live in vain. Science has followed the navigator and adventurer, and it, too, has discovered beautiful perspectives. Until recently the "Fountain of Youth" was as far away as ever. Of course, no one will grant the possibility of everlasting life, but the great majority of humanity is sighing for immunity from disease and a preservation of the faculties of youth until that time when it shall please God to let us into a gentle decline, into a green old age, and a fading into the infinite without attendant pain.

The world at large and the world of Science has sighed for a discovery that would prolong the vigor of mankind, retain the ambitions of youth, the virility of adolescence in man beyond the years now given him.

It has remained for Science to make efforts that in a measure were nullified by the methods used.

By the aid of an humble animal, the butt of jokes and jibes, looked upon by the unobservant public as a useless cumberer of the earth, a great discovery has been made. Goat lymph is the triumph of modern animal therapy. This lymph is extracted from the live goat. It is a singular fact that the goat is about the only four-footed animal known to be absolutely free from the bacterial taint of tuberculosis. The story is told of a tubercular man, suffering in an advanced stage of consumption, taking charge of a flock of goats, in one of the back counties of California. His experience unfolds a story of wonderful interest. He slept in the open, he followed his flock day by day, and his main sustenance was goat milk. This and exercise in the open air had been prescribed him by his physician. The man recovered, and in grateful remembrance of his friend, the Goat, gives us an insight into the characteristics of this most useful animal.

He found that the goat is the most intelligent of all animals and that, under circumstances when most animals, notably cattle and sheep, would lie down and die from sheer lack of courage in the battle of life, the goat will go right on in its endeavors to sustain existence and generally win out. It will travel a thousand miles in search of salt, and will find it in crevice and in desert lake, but salt it will find.

It is the only four-footed animal that takes scrupulous care of its health. In our State, where there are large flocks of goats, it has been found that the goat places itself in the hands of Nature every spring and then begins a wild scramble for the medicaments that Nature offers at this particular season with increased dynamic energy.

Cascara Sagrada is the main subsistence of the goat at this period, and the goat fasts and lives mainly on this bark, leaf and berry, and undergoes a protracted cleansing through this and other agencies. This may last for several weeks, and the result is a remarkable thinness, and from the frantic exercise in search of the shrub the animal develops every muscle in its body to perfection. It is from this wonderfully active, clean animal that an obscure, though talented, American physician, obtains the lymph that is doing so much for the depleted energies of strenuous mankind. This physician was the logical successor of Hammond, Pasteur, Brown-Sequard and Koch. He did not evolve an anti-toxin nor did he attempt to create a new vaccine. He did not extract a lymph from a dead animal, but his plan provided for the extraction of the lymph from the goat while alive, and then, by chemical means, prolong the existence of the little life-cells and strengthen them to the fullest extent before using them as a lymph in the application of the greatest triumph in animal therapy to the use of mankind.

The Library Table

Mrs. M'Lerie. The Century Company has issued the latest work of J. J. Bell, author of "Wee Macgregor," a volume called "Mrs. M'Lerie." Not since J. M. Barrie tickled our sense of humor with "A Window in Thrums" has there been any Scottish writer who could claim to rival him in subtle insight and gentle wit as does Mr. Bell. Mrs. M'Lerie is a quaint and delightful old soul, a Scotch Mrs. Partington in her misuse of familiar words and inclined to be talkative. So is her neighbor and daily visitor, Mrs. Munro, and between sups of "dishes of tea," they gossip over the happenings in the neighborhood and give occasional glimpses of the homely, simple life in the M'Lerie and Munro households. Mrs. M'Lerie's unconscious bulls and her placid remarks to all corrections, "Awheel, it's a' yin," are deliciously funny, as, for instance:

"Ay, it was a' that—a shock to ma nervous cistern, as the doctor said to Mistress Scott when she fell down the washin' house steps intil a byne o' sopey watter." When Mrs. M'Lerie returns from a visit to the coast, she receives a call from her friend. "An ye gaed doon the watter yer lane, Mistress M'Lerie?" "Ay," returned Mrs. M'Lerie, laying down her cup, "but if I wis leevin' to be a centurion I wud never gang ma lane again." "Ye mean a centenary—yin that leeves to be a hunner year auld." "Awheel, it's a' yin." On one of her visits Mrs. Munro finds her old friend ill and depressed and trying to cure herself by a patent medicine. "I've taken seven boxes of the pills, and I'm nae better," she observed with a sigh. "An' the paper says sax boxes is suffecient to effect a cure in the maist convex cases." "Eh? Oh, ay; ye mean complex cases. Complex is anither word for confused." "Awheel, it's a' yin. * * * It's a wunner I'm leevin' yet. It maun be whit they ca' a spayciael dispensary o' Providence that—" "Ye mean dispensation, Mistress M'Lerie?" "Aweel, it's a' yin." When Mrs. M'Lerie brought a raffle ticket she expresses doubts as to her "man's" approval. "Mony's the time I've heard him say he wud as shin pit money on a horse race intil a disruption sale." "Subscription sale," interpolates Mrs. Munro. "Aweel, it's a' yin. An' whit's a rattle (raffle) but a disruption sale?" Mrs. Dumphy, while calling on Mrs. M'Lerie, tells her sympathetic friend of a recent illness. Mrs. M'Lerie—"Sirs the day! Wis the cauld in yer kist?" Mrs. Dumphy—Na. The doctor said there wis some information aboot ma—ma—ma—'deed, I furegit whit he ca'ed it. It's the wee rid wagglin' thing at the back o' yer mouth. Mrs. M'Lerie—I ken what ye mean, Mistress Dumphy, though I furegit the name o' it. It's the wee thing that keeps the meat frae gaun doon the wrong wey. Whit's this they ca' it, noon? * * * I ken fine if I cud just mind it. Mrs. Dumphy—I had it on the pint of ma' tongue the noo, but it slippit awa'. Mrs. M'Lerie—I ken! It's alluvial yee're thinking o'! Yer alluvial, Mistress Dumphy.

The recital of Mrs. M'Lerie's trials with her husband during his convalescence after a slight illness is very amusing. He will take neither medicine nor the nourishment ordered by the doctor. "Sirs the day!" she sighed to herself. "Whit am I to dae wi' him? I'm thinkin' he's maybe a wee thing better the nicht, but he's needin' saft nourishment, an' he'll no' tak' it. * * * Dearie me! An' he ca'ed ma bewtifu' tapioca hens' meat—hen's meat! * * * I cannot thole ony longer," she thought. "I'll awa' oot an' see if I can get Doctor M'Haffie to come the noo, an' see whit's to be done. Rubbert'll no' come to ony hairm his lanesome." The doctor arrives and after a visit of five minutes pronounces her husband better. On Mrs. M'Lerie's return to the kitchen, Mr. M'Lerie sat up in his chair. "I tell't ye I wis better, Sarah! Did he say I wis to get the toasted cheese?" "Na, no, the nicht, Rubbert. But he said ye cud get a wee chope if ye wis wantin' it." "A wee chope? H'm. Weel, that's better nor hen's meat onywey. Ay. I'll tak' a chope—no'an awfu' wec yin, ye ken." Mrs. M'Lerie almost flew to the butcher's, and less than half an hour later the chop was before her husband. "Dod, Sarah, but that' guid!" he said, as he mopped up the gravy with a chunk of bread. It was not till he had finished that he noticed she had eaten nothing. "Ye maun ha'e yer supper, wumman," he said, looking genuinely distressed. "I'm gaun to ha'e tapioca," she returned, going over to the oven. "Na, na," he cried excitedly, "ye maun ha'e somethin' else. Ye'll be over hungry fur tapioca. Here, Sarah, here! Never heed—"

But Mrs. M'Lerie was gazing in amazement at the pudding dish, which did not contain a vestige of tapioca. Her husband's face was fiery, and he looked like a child taken in a fault. "Aw, Sarah!" he murmured foolishly. But Sarah had dropped into a chair and, with the dish in her lap, was rocking to and fro in a paroxysm of laughter. "Aw, Sarah, I cudna—I cudna help it," he stammered. "Ye—ye've left me the m-medicine onyway," she cried, and laughed again. But soon she saw that her partner of nearly half a century was shamefaced and miserable. She rose, put the dish aside, and brought down his pipe and tobacco from the mantelpiece. "Ye'll be wantin' yer smoke, noo, Rubbert * * * I'm rale gled ye're better." Perhaps it was because of his failing sight that he took her hand along with the pipe and tobacco.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist. No. 9

"I feel quite gratified at the attention paid me by the communication you published in your last News Letter, and signed "Resident." Any one who causes a laugh is really doing a clever thing, and how my man Roger did laugh when I made him read to me the Resident letter. I told him I would permit him to reply to it, but he begged my pardon, and said he did not care to do so, since in his opinion it was not worth it. Roger is really developing under my training into being a critical fellow, but I had to tell him I could not allow him to have any opinions in future. I pay him to do other things than have opinions. I permitted it this time, since his idea agreed so perfectly with mine. I find here identically the same condition of affairs existing as exist at home—one may be insolent to their superiors, but must be polite to those below them in the social scale. My position—who I am and what—I have tried hard to tell before. I am a tourist. I have told where to find the genealogy of a Travers, and I stay here because I like to, and if my criticisms bore, they may go unread by the bored, and "plain speech and frankness," while not being always dangerous, is generally unpleasant to those whose shortcomings are, don't you know, sort of rasped. No! I don't dine in Taverns in Fleet street, or elsewhere—persons of Roger's class, and, in fact, others of the lowlier classes may. My class may take a bite and a wet out of curiosity, but we don't dine in such places; and since we are the only personages who know the distinction between dining and eating, the tavern question is truly not worth a farthing. I have tried to dine at some of your so-called French restaurants here in the past week, and have acquired a beggarly case of dyspepsia. Beastly places, wretched food, ill mannered, drinking and loud costumes. Maybe these places are in part the reason that you folks here go in so heavy for patent stomach and liver medicines. I have seen fairly nice-looking youths and misses here dining in cellar establishments and the policemen did not raid them. I have found a place or two that looked and felt clean, but not the places with the suggestive lift or the kind with the New York French names. I don't really think I care about any more of these experiences, even with Roger to "chaperon" me. The more, don't you know, you gild the unmentionable things of life the more noticeable you make them. It seems to me, that trying too hard to hide anything sort of calls attention, as it were, to the effort. I have sown my crop of oats; they were sown quietly, by gad, and I shall harvest them in secrecy. My opinion really is that in seeding your crop of oats, one of these establishments is deucedly poor ground. The lift man knows what your game is when he takes you up, and any one who sees you come down guesses what crop you have been sowing. A gentleman should avoid even the appearance of indiscretion if he desires to associate with people of gentle breeding and good manners. He owes this much to his position. I am inclined to regard indiscretion, and maybe something worse, as being a close family relation to the places that gave me and Roger our disgust and indigestion.

Eating is at best a rather vulgar and offensive thing, and among those people whose sensibilities are easiest shocked, the greatest delicacy in choice of food and manners of consumption obtain. It is the gourmand who feeds in public in these places. He is usually not a gentleman. It is the gourmet that dines in privacy and with delicacy.

The humble agriculturist is chortling in his glee,
He's as merry as a cricket, and as noisy as can be.
For the rattle of the raindrops signifies as sure as beans,
The rattle of the eagles in the pockets of his jeans.

And we, poor city people, can't afford to dance and shout—
There is trouble with the larder, and an air of painful doubt,
For we contemplate with worry and a trouble that's intense,
The farmer's pleasing market at a dollar sixty cents.

Teachers want higher wages in Alameda County.
Dear me, I always fancied that the teaching profession was its own reward. To judge by the beautiful altruistic sentiments expressed at teachers' institutes the lovely pedagogues, for of course they are almost all lovely, pursue the raw-nosed offspring of the common or garden citizen, for the sole and exclusive purpose of doing them good. These demands for cash returns, therefore, are somewhat discouraging.
When the teachers ask for remuneration, however, to put them on an equality with lawyers and physicians, they make a great mistake, for neither of these professions offer anything like corresponding rewards to the young practitioners, and the teachers have, moreover, always ahead of them the lucrative and seductive profession of matrimony.

Dr. Jordan is a strong and in some respects almost a great man, but, sad to tell, he possesses the almost boundless capacity of the college president for pure and unmitigated twaddle. These gentlemen all worship at the shrine of the commonplace, and the general commercialist in whose hands lie the present destinies of the State University is particularly gifted as an apostle of the ordinary. Just imagine a man of Dr. Jordan's ability going all the way to New Haven, Connecticut, in mid-winter, too, to say, "For those students who have no serious interest in their studies it is a matter of little consequence what the college does." Any old maid would have sat on the piazza in sunny California and done just as well.

The Supreme Court decision relating to the taxation of the franchises of banking corporations in San Francisco means a great increase of income to the municipality. Every member of this gang goes about with the look of a terrier before a rat-worry.
The extra cash might be of some value to the city, but it won't. Such of it as does not find its way into the hands of the race-track crowd will go into the pockets of the masters whom the anger of Providence and the enthusiasm of a virtuous mob inflicted upon us last November. Whatever may be said as to the results of the decision, no exception can be taken to the opinion of Justice Angellotti, which was the clearest and most logical, as well as the best written summary I have read for some time.

The Board of Fire Commissioners reports that they are in need of more horses for the department.
The Board strikes me as being slightly mistaken.
What is really wanted is fewer donkeys.

Griffiths' barber testified that his actions were peculiar. That should be sufficient testimony. Any man who can afford to be peculiar to his barber must be either non compos or exceptionally daring. To most of us a barber is a potentate in whose presence we are obliged to put on a bated breath and whispering humbleness. A man that can be autocratic and peculiar with his barber would face any peril without the slightest hesitation. Such a one would even venture to ask a local policeman the way or demand a transfer from a car conductor without saying "Please!" Griffiths was mad—his barber says so. Should the verdict be otherwise, shaving will be dangerous for the jury.

Up goes the price of wheat, and bread will jump still higher. This is the way that the deus ex machina of modern commerce teaches us that we cannot get away from one another. There will be a scarcity in some of the families in Tar Flat because Japan chooses to make a row in the Far East. The various charities will demand more money from each of us, individually, because the Muscovite and the slant-eyed Asiatic have a private bone to pick. This matter of war will lose in interest and gain in point if we are to be thus afflicted, and the futile efforts of benighted humanitarians at The Hague will receive a little more attention.

It is one thing to provide the local artists with a room at the Park Museum in which to exhibit their pictures; it is another to compel the public or any part thereof to buy pictures. There is much talk about encouraging local art; the only effective way is to buy the pictures of local artists, and unless this is done, all the pink teas and amateur criticism will only make more evident the importunate facts of a slack waist belt and an urgent landlord. If we want to make San Francisco an art center, we must either buy pictures or convert the painters and sculptors into Christian Scientists.

A certain individual was before the courts lately on a charge of not supporting his family. This gentleman not only did not work, but he actually devoured the food with which his neighbors supplied his children. This is a humanitarian age, one in which the back of the brute is held to be sacred. The cat o' nine tails would outrage our moral sense, but we allow a monster to practically devour his own offspring. This sort of humanitarianism is written more briefly and truthfully as "humbbug."

What untrustworthy guides these spirits are!
Fritz Solomon's sister's ghost persuaded him to the purchase of two thousand shares of worthless oil stock and queer medicine, number of bottles not mentioned, at ten dollars a bottle. He grew tired of the advice at the end of three years. I should like to have heard Fritz's remarks if his sister, when alive, had ventured an opinion either on oil stock or medicine.

Mrs. John Martin, who recently won her case in the Oakland courts, and who, while not the most dignified, is perhaps the most eloquent of her sex in the State, says of the Oakland police: "The whole police department from top to bottom is corrupt."
This sounds so suspiciously like the truth that one wonders how on earth Mrs. Martin found it out.

Commissioner Reuben Lloyd has proposed to fix the maximum age of employment in the Park grounds at forty. What would the distinguished Commissioner suggest should be done with the obsolete quadragenarians, and as one who comes with in the proscribed age limit, will he be the first to resign his commissionership?

Dear Bessie: The first week in Lent is, as you know, always very dull, especially if the season has been a gay one, which having been the case this year, those who were left in town seemed only too thankful for the rest and quiet it has brought. I say those in town, for the smartest of the smart set were all down at Del Monte for the polo games and the pony races, and having an exceedingly good time among themselves, and many are still away. Julia tells me there was such a crowd that the house was uncomfortably full, and that aside from the interest in the polo tournament, which seemed to center in Tom Driscoll, a man named Ezra from British India, and the Englishman, Captain Neil Haig, the succession of gorgeous gowns most of the women wore, was the grandest sight; while to see the wearers in the ball-room one would think they had none of them done the two step for a month at least. It was too bad that so many of the polo players came to grief, for Tom Driscoll and Mr. Ezra will be laid up with the injuries they received for some time to come.

The father of his country came to the front on Monday, when several things were given in his honor. The Press Club women made merry in the costumes of colonial days at Century Hall on Monday night, and at the Presidio the ladies of the 28th Infantry had a George Washington reception, while across the bay Mills College appeared upon the scene after a long rest from social pleasures, and gave a reception colonial in character, the receiving party wearing costumes of the 18th century. So, you see, George Washington was not forgotten, even if the weather was about as disagreeable as it could be. Other events of the week can be very briefly summed up; Mrs. H. M. A. Miller, who is among the earliest of the home comers from Del Monte, gave a luncheon on Wednesday; Miss Palmanter of Oakland had a large luncheon party in the palm garden of the Palace yesterday; last night Mrs. Joseph Masten gave a reception at Century Hall, the first large affair since Lent began, and to-night every one is going to Donald de V. Graham's concert, which is to be his farewell to San Francisco.

Speaking of the Presidio, the ladies of the 10th Infantry gave a hop last Friday night, and the last regular hop under the old regime came off there the Tuesday night before. Lily tells me that the officers of the lately arrived regiments are making arrangements for something on a larger scale in that line which will materialize directly after Lent, so there is something to look forward to. Major Stephenson has his sisters here on a visit at his quarters at the Presidio, and I believe they are to be here some time; the Major is so popular and has made so many friends among the girls of the city they are sure to give the young ladies a good time while here.

Folks have not yet settled as to what they shall do to keep themselves alive during the dull days of sackcloth and ashes, but from all I hear I think it will be cards, which have been quite a factor in the gatherings of the swim the past few weeks. Bridge has sprung into almost instant popularity, and to acknowledge that you do not know the game, you might as well go away and take a very back seat. And what do you think? We are to have Sunday afternoon bridge parties as well as Sunday teas, until Easter, at all events. Five hundred has its votaries, too, but it does not seem to have caught on to the same extent; then, again, there are a good many so wedded to seven-handed euchre they will not even look the same way bridge is being played, as they both often are at the same parties. Apropos of five hundred, Mrs. M. A. Newell gave a five hundred party last week for her sister, Mrs. Ed. Robinson, who, with her husband, has just returned from the Philippines. Lieutenant Robinson is in the 28th Infantry, and is stationed at the Presidio. The three Bull girls, Edith, Marie and Kathleen, were among the guests; they have just got back from Manila, and are off again to Europe.

The Doctor's Daughters are up to their eyes in work preparing for the horse show and circus they will give at the new riding club on the 25th and 26th of March. The boxes are all sold to the very cream of the swim, and the attendance promises to be wonderful. But just think of the attractions! Tony Hellman is to be the clown; Billy Smith (as he is called) will give some feats of horsemanship; some of the belles and beaux will appear as waitresses and peanut sellers, besides which there will be tandem teams; the horse in all its beauty will be on parade, and there will be no end of side shows.

There is a good deal of curiosity manifested as to just how long the Peter Martins are to remain with us. Some say it will be only a few weeks, others that they will be here till summer, if not longer; anyhow, they have taken a house at San Mateo, and so will be in touch with all the gay doings at Burlingame, which little settlement, by the way, gives promise of being more like the Burlingame of former years than it was last summer. For one thing, Mrs. Henry Scott will be back again, and she, as you know, is a whole team in herself, and indefatigable in getting things going. I heard yesterday that she and Laura McKinstry were on their way home from Japan, where they were when the war broke out and frightened them away, as they did not intend to come so soon.

Mamie has been telling me of a pretty wedding that she was at last week in Alameda, which took place at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. I. Ward Eaton—who I think you know—on San Antonio avenue. Miss Marjorie Moore was the bride and Hugh H. Brown the groom, and the Reverend Bradford Leavett officiated under a bower of smilax lit up with red electric bulbs. I went over to Oakland Saturday evening to the opening of the Art Exhibit of the Starr King Frat, which being an invitation reception, was quite an affair. Oaklanders always enter heart and soul into whatever they attempt—one must say that for them—and the creme de la creme were on hand, of course.

J. W. Byrne is home after quite a visit he and Mrs. Irvine paid to New York. Mrs. Montague—Daisy Paige as was—has come back from New York like another creature.

Ethel Cohen Bent has got off at last and gone to Fort Logan C. Root, where Captain Bent is stationed. I hear that "Chalk" is very much pleased with his new station, which is near Little Rock, and thinks Ethel will be equally so, for the people are said to be hospitality itself in Little Rock, and specially fond of the army folks. The De Youngs, which includes Helen and Connie, are off again on their travels; they seem unable to stay at home for any great length of time, traveling is to them such a pleasure, and now they are going East, but will spend some little time down South en route. Mrs. De Young has, I hear, something up her sleeve in the entertainment line for after Easter. The Covington Johnsons—Caroline Rixford, you know—are going to spend a year abroad, leaving here about the middle of March; they go first to Europe, and home by Asia, if the war permits. Mr. and Mrs. John F. Merrill left on the steamer China yesterday for a trip to Honolulu, expecting to return early in May; Mrs. John S. and Ruth went with them. Mary Bailey is, I hear, having the time of her life over in China with her aunt, Mrs. Fearon. Poor little girl, I hope so, and that the war will not interfere with her fun, as it seems to do with the arrangements of so many. They say Mrs. Downey Harvey and her daughters, Maud and Genevieve, will be here in April, which I will believe when I see them—it has so often been said before that they were coming.

What do you think of Southard Hoffman coming back here to settle down and remain? There's joy for you. I daresay he has had enough of Honolulu to last him awhile. The Whitelaw Reids and D. O. Mills will be here in a few days, but will, as usual, spend all the time of their stay down at Millbrae; the Schroeders and Eugenie Hawes, who arrived from their tour of the world last week, have been down at Belmont visiting Mrs. Phelps; the Charles Fernalds have been up for a week's visit from Santa Barbara; the Watkins go back to Sausalito next week. Mabel has had a good time in town this winter, but is not sorry to return home, she says. Mr. and Mrs. Willie Kip returned a few days ago from seeing Mary married in Omaha; they spent some time with her and Doctor Robinson in Kansas City, which is to be Mary's future home; Lilly McCalla came with them. Mrs. Lansing has gone back to her home, Fernside, Alameda. You know, she has been over at the St. Dunstan all winter.

L. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Dickson, Mr. Harry West, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sharp, Mr. John Walthorf, Doctor Stribolt.

Major and Mrs. Darling and Miss Hastings have departed for the East, en route for Europe, for an absence of several years. Florence, Italy, will be their winter home.

The recent developments in the Pleasance will case show that the remarkable old negress, who in her life time was ever planning surprises, planned the greatest surprise of all to afford food for sensations after her body was in the grave. Since her death two wills have made their appearance, one willing everything to the Bell children and the last one giving her all to the Sherwoods. It is said, however, that the will which will be admitted to probate is the one now in the possession of Senator Moorhouse, the attorney of Sam Davis of Carson City, as it provides for her grandson, Theodore Stewart.

Of course, under the laws of California, a will which does not provide for living descendents is void. If the proofs are sufficient to establish his claim, the will in which he is mentioned will bowl the others over.

There also appears on the scene Mrs. Curtis of Washington, D. C. She has one-eighth colored blood in her veins, and during her life-time was the confidential friend and advisor of Mrs. Pleasance. She was associated with Mrs. Potter Palmer in the World's Fair at Chicago, and is in charge of the Colored exhibit of the St. Louis exposition. She is a woman of remarkable attainments, a personal friend of Mark Hanna in his life-time, and a public speaker from the platform for the Republican party, doing her work among the negro element. She has received letters from Mrs. Pleasance ordering her to come to San Francisco and back the will in which her grandson is interested. She is in possession of the necessary proofs, and is apparently backed by liberal funds. It is said that Mrs. Pleasance furnished her the money to collect the proofs and present the evidence.

When Miss Hall was married years ago in this city Mrs. Pleasance superintended the wedding at the church, and up to that time it was the swellest society event of the kind the town had ever seen. Clad in white silk at that time, heading the bridal procession, was a tiny little girl scattering flowers in the bride's path. The little girl, who at that time was nearly as much in evidence as the bride, has since grown to be Mrs. Curtis, the lady who is now in this city establishing the claims of the grandson of Mrs. Pleasance.

The Looker-On

In speaking to the chaperon

I'd use the most entrancing phrase,
The brightest smile, the sweetest tone,
The latest charm, the newest grace,
And all that art can teach or show
To win her to my side, you know.

But speaking to that other one

I should not use the slightest wile,
The crudest, simplest truth alone
Should grace my voice, should deck my
Then if she chose to love, you see, [smile,
It would be plain that she loved me.

Only one of the daily papers gave notice to that banquet of Mayor Schmitz and his appointees, at which the political future of the city was considered, debated and settled. It was a notable gathering, at which the guests (all with salaries drawn) were required to exercise much diplomatic finesse to the end that they should not honor the Mayor more than Abe Ruef, nor Ruef more than the Mayor. Having had considerable training to this end, they all acquitted themselves creditably. The motif of the gathering, it is said, was the presentation of a gold badge to Fire Commissioner Boyne, who had just been elected President of his board. Whether there was more satisfaction in honoring Boyne than in "passing up" Parry is questionable. It is my own opinion that the real object of the banquet, and the real reason for the hilarity and general good-fellowship there displayed was "the passing of Parry." He was there, to be sure, but he was as a death's head at the feast. His mental state and political condition may be compared to the appearance of a chicken during the moulting season. All his tail feathers had been plucked, his crest had fallen, and his appearance was woe-begone, and but a sorry reminder of his former pomp and glory. Parry had planned with all his cunning to be elected president of the Fire Commission, but he rode to political discomfiture, if not disgrace, upon that colt which he "gave away." The Mayor could neither forgive nor forget the colt; hence the downfall of Parry. The opponents of Schmitz may blame him for many things, among which are several appointments for which he is responsible. He will do much, however, to re-establish himself in the good graces of his critics, if he will now bury Parry so deep that he will never be heard from more. As the French say, Parry is impossible.

The report comes from Chicago that Andy Lawrence has lost some of his peacock feathers. Hearst has found it necessary to hand over the management of his Chicago paper to Foster Coates, formerly of New York. Coates is now down at Del Monte, thawing out after a hard winter in the city by the lake. His main object in directing the American will be to win back some of the friendship and esteem his employer may have enjoyed in Chicago before Lawrence turned the editorial rooms of the American into a bureau for the creation of enemies. Andy fell out with Carter Harrison, and with several other big Democrats, and Hearst found that his chances of support from the Cook County Democracy were growing slimmer in direct proportion to the personal interest taken by his editor in political affairs. So Lawrence was relieved from his editorial duties, and now he is on what is known as "the Presidential staff." That is composed of men who may be permitted to submit suggestions, but who are not permitted to hammer them into the heads of Democratic leaders with an editorial hammer. It is said that when Coates was sent to relieve Lawrence, Hearst remarked: "I'm tired of running a manufactory for the creation of enemies. I tried that in California. It doesn't pay."

Little Tommy Walsh is back from Washington, a couple of hundred dollars to the good. When he went to the Capitol as Special Deputy Registrar, and guardian of the ballots in the Kahn-Livernash contest, he drew mileage at the rate of ten cents a mile, and pocketed about $350, which was presented to him by Uncle Sam. During his attendance before the House Committee, lasting about three weeks, he was allowed $25 a day for expenses. When it was all over, he had enough money left to visit New York, Boston and other places, get his return ticket and arrive here with some $200 left. Walsh is a financier.

The press reports regarding the probabilities of a contest in this city between Jeffries and Sharkey reminds me of a good story on the sailor lad. Sharkey opened a saloon in New York some years ago, and fitted it up without regard to expense. He put in nickel-in-the-slot machines, electric banjos, graphophones, a piano, automatic organs and other noisy appliances. One evening he was showing a friend around the place, boasting of its many attractions, and said: "Isn't it all right? Haven't I got here everything a man could think of?"

"Well, Tom," said the friend, "I would suggest just one addition."

"What's that?" said Sharkey; "if it's all right, I'll get it."

"I think you should have a great big chandelier, bigger than any other in New York," said the friend.

"Yes, that's so, that's so," said Sharkey. "I've thought of that, too. The trouble is I don't know any one who can play the — thing."

To Mr. Burrell White, my apologies. His note to the editor last week is clear in its denial that he did not accompany Tom Clunie to the Santa Cruz Mountains in the summer of 1898. Of course, then, it is apparent that I was mistaken in the identity of Mr. Clunie's companion at that time. Yet, the mistake, I may say, was excusable. Mr. Clunie's companion at Jeffreys was a Mr. White. No one there knew him, nor do many of the old friends of Clunie know Burrell G. White. The sameness of the family name led me to the conclusion that the White, of the mountains, and the White, of the denial, were the same. Executor White's protest, however, shows that the man at Jeffreys was "the color of another horse."

That note of denial gives food for thought. Mr. White says he did not accompany Clunie in 1898, and that he had not even met the millionaire at that time. Clunie went to the mountains again in 1899 or 1900, and again he was accompanied by a friend. Of course, Mr. Burrell G. White was not the man, then, for he says he never heard of Jack Clunie until after the death of his father by adoption, and Jack was at the resort on the occasion of Clunie's second visit. To those who knew Clunie for years, it seems passing strange that he should have chosen as an executor of his will and as a trustee for the fortune he left the boy, not one of his old friends and associates, like Judge Bridgford, but a man who, from his own statement, had never met him as recently as 1898. It also seems strange that Mr. White should have been made a trustee for a minor of whom he had never heard, until, after Clunie's death, his will showed that he had left a fortune to the lad. Mr. White has had an honor thrust upon him.

To those who have watched the progress of affairs in connection with the settlement of the Fair estate, the announcement that Charley Neal has "passed out" does not come as a surprise. The firm hand of Mrs. Herman Oelrichs has been apparent for some time past in arranging the disposition of the dollars left by her father and her brother. It was rumored some time since that she had withdrawn the power of attorney given her husband, and gossips also tried to spread the story that the domestic relations of the Oelrichs were not ideal. Prompt denials, however, laid low both these tales. No denial was made of the statement that Mrs. Oelrichs was taking more than a passive interest in the settlement and development of her properties. As Tessie Fair, she was known as a girl of firm character.

Like her father, she is willing to put a fortune in an investment, but she wants to know what becomes of the money. She expects her managers to show good reasons for the expenditures charged to her account. That was one of the causes leading to a feeling of discontent with Neal about the time of the presentation of the accounts against Charley Fair's estate. Joe Harvey was allowed $100,000; Neal put in a bill for $50,000, which was allowed; Seymour was given a goodly sum, and the lawyers also got a big slice. All these demands went through without protest, after the return of Mrs. Oelrichs to the East. She was dissatisfied. And now comes the story that Neal had been relieved from his position of manager of the Fair properties. It is said a New York man will be sent here to take charge of Mrs. Oelrichs' interests. Mr. Oelrichs, it is also said, contemplates a trip to Paris during the coming summer.

The hill residents at Sausalito have formed a club for their especial and exclusive entertainment. They have hired a house on one of the upper roads overlooking the bay, have installed a steward who knows his business, and now they don't care whether it rains every night or not—for they have their own little house and their own congenial crowd, and it is no longer necessary to catch the after-dinner boat for a flying trip to town, whenever the desire arises for mild dissipation, such as a club affords.

Among the evidences of the greatness of California to be exhibited at the St. Louis Exposition will be a photograph of a number of Olympians swimming in the surf, and parading the ocean beach in their bathing suits on Christmas day. Now, as I remember the original print of that photograph, the most attractive feature in it were the noble legs of William Greer Harrison. William Greer was the leader of the crowd of clubmen at the beach. He wore a bathing suit, over which, the photograph shows, he had thrown an overcoat for a saunter up the strand. The overcoat flapped in the wind, exposing to a wondering world the pedestals upon which William Greer has mounted to fame. You talk about the pillars that uphold the house of Hager! Well, they may be exhibits of what is indigenous to the soil, but when one comes to consider what may be developed in this land of wonderful things, then the Harrisonian pedometers stand second to no man's—or woman's, either. They are sui generis. That is to say, they are "the limit." No man with that pair of legs could help being great. Hence the greatness of William Greer Harrison. By the way, I wonder if any one ever had the temerity to call him "Billy."

Horseback riding is becoming a very popular pastime among professional and business men. Occasional visits to Burlingame, during the hunting season, have aroused the ambition of many men of heavy girth, and now, on any pleasant Saturday or Sunday, and frequently during the early hours from Monday to Friday, one may observe in the Park, or at the beach, the coming cavaliers of society galloping along with those who find satisfaction enough in the exercise, and yearn not for anise seed bags for the adornment of their mantels. Among the regular riders are Charley Hanlon, Sam Leak, George Knight, Reuben Lloyd, Jim McNab, Bob Bolton, Field the jeweler, and several members of the Concordia Club. Every man of them knows all about saddlery, all have become first-class farriers, and no student of pedigrees could tell more about Hambletonians and other stock than they. Sam Leak says he has the best and most intelligent pacer that ever came down the pike. To prove it, he will tell his animal to call for a drink, and the horse will hammer on the steps of the road house with his right fore-foot. But then, along will come Charley Hanlon, and he is ready to make affidavit before Judge Troutt that his particular sugar-eating equine is the only thing on hoofs that knows his business. The disputation may be interesting until George Knight gallops up, and in his trumpet tones announces that the other fellows really don't know what they are talking about, and insists that he, and he alone, and his favorite saddle horse are the real thing. Of late, Knight seems to be devoting nearly all his time to driving. He, Reuben Lloyd and Jim McNab are the finest figures on horseback known to the Park. If there are others, send in their names, and no doubt we can get up a voting contest—for all the girls, you know, dearly love a handsome cavalier.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

GRAND—The Game Keeper.
COLUMBIA—Denman Thompson. The Old Homestead. Good.
ORPHEUM—Splendid vaudeville.
CALIFORNIA—The management still disregarding the interests of the public.
ALCAZAR—Clever, amusing, presentation of The Wrong Mr. Wright.
FISCHER'S—Continued success of Roly Poly. —last week.
TIVOLI—Last week of When Johnny Comes Marching Home. Crowded houses.
CHUTES—One of the best shows ever seen at this house.

Denman Thompson comes to us as an old friend, and, as such, he should have been welcomed, but the houses are poor, while the performance is good. The "Joshua Whitcomb" is as well played as ever, and like old wine, it increases in value with the age of the portrayer. Added years but help this actor, and the sweetness and simplicity, the helpful old man in homespun is enhanced.

Mr. Fred Clare as "Happy Jack" is the only other character deserving special mention, although the rest of the support is fair. The parts in which the various ladies and gentlemen are cast are not such as to bring out any brilliant latent powers that may dwell in the actor or actress.

"The Old Homestead Double Quartette" is a delight to the audience, and as of old, the scene showing Grace Church at night is a triumph of the scene painter's art. The mechanical effects in lighting are fine.

It is probably the last time we shall see old Denman Thompson, and when he is gone, we may as well mourn Joshua Whitcomb, for it will be many a day before we are given the opportunity of again seeing so true a portrayal.

* * *

Another surprise was given the habitués of the Alcazar in the presentation of "The Wrong Mr. Wright." The entire company showed an astounding degree of versatility. The work of Mr. Durkin, as the erratic Seymour Sites, who assumes the name of Wright, and who becomes entangled with a female detective, was easily the best we have seen on the Alcazar stage. Miss Block's "Henrietta Oliver" was an excellent piece of mimicry, and I suspect the lady is a flirt. The part seems to come to her so naturally. Maher as the degenerate Lord Brazenface, captured the house, and whenever he and Durkin held the boards the fun was fast and furious. Miss Gordon and Miss Starr divided honors in two very pretty parts, in which mistress and maid alternate. Mr. Walter Belasco's detective was not as happy a piece of work as some of the parts he has been cast in. He makes a splendid French waiter, a good old butler, and an ideal confidential servant, but when it comes to him to be a grenadier of the guard or a detective, his work is rank.

He is the funniest soldier that ever stepped on any stage, and as a detective is defective.

* * *

"Roly-Poly" has had a good run at Fischer's, and the one more week it has to go will probably show up as well in the matter of tickets sold as any preceding it. Next Sunday night, marks the farewell appearance of Kolb and Dill, and the house is sure to be crowded to its fullest capacity by those who desire to bid farewell to these two popular mummies.

It has been a lucky thing for these gentlemen that San Francisco was given a chance to render judgment between Weber & Fields and themselves, and that judgment is an almost unanimous verdict that the "imitation article" far surpassed the "original."

* * *

The California runs right along the uneven tenor of its way dishing out barn-storming melodrama. Some bright day some individual may bring suit for obtaining money under false pretenses, and assassination of the finer sensibilities, and if it is a jury trial, there is sure to be some heavy damages assessed.

* * *

Thomas J. Smith is doing stunts at the Grand in a play called "The Gamekeeper." It is an indifferent proposition indifferently done.

Smith gives us an imperfect Irish brogue for half the play, and for the rest lapses into English. The innovation of a cake-walk by Baby Patti, while Smith is singing an Irish song, is an original idea, but rather shocking to our ideals. O! for another Scannan or a Katie Emmet! The only star in "The Gamekeeper" is the dog, the Irish setter Barney. He does his part to perfection. Ed. Van Murnel sings well, and gave small audiences much pleasure.

* * *

"The King of the Opium Ring" awakens the enthusiasm of the classical audience at the Central, and that house is doing fine business. The scenic effects are fine, and the play will have a good run.

* * *

The tramp, tramp of marching feet and the martial music, the excruciatingly funny make-up of Hartman, will cease at the Tivoli with the ringing down of the curtain on Sunday night. "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" has had a phenomenal run, and there are many who will deplore its going as an untimely end.

* * *

"A Break for Liberty" is the next attraction at the Central. It is said to be a very strong play, founded on the escape from jail of two burgling brothers, through the connivance of the jailor's wife, who has fallen in love with one of the above named gentlemen. The play has an additional merit. Both burglars are finally killed.

* * *

"Miss Hobbs"—a play full of dainty drollery—will be given by the Alcazar Stock next week. It was written by Jerome K. Jerome, and that is a guarantee of good, clean, quiet fun. There is a subtle stream of sentiment through the play, and the Alcazar Company should achieve one of its greatest triumphs in the whimsical skit. I predict crowded houses.

* * *

"The Silver Slipper" begins a two weeks' engagement at the Columbia on the night of March 7th. The authors of "Florodora" achieved a triumph in their first play, and many Eastern critics agree in saying it is eclipsed by their second attempt. The company numbers one hundred and twenty-five.

* * *

Coleman and Mexis, who give a marvelous and interesting exhibition of sharp-shooting, will present the act that has won fame on two continents at the Chutes this coming week. James Hennessy, "the monologue man," said to be very amusing, will make his first appearance here, and Kelly and Violette, the "fashionplate singing duo," will change their songs and costumes. Toppel and Klimet, the novelty musical comedians, and the Melnotte sisters, the dashing singing and dancing soubrettes, will vary their specialties, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The animatoscope will show a complete change of moving pictures and the amateurs will appear on Thursday night. New and interesting attractions are to be found in every nook and corner of the Chutes, and the zoo, which is one of the sights of San Francisco, is constantly in receipt of rare and curious animals from all quarters of the globe.

The Orpheum promises something new with the coming week. Nirvana and her trained horse, "Loki," have been imported from Germany. The two will appear in a series of wonderful tableaux. Besides this, there are many new faces and a generally entertaining bill.

* * *

"The Gypsy Baron" will fill the Tivoli to fullest capacity, but it is doubtful if it will reach the run made by "Johnny." The scenery for "The Gypsy Baron" is of elaborate design, and the costuming is gorgeous. This is one of the immortal operas, and if Strauss had never written anything else, this alone would have sent his name thundering down the aisles of the temple of fame.

* * *

Messrs. Kolb and Dill will be replaced at Fischer's by F. Carroll and John P. Kennedy, two well known comedians. The next play to be put on at this house is "The Rounders," one of the great musical successes at the "Casino," New York. Mr. Carroll will play his original role in "The Rounders," that of the Irish Pasha, and Mr. Kennedy will assume the role made famous by Dan Daly. The management promises a lot of fine scenic effects, and the lyrics and music show up splendidly in rehearsals.

* * *

It is announced that Helen Russell will appear as a ballet girl when "The Rounders" is put on. Now, I'll have a chance to see if I am right. I have maintained that her figure was as good, if not better, than Amber's. I hope the management doesn't mean a ballet girl in skirts. God forbid! Make it tight, please!

* * *

Frank Bacon will open to-morrow at the Grand with "The Hills of California." For the public's sake, for the sake of Mr. Bacon, and because the critic is tired of poor shows, we hope Mr. Bacon will lift us all out of the slough of Despond. The advance notice gives us the idea of something good.

William A. Brady has been known so long in connection with his theatrical enterprises that most people suppose him to be much older than he really is. "I'm a former friend of Mr. Brady's," a gentleman remarked to Grace George recently in Washington. "I had a chat and a drink with him thirty-five years ago in San Francisco." "Indeed!" replied Miss George. "Then the drink must have been milk. Thirty-five years ago Mr. Brady was just four years of age!"

Parsifal

Written Especially for the News Letter by Fitzgerald Murphy, Dramatizer of the Work.

"A stupid sacrilege. It would weary a heathen and to a Christian it is disgraceful."—Rev. Dr. Parkhurst.

"A strange mixture, this, of Christianity, Buddhism, morality, immorality and vegetarianism, all spun into a mystic fabric that it brilliant with imaginative gloss."—Rev. Bishop Potter.

Now that San Francisco is soon to witness a production of this great musical classic in dramatic form, the conflicting views of the eminent authorities quoted above, will be of especial interest to local theatre-goers. Only a work of colossal proportions could produce such a commotion. This general hubbub simply demonstrates that the scope of this great art work is encyclopedic—that it runs the gamut of religious emotion. There is no creed, cult, ism, fad or hobby whose adherents do not discern in this drama either the endorsement or antagonism of their pet ideals. The vehement fashion in which all sorts of people find in this work something that impinges on their special way of looking at things, makes it clear that the ideas embodied in "Parsifal" move along the central plane of being. It awakens those chords of emotion that vibrate through the vital centres of human consciousness.

"Parsifal" I consider an art work pure and simple. It is an intellectual ocean into which Wagner poured all the rivers of thought. It is the ripened and mellowed fruit of his genius. A many-sided diamond flashing its variegated rays would be an excellent metaphor to describe this marvelous miracle-play. Different people see differently-colored rays. Some see the blue, some see the red, some see the yellow, some see the violet, ad infinitum—hence the conflict of opinion and controversy that has arisen regarding this masterpiece.

All the aspirations of Germany's national poets and symphonists from Bach to Beethoven, from Weiland to Goethe, are summarized in "Parsifal." If it is to be construed as a sermon, it preaches purity through ignorance, chastity through seclusion, redemption by pity and sacrificial atonement. It reflects the spirit of the Middle Ages.

So much for its ethics. Now for its history. The story of "Parsifal" is not new. Wagner neither created it nor did it originally grow out of Christianity. The legend of a youth who is reared far away from the world's affairs, who first meets them in a state of ignorance and innocence, who ripens in knowledge by prodigious adventures, and who, triumphing over all obstacles, at last gains a throne, in one form or another, has been woven into the folklore of every European people since the heroic age of the Greeks. In the Middle Ages this story was used by monks and poets and warriors as a setting for the myths of the Holy Grail and its quest, and what Wagner has done was to gather into a heap, as it were, all the varying versions of the legend, and select bits from each of them, and fashion the material into an epic of medieval Christianity, colored by his own conception of religion and ethics.

Now, the quest of the Grail is the greatest theme that has come down to us from the early Middle Ages, and it can be regarded as a mirror of thought, the chivalry and the manners of that period. Poets wrote about the Grail, and bards extolled it. It was the vision of the ascetic and the golden goal of knight errant. Tradition said that the Grail was the chalice out of which Christ and his disciples drank at the last supper, and in which the blood from the Savior's wounds, when pierced by the Roman spear, fell as he hung upon the cross. Joseph of Arimathea was supposed to have taken the cup to prison with him, where it miraculously sustained him for years, and he afterwards carried it to England and bequeathed it to his descendants. Tennyson treats of it in his "Idols of the King." Chretien de Troyes sang of the Grail even before Wolfram von Eschenbach, from whose "Parsifal" Wagner borrowed much of the material for the present work.

The opera was first produced at Beyreuth in 1882, and received its first presentation in this country at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, on last Christmas eve, and created the art sensation of the decade. I felt that the theme was a proper one for the dramatic stage, and would be infinitely more interesting when spoken in chaste English in blank verse form than sung in German, and appreciated by the musically cultured few. I feel that my attitude in this matter has been vindicated by the recent announcement of Mr. Richard Mansfield that he would appear in a dramatic version of his own making next season. I prepared my version especially for Mr. Fred Belasco, and at the Alcazar Theatre in this city on the 14th of next month, "Parsifal" in dramatic form will receive its first presentation on any stage.

One of the strangest characters in the play is Kundry, a beautiful incarnation of good and evil; Kling-sor, the magician, in his incantation, calls her, and thus describes her:

"Arise! Draw near to me!
Thy master calls thee, nameless woman—
She-Lucifer! Rose of Hades!
Herodias wert thou!"

The characters are all symbolic. Amfortas represents erring Humanity. Parsifal is Salvation. Kundry is the eternal woman, a mixture of good and evil. The entire play is medieval Christianity symbolized by art.

A. M. Best & Company, of New York, recently issued the following bulletin in connection with Baltimore losses: "The report that claims filed with the committee on adjustments amount to $80,000,000 is again confirmed. It is not, however, an official announcement by the committee, but we have no reason to doubt the accuracy of these figures. The total admitted losses of the companies which have furnished us estimates of the amounts for which they were involved aggregate only about $22,000,000, so that an immense discrepancy exists, and it is evident that many of the companies must have lost many times as much as they admit."

As the smoke and excitement clears away, it begins to be seen that the original estimates as to the amount of insurance losses were far in excess of what the adjusted losses will amount to, and that while the loss is a big one, it will need a much larger one to shake the financial strength of the insurance companies.

There have been no failures outside of the Baltimore companies and the Greenwich and one or two little ones. The smaller companies, which it was expected would topple over like nine-pins, do not up to the present seem to have been severely injured.

The raid of cancellations on California street on the lightweights died almost as soon as it was born.

The non-boarders kept on and are keeping on, and the regulars are not sorry that such is the case, for as matters stand now, the confidence of the local agent and the insurer remain undisturbed.

State supervision has done away in a great measure with the possibility of a conflagration, causing a holocaust of companies. In this day fire insurance companies must have assets which consist of other than chips and whetstones before they can do an extended business. There may be Manhattans, but they fail anyway, losses or no losses, but the general average of fire insurance companies to-day licensed in California are good for the amount of their contracts.

The failure of the Firemens serves simply to point the danger of insuring in a small company just branching out to do an extended and a general business. One of the methods of which at no time have been approved by the more conservative underwriting element.

Fire underwriting is reduced almost to a science, and the company that writes lines within its legitimate carrying capacity and gets tariff rates can weather a worse fire than that of Baltimore.

The Millers and Manufacturers Insurance Company, a Minnesota concern of a hybrid mutual and capital breed, and also the Hamilton Fire of New York, have ceased doing business on account of Baltimore losses. For the first time these two get their names well before the public.

In a measure the fire insurance companies are like banks. Good management being conceded, they will help each other. They do this for more reasons than the one of the question of raising doubt in the minds of policy-holders as to the stability of insurance. They know that insurance capital is needed, and that the field is not too tempting to enlist it.

The careful company, managed by an insurance man who has the confidence of his competitors as to lines, rates and practice, is not permitted to be killed by an over-dose of losses. The mutual interests are too closely allied.

Mr. J. H. Lenehan, general agent of the Western Department of the Phenix, is in the city.

Mr. Paul M. Nippert has received the appointment as general agent in California for the British America of New York.

Mr. M. F. Rohrer, Deputy Insurance Commissioner of the State of California, has been confined to his home for some time with a severe attack of sickness.

There are evidently no amenities among the men who write for insurance periodicals. In an exchange is found the following, which is entitled "Peewee the Worm": "Peewee —, brevet editor of the — and late idiot-in-chief of a paper called —, which died from lack of brain food, imagines he has evolved into a 'glow worm.' Perhaps he has, for he has long given evidence of being buggy, and he has about the same intellectual development as the object of his aspirations. And he shines? Of course; where the lightning bug carries his shining apparatus."

The Park Museum had a fire in the basement with but fortunately little damage. Is it insured—and what is the fire protection outside of the city department, are pertinent questions.

The San Bernardino County Hospital at San Bernardino, and the Loma Prieta planing mill fire at Santa Cruz are a couple of rather hard starters in the loss column.

Colonel L. L. Bromwell, manager of the old reliable Milwaukee Mechanics, reports the receipt of a telegram from President Jones, which states that the Baltimore losses will not exceed $200,000, and also that the claims are being handled by the company's own adjusters and are being paid in cash. This course only harmonizes with the ever sturdy and steady record of the old "Double M," in its treatment of losses, large or small, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Conflagration losses are always provided for by the conservatively managed insurance company by ample reserves, and a large net surplus, both of which made the company absolutely fire proof. In addition to Chicago, Boston and minor wholesale conflagrations, the Milwaukee Mechanics now adds Baltimore to its list of costly experiences in the line of its profession, but undaunted and unruffled, it goes, is pressing its claims upon both agents and insuring public for increased confidence and enhanced premium receipts.

It is to be presumed that half a loaf is better than none, and, therefore, the local automobilists should feel themselves thoroughly thankful to the Park Commissioners for their generosity at the last meeting in passing an ordinance allowing the use of the great highway north to the road that runs back of the Sutro property so that the Cliff House may be reached without coming back to Stanyan.

The Park Commissioners are giving up slowly even curtailing the modest requests made by the officers of the local club at this time.

The new ordinance will go into effect next Wednesday, and every one who holds a permit to the Park should note the new regulations that are required.

One of the most important is that numbers must be carried on both ends of the autos. This is not a hardship, and will tend to make those who are in the habit of speeding to keep within the law.

Now the Automobile Club of California must turn its attention to the main drive; that must be the next and last concession granted, for with that will come the free use of the Park.

The victories of Vanderbilt at Ormond, Fla., has stirred up the American makers. It is said that there is a syndicate being formed in the East among the builders to turn out a machine that will give all the records to the United States. That they will be successful is not at all impossible, when it is considered how many records are already held by American machines.

The Winton Bullet holds all the world's track records, and scored the fastest single mile ever made in competition. The Ford "999" made the straight-away mile in 392-5 seconds on the ice at Lake St. Clair.

The Packard Gray Wolf holds the world's straight-away mile record of 46 2-5 seconds for machines under 1800 pounds, and the Stevens-Duryea the record of 57 1-5 seconds for cars under 1200 pounds.

The Baker electric "White Mouse" has the electric record of 1:00 3-5 for the mile, and the Winton Bull Pup all track records for cars under 1800 pounds up to 10 miles.

The Oldsmobile Pirate has been a world's straight-away record holder, and still holds the track record in its weight class.

Details of the great automobile tour to be held in August was discussed at the annual meeting of the American Automobile Association held last week in Chicago.

The tour is to be from the east, west, north and south to St. Louis, including tributary runs from towns en route.

Boston tourists will meet the New York and Philadelphia owners at Albany, New York, and continue the journey together. These will be joined by automobilists from Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland and other cities, thus forming a procession that will be a continuous march to the Louisiana Exposition.

Here is a chance for some of the local enthusiasts to distinguish themselves. Why would it not be good for the sports here and the name of the State for a contingent from California to take part in this run?

Hubert von Herkoner, a Bavarian artist, has donated a $2,500 trophy to the Bavarian Automobile Club for an annual international challenge contest for touring cars. It will be a challenge trophy to become the possession of the club winning it three times.

In accordance with the donor's wishes, the first year's contest is to be held in Bavaria, the second in England, and the subsequent competitions in the country holding the trophy. The touring car is described as a vehicle which, in construction and operation is capable of covering long distances over all classes of roads at a relatively rapid pace. It must be of pleasing design and comfortable.

The awards will be made for each class in the competition, the amount of fuel consumed and general reliability being taken into consideration. The following classes have been established:

First—To carry a dead load of 1,000 pounds or under.

Second—To carry a dead load of 1,000 to 2,000 pounds.

Third—To carry a dead load of 2,000 to 3,000 pounds.

Fourth—To carry a dead load of 3,000 to 4,000 pounds.

The quiet young man, known as the "Czar," has purchased a 1904 Winton touring car from the Pioneer Automobile Company, and from all reports his winning subjects will have numerous rides.

Mr. J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Company, made the trip to Del Monte on Friday. They reported a delightful trip, which was entirely free from accidents or delays of any sort.

The Automobile Transit Company placed an order with the National Automobile Company for two additional two-cylinder Toledo touring cars, to be used in their rental service.

The Pioneer people expect to receive a carload of new 1904 Wintons this month, all of which are sold, and the purchasers of some anxiously awaiting their arrival. The Pioneer Company also expect to receive a carload of the new models of Oldsmobiles within three or four weeks, as they likewise will receive a carload of Stevens-Duryeas about the same time.

The present office of the Mobile Carriage Company, in the main office of the Palace Hotel, has been removed to larger quarters formerly occupied by the Postal Telegraph Company at the end of the main entrance where it joins the large court.

The Mobile Carriage Company expects this week to move into its new automobile house and garage, corner Golden Gate avenue and Gough streets.

J. B. O'Brien purchased a two-cylinder 20-horsepower Knox touring car from the National Automobile Company, during the past week. Mr. Harvey Dana and Mr. A. J. Samuel are looking forward to the arrival of their two-cylinder Knox touring car.

The automobile buses which the Mobile Carriage Company is providing for the St. Francis Hotel to convey passengers to and from all trains and steamboats are now ready for service.

The National Automobile Company closed an order with James Flood for a four-cylinder Pope-Toledo "Mile-a-Minute" touring car for early delivery.

George A. Turner, a prominent real estate dealer of this city, and Dr. George Burke, of Sessions, are the latest purchasers of Rambler 1904 touring cars.

The Rambler Automobile agency of 1334 Market street, expect a consignment of cars in a few days. They already have one on exhibition.

Mr. Harry H. Hewlett of Stockton, who last week purchased a 1904 Winton touring car, formerly drove a 1902 Winton, which he purchased from Mr. Eugene Murphy of this city for $1500. After driving this car for more than ten months, he sold same for $1350. It is a very noticeable fact that Wintons second-handed, bring better prices proportionately than any other American-built automobiles.

Young Corbett now keeps his Winton touring car busy driving his friends out to his training quarters on the beach. It is rumored that Mr. Corbett is figuring with the Winton people to build him an eighty horse power racing car.

The article in the March Overland Monthly on "Shakespeare's Plays and Public Opinion," contributed to that magazine by L. Ralston Irving, has elicited much interest and comment, being in line with discussions that have been had of late on this subject. The article mentioned is really contributed by Mrs. Samuel Bissinger, of this city, who uses the nom de plume L. Ralston Irving. She has for years been interested in literary subjects, being quite a close student, and has contributed during past years under the said nom de plume to different publications.

A WESTERN PRODUCT.

The Overland Monthly for March comes to the reviewer's desk as a breeze from a Western prairie. There is a virility and a usefulness, a strength and saneness, in its pages that is not to be found in many of the best magazines of the East. It is up-to-date and timely. From its beautiful frontispiece illustrations to its editorials the interest never wanes.

It is Californian to the core, and yet it has not any of the tiresome twaddle about the largest beat or the finest orange. It does not preach that California is superior to any and all other States in the Union, but it sets forth the claims of its State in such a way that the reader always comes to a favorable conclusion regarding the land of sunshine and flowers. In the March issue we have been given a number of articles that are purely Californian. "Fish of the Western Sea" is a splendidly written article on the edible fish of the Pacific. This will give the disciple of Izaak Walton untold pleasure.

The next Californian article is one that appeals to the lover of nature, of woods and flowers, purling brooks and leafy bowers. "The Ojai Valley" (pronounced O high), will be read with pleasure by all intending visitors to California, and it should be a source of pride to the citizens of Ventura in that State, as it is a description of an attractive spot in the county of that name.

"Tule Farming" appeals to the practical farmer, and relates to the reclamation of the great swamp areas of the State of California. It is written by a practical farmer, and as such should be of vast interest to the Eastern agriculturist, to whom the article will be a revelation of the methods employed.

Mexico comes in for an article on "Housekeeping in Mexico," and the quaint ways of the Mexican servants are described by an American housekeeper in the land of perpetual manyana.

There are a number of pages devoted to the Oriental question, and the fiction of the March Overland would be very hard to surpass.

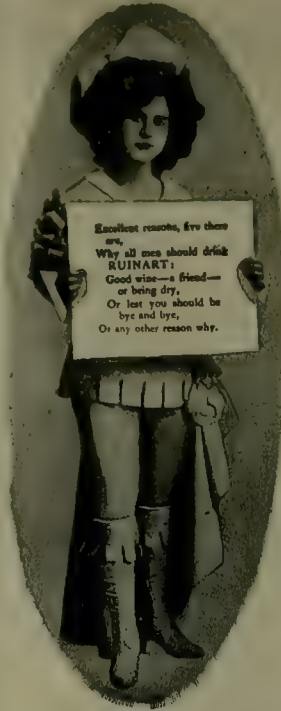

"The Fortunes of the Midas" is a mining story which is an exposition of some of the methods employed by an unscrupulous superintendent to obtain possession of a valuable mine. "Percy, the Ranch Foreman," is a true story of the indomitable pluck of an Iowa boy and his eventual success on a Wyoming ranch. There is a fine description of the "Northwestern Mounted Police," "The Big Butter Buddha" and the "Mushalinda Legend" are Oriental in character, and come at the right time. "The Coming Conflict" deals with the Russo-Japanese war, and will help all who are interested in this matter in a clear understanding of the conditions that face all civilization to-day.

The department of "World's Thought" is full of information, and will be of interest to all who desire to keep in touch with the world's advance.

The editor has two timely articles, "Teaching the Filipino" and "Wireless," the latter is an exposition of the wonderful discoveries made by the great Italian electrician.

The March number of the Overland Monthly is a notable production, but in no feature more than in its illustrations. The Overland Monthly presses are the best that money can buy, and the typographical work is fine. The advertiser and reader is always grateful to the publisher because the reading and advertising pages are cut. The Overland Monthly believes in giving its reader all the comfort it can.

The Niter Beds of California.

Some people are continually harping upon the niter deposits of California, and we have been deluged with letters from time to time asking about them and why they are not now being operated in competition with the great beds of Chile. The niter beds of California are still in their infancy. In extent they are large enough, covering an immense area, but the quantity of the material and its quality are still a matter to be settled. The examination of these lands has so far been superficial, so superficial in fact that it is scarcely correct to class their contents deposits. At some points prospect holes have been sunk with varying results, but they only serve to localize particular measurements on small areas, experience going to show that while the material may run four feet in depth at one point, it runs down to a few inches a few yards away. This shows the difficulty of arriving at reliable results in the way of an estimate of qualities, and the necessity for the expenditure of a large sum of money in experting this ground by covering it in detail. This would naturally involve considerable time and labor, but the proposition is large enough to warrant an investigation. Promoters are continually endeavoring to work off the property as a whole, on an assumption of facts which are not warranted by up-to-date examinations, and have so far only succeeded in putting would-be purchasers to the expense of finding out for themselves that nothing really definite is known about these so-called "deposits." It would be much more sensible and to the point to promote a development company, well equipped and backed with sufficient money to make a thorough examination of the ground, and thereby arrive at its true value. There would then be a chance of doing some business, if the quality of material on hand warranted the investment of capital, putting an end one way or the other to the nonsensical and unbusinesslike methods adopted by people in control of this ground for many years past.

A Lost Mine Which Materialized.

A story is now going the rounds of the press about the re-discovery of another lost mine, or more correctly of the trail to it, which, according to the adventurer, a tenderfoot, was followed to the bitter end through impassable canyons, and the other sensational draping given to yarns of the kind, arriving eventually at a cave filled with the skeletons of those who had in the past taken up the "wild-goose" chase. In this case the greenhorn survived, the others, possibly veteran miners, giving up the battle with fate in disgust at the disappointing termination of a tiresome journey. This only serves to remind one that the "lost mine" craze is still as fierce as ever in this wild and woolly section of the far West, fostered by the ubiquitous space fiend, who manages to make a killing as regularly as it is safe to dish up the time-worn remnant of days gone by, when romance cut a figure in mining, as it did in nearly everything else, for that matter. Unfortunately, the hunt after these phantom lodes is now confined to literary efforts in the way of enlarging upon the mystery attaching to their discovery and magical disappearance. Otherwise, even their memory might chance to pass with the closed careers of those who, upon occasion, took up the search, in manner like unto the victims whose remains have just now been discovered in an out of the way cave in a Mexican sierra.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

The market for industrial stocks and bonds on the local Stock and Bond Exchange is dull and unusually quiet for this season of the year. This is not surprising, when the way in which it is weighted down by an incubus like the S. F. Gas and Electric combine is considered. Investors are getting a lesson from it on the ways of the Western financier in an attempt to make something out of nothing by the introduction of hot air. It is the old story of building up a tan yard out of a shoe-string told over again in a new form. Here we find a number of independent concerns formed into a combine on a basis of stock payments, with an allowance for immense profits for the owners of the concerns taken into the general merger. To meet the cash requirements of the occasion, some millions of bonds are issued and underwritten which means that one or two local capitalists feel so sure that the public will gobble up these bonds at a premium that they are willing to put up a certain amount of money for preliminary expenses to be paid back to them with a handsome profit when the bonds are disposed of in due course. To meet the interest on these bonds, the consumer must be bled, while the dear public is expected to put up the millions of watered capital to enable half a dozen men to pose as owners of a proprietary interest in the company and draw down immense salaries at the same time. How much capital of that invested in the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company is owned directly by the individual members of its Board of Directors? They are elected by a proxy system, which permits them to vote one another large salaries while they manage so well as to keep the town by the ears with their arrogance and miserable manufacture. If the stockholders vote at the coming election to keep the present management in office, they may as well prepare to give away their stock for next to nothing in the near future. This is no idle dream. There is a field here for a new company prepared to do the right thing by the people of this city, and unless there is a marked change in the way the present concern is doing business, one will be organized in short order. It won't cost much more to install a new and effective plant than it will to renew the old distributing system now used. Under existing conditions, the stock of this concern is not a pick-up by any means, and the market to-day shows that the people recognize the fact and are very sensibly giving it a wide berth. In other lines of investment securities, prices during the week were generally firm, although the demand is comparatively light.

Pine-St. Market. The market for Comstock shares has ruled fairly steady during the past week, and the short-selling clique did not have things their way altogether. The new strike on the 2,000 level of Ophir is the latest development in connection with the recent ore discoveries in the North-end mines. These have already put the Ophir mine on a dividend-paying basis, and from present appearances there will be a continuance for some time to come. A number of experts visited the new find during the week, and the opinion of all is that its importance cannot be overestimated. It is believed to be the downward continuation of the ore body now being opened up above on the 1800 level. This denotes a magnitude surpassing anything discovered for years past on the Comstock. Caledonia at the South-end is also looking up, while the prospects at other points along the lode are bright, to say the least.

The financial statement of the California Wine Association, covering the operations for the past year, show that sales during that period amounted to $5,131,626, on which profits amounting to $581,114 were realized. The sum of $7.20 per share was paid out in dividends.

The financial statement of the North Shore Railroad for January, 1904, shows a net deficit of $24,198, against $10,611 for same month last year. This is equivalent to an increase of $13,587 in the way of a deficit for the month under review.

The next meeting of the California Bankers' Association will be held at Los Angeles on May 19th, 20th and 21st next.

The statistical reports of the nine savings banks of San Francisco for the year 1903, made to the Bank Commission, show in the aggregate that the net gain in new accounts for the year was 12,476, and $8,413,547 was deposited in excess of withdrawals. The cost of operation was $1,724,426, or about 23 per cent of the gross earnings. The average amount of each deposit account on January 1, 1904, varied from $438, the lowest average, to $1,636, the highest. The total deposits on the same date aggregate $155,776,814.

The epicure knows that an oyster should be eaten as near the oyster bed as possible, and that the least possible time should ensue between the time the oyster is "tonged" to the minute of consumption. Moraghan's Oyster House in the California Market is world-famed as the place best to secure the succulent bivalve. The "chef" is pre-eminent as a master of the art of cookery, and no one seeking satisfaction in oysters will ever do aught but praise Moraghan's.

When you get your fall clothing made, also make arrangements to have it cleaned and pressed regularly at Spaulding's Cleaning and Dyeing Works, 127 Stockton street. It is economy to do it. A suit will last twice as long if well cared for. They also clean gloves, neckties, curtains, laces, draperies and all such articles.

Few come to San Francisco without paying a visit to Zinkand's, which has done so much to establish our city's reputation as the best restaurant town in the United States. It's the favorite after-the-theatre resort.

A rub at the Post St. Hammam will do you good.

Prospective Legislative Timber

I gave a resume last week of the political outlook so far as it has developed, for the next State Senate, showing who was going to be a candidate again and who was likely to be chosen to stay at home. As the Assembly is twice as large as the Senate, and candidates are often selected at the last minute for the Legislature, it is not easy to give as full and as accurate details of the prospects for the personnel of the lower house as it is for the upper. Usually the Senators have previously been Assemblymen, and are therefore better known than their colleagues, and their candidacy is settled much sooner in the year. It may be considered, however, as sure that W. W. Allen, Jr., will be a candidate from the thirtieth district in this city. He made a very good member, and although it was his first session was the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, one of the most important in the Assembly. If Dunlap of Stockton should get the nomination for Senator from San Joaquin and not return to the Assembly, Allen is more than a possibility for Speaker. Amerige wants to come back from Orange County, but he will not find it easy sailing, and it is more than possible that McPhee of the Santa Ana "Blade" may get the Republican nomination, which in that part of the State is equivalent to an election.

* * *

Bangs is too old to want to come back if he could, and Fowler, Secretary of the Madera Chamber of Commerce, is mentioned as his probable successor. Fowler is a young lawyer, and a very bright and pushing fellow. Barber and Boisson of this city both have Federal jobs, the one in the office of Collector Lynch and the other in the U. S. District Attorney's, so neither of them will be candidates again. Brown, of San Mateo, wants to be Senator from his district, and Black of Santa Clara wants to succeed Shortridge as Senator two years hence, so he is anxious to keep himself before the public by returning to the Assembly this year. Wright of Santa Clara will also no doubt be returned, but Walker, of the same county, has no possible chance. He, it will be remembered, distinguished himself early in the session by talking about efforts that had been made to bribe him, and when the reporters went to interview him and get the particulars, he fled and hid himself in a church, where naturally they did not look for him, as he was a member of the Legislature, and therefore he escaped them. His charges fell flat, and he amounted to nothing during the session. Copus is the only Union Labor member who has a ghost of a show of even being nominated; Murphy, Kerrigan and Finn can't get the nominations of their party, not to speak of being elected. In the Assembly they accomplished nothing for the cause they were supposed to represent, and the best labor advocates were Walsh of Alameda in the Assembly and Leavitt in the Senate. The unions themselves recognized that, and are not going to send any more sticks to Sacramento, or even attempt to do so. Carter of Los Angeles wants to succeed Senator Smith, and if he cannot do that, he will try to get back into the Assembly, and be a candidate for Speaker. He has been sued by some client of his in Los Angeles, who made very sensational charges, but I am told that they are not believed down there, and that they will not affect his political fortunes.

Cromwell of Petaluma likes making laws, and announces that he will be a candidate for the Assembly again this year. He was not a very brilliant member, but he was very useful and is popular at home, which means that he would probably be re-elected if nominated. Dorsey of Kern, who was supposed to have been the handsomest man in the last Legislature, has married since he went home, and is now very anxious to bring his bride to the Capital City. He was in San Francisco recently, and announced positively that he was going back next winter, and I presume he knows, although Kern is a Democratic County.

* * *

Drew of Fresno and Traber of the same county both want to be returned. Though from adjoining districts, they did not agree at all, and sat as far apart as the size of the Assembly chamber would permit, the result being that they did not accomplish as much as they might have done for their county. Drew hopes that Dr. and Senator Rowell will get a Federal position which he has been seeking for years (anything will do if it only has a salary), and then he will be a candidate for the unexpired term of the Senatorship. Ex-Senator Pedlar also wants to come back to his old place in the Upper House, and is only waiting to get a chance to run, so Drew will not have plain sailing even if he gets rid of Rowell.

* * *

Killingsworth, a Democrat, is very popular at Vacaville, and if he does not conclude to make the race for Senator to succeed Senator Lucksinger, now Postmaster at Vallejo, he will be a candidate for Assemblyman. His Republican opponent, if he runs for Senator, it is now settled will be ex-District Attorney Frank Devlin of Vallejo. An effort is also being made to get Raleigh Barcar, who owns most of the town of Vacaville, to be a candidate for the Assembly if Killingsworth runs for the State Senate, but Barcar is not particularly anxious to run for anything, having tried it several times with but little success, though personally he is popular.

McKenney of Amador will be a candidate again if he does not attempt to run for the Senate in the eventuality that Ralston, now the Senator from Amador, gets Colonel John P. Irish's place as Surveyor of the Port. But that last contingency is so remote that McKenney has little hopes of being a Senator for two years hence, when he announces that he will make the race for Ralston's place. Frank Lewis of Riverside will be back if he can get the nomination, and he thinks he can. Lumley of Porterville, the politest man in the Assembly, where he also enjoyed (as those who noticed the characteristics of the last Legislature will remember) the largest nose of any member, expects to be on hand, he tells me also. Olmsted of Marin, who has a syndicate of half a dozen papers along the line of the California and Northwestern Railroad, wants to return, but Pann of Ventura will not be seen around the Legislative Halls at all. Pann was an ex-preacher, who got mixed up in a scandal in the last Legislature, and who introduced only one bill, to regulate the mileage of members. The Ventura people were the only county in the State which did not have a single local measure. Their Senator did not introduce a bill, and their Assemblyman only one. Pann went into the newspaper business after the Legislature closed, and I believe remained in it about six weeks. He is now poorer and wiser, and has added to his knowledge of the number of things he doesn't know.

Prescott of San Bernardino can easily get the nomination for Assemblyman again, but he wants to be a Senator to succeed Hubbell, who died shortly after the session closed. If he does not get the Senatorial nomination, however, he will be a candidate for the Assembly again. Rolly of Humboldt, who asked the Assembly to make him chairman of an investigating Committee, so that its investigations would be honest, as there was no other man on the committee whose honesty could be relied upon, wants to be Senator, but I am told he will be lucky if he gets back to the Assembly. McNeil of the same county can get a re-nomination, but is not certain that he wants it.

* * *

The Alameda crowd all want to come back, and probably some of them will, but they are getting so broken up again politically the other side of the bay that no one can tell exactly how things will turn out. Walsh made a good member, and probably will not have much trouble returning, and Waste comes from Berkeley, where they think it derogatory to talk of politics at all, though they have had some very lively politicians.

* * *

I am told that he will have very little opposition to encounter, but Bliss will find things harder, if rumor speaks true, and may not get the nomination at all. In Sacramento, Grove L. Johnson will, of course, be a candidate for the nomination, but it is very doubtful if he can get it. In the last Legislature he antagonized the labor element, which is very strong in his district, where most of the car-shop men live, and even if nominated it is doubtful if he can be elected, as he only got through by a shadow last time. Greer of the same county will be a candidate again, and probably can get the nomination. If Johnson does not run, Albert Elkus, who was recently defeated for Mayor of Sacramento, is a possible candidate.

* * *

Colonel John P. Irish says very distinctly since his return from Washington that he does not expect to leave his present Government job, and he intimates that he has the President's assurance that if Roosevelt is re-elected he will not be disturbed for another four years. He gave up the offer of the Citizens' Association because he concluded that it would be poor politics for him to take it, and he doubts if the Association will last many years, as the need for it is not likely to exist very long; besides the Colonel's friends and family thought it a dangerous place in case of a strike, and while no one doubts his bravery, he preferred a place where he would not be engaged in endless strife.

Monroe was explaining his famous doctrine. "There must be no foreign alliances or entanglements!" he exclaimed. "But, James," whispered his wife, "the Irish cook says she will leave if we don't discharge the Swedish maid." Hopelessly the great man sank into a chair and brought his powers of diplomacy to bear on the subject.

"Wait a second," she said, as she stepped into the store. "Certainly," he replied, and when he had been uptown looking through his mail, spent two hours on 'change, and taken luncheon at the club, he returned and found her just emerging from the door.

"That man Hustleup is certainly the most forehanded individual I ever knew. He's always ahead of the rest of the world." "What's he doing now?" "Taking a patent medicine for spring fever."

"Don't you think you'd better mark that box 'Handle with care,'" John. All our best china is in there." "I know it is, but there's no use giving the expressman a straight tip like that. He'd be sure to smash everything if you did."

The Lawyer—I'm afraid I'm going blind. The Friend—Never mind, old man. So long as you retain your sense of touch you'll be all right.

"The trouble with the average American," remarked the placid philosopher is that he doesn't stop work long enough to digest his food. He doesn't appreciate the importance of the alimentary canal." "My friend," replied Senator Sorghum, as he hastily signed another letter, "there's no use in trying to ring in any new ones. It'll be either Panama or Nicaragua or none at all."

A man came in the police court the other day carrying a friend on his back. The judge said: "What is the trouble?" The man said: "Judge, this man is a friend of mine, and his name is Gunn. Now, judge, Gunn is loaded. I know it is against the law to carry a loaded gun on the streets, so I brought him in here. The Judge said: "Gunn, you are discharged," and the next day the report was in the papers.

"Did papa have any money when you married him?" "No, dear." "How did you come to make such a sorry blunder?" "You mustn't call it a blunder, child. You know your father has plenty of money now. Besides, I would do the same thing again." "Then why are you making such a fuss because I want to marry a poor young man?" "Arabella, if you can't talk sense don't talk at all."

The Guide—Well, here we are on the peak at last. The Tourist—Oh, guide, do you mean to say we can get no higher? Don't say that I can ascend no further. The Guide—Well, you can climb up this alpenstock if you want to. It's seven feet long.

"Does your daughter play Mozart?" asked the young man with gold glasses. "I think she does," answered Mrs. Cumrox affably, "but I think she prefers whist."

The Japs at Annapolis

A feature of the brilliant successes, both strategic and combative, of the Japanese fleets in the present war in the Orient, which is of special interest to Americans, is the fact that many of the Japanese naval officers received their early training at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. In fact, the early instructors at Japan's own naval school were imbued with the ideas of the American and British naval officers, whose influence has been felt throughout the empire's naval development, and has been particularly well manifested during the current campaign in Eastern waters.

When the present era of civilization in Japan was commenced, after the ending of the Shogunate and the establishment of the imperial government, the shrewd Japanese leaders at once began to send their young men abroad over the whole face of the earth in search of the educations called for by the desire to place Japan in the ranks of enlightened world powers. Youths destined for the army were sent for the greater part, to Germany and France. Those for the navy were sent to England and the United States.

As an act of courtesy to the Emperor of Japan, Congress, by an Act approved July 27, 1868, opened up the facilities of the U. S. Naval Academy to properly credentialled subjects of the Mikado. Under the law, young men designated by the Japanese Government, were permitted to enter the school upon the same footing as American lads, with whom they were associated on equal terms, save that they received no pay, as do the American midshipmen.

Fourteen Japanese students in all have been educated at Annapolis, five of whom graduated; the others remaining varying lengths of time at the school. The first appointees were Zum Zow Matsumulla and Ise Sataro, who entered on December 8, 1869. Matsumulla graduated in June, 1873, but Sataro did not specially distinguish himself, and was withdrawn a few months after entering.

After Sataro got home, he was succeeded by Koruko Katz, who entered in June, 1871, and graduated in June, 1877, taking six years to complete the four years' course; another Japanese, Giro Kunitomo, who entered in October, 1872, graduating in the same class with him. Neither of these stood high in his class, nor, indeed, did Matsumulla, but they all got through, receiving satisfactory marks.

After these there followed four others, none of whom graduated, in spite of some leniency and special consideration shown them on account of the difficulties under which they labored. They were Tahahiko Azuma, entering in May, 1872; Kiseru Machida, in October, 1873; Kautaro Arima and Heidemaro Nambo, in June, 1874. Machida remained three years at the academy, Arima two years, and the other two a little over a year each.

There was an interregnum of a year, after Arima left, without a Japanese student at Annapolis, but in September, 1877, three notable appointments were made in the persons of Tasuker Serata, better known to the American midshipmen as "Tim"; Yenoske Inouye, now a rear-admiral, and brother of the famous Count Inouye, the statesman and diplomat; and Sotokichi Uriu, who was none other than the Admiral Uriu who has been making himself so famous recently in the Russo-Japanese war, having commanded the squadron which destroyed the Russian warships at Chemulpo. Inouye was withdrawn in August, 1880, a year before graduation. Serata and Uriu graduated with high honors, Serata standing 14 in a class of 72 members, and Uriu standing 26 in the same class. Serata, in fact, was regarded as a particularly brilliant scholar, as well as highly practical in the application of his theoretical training. It has been reported that he died not long ago.

In 1878, Sadanori Youchi was appointed to Annapolis, but he left in April, 1881, more than a year before his class graduated.

Several years elapsed after the graduation of Serata and Uriu before another Japanese midshipman was sent to the United States Naval Academy. Kagakazue Nire was appointed in May, 1887, and left at the end of four years, but did not graduate. He was followed by Tagasaki Motohiko, who entered in May, 1891, and was withdrawn in March, 1895. Motohiko was the last of the Mikado's subjects to be educated at Annapolis.

As a general thing, the Annapolis-bred Japanese now hold much higher rank than their contemporaries in the American navy. Those of early date are all either admirals or captains, while the senior of the Americans who studied with them is Commander Reginald F. Nicholson, U. S. N., who was a classmate of Matsumulla and Sataro, although Commander S. C. Lemly, of the same class, temporarily holds the rank of captain while acting as Judge-Advocate-General of the U. S. Navy.

Katz and Kunitomo were classmates of Commanders C. M. Winslow, J. M. Helm, Charles Laird, and contemporaries of C. F. Pond, J. C. Gilmore, T. D. Griffin, the lamented P. V. Lansdale, and others well known on the Pacific Coast.

It is the general consensus of opinion among these and other American officers who were in constant contact with them, that the Japanese midshipmen at Annapolis exhibited extremely high intelligence and adaptability, and that they deserve great praise for the way in which they studied and learned, in view of the drawback of a strange language and conditions and surroundings wholly unlike those of their native land of that period.

It is not thought probable that Japan will send any more of her midshipmen abroad to be educated, as she now has a fine, well-equipped naval academy of her own, with a full corps of competent instructors.

SLEEP.

By Eastman Elwin in Pearson's
From out the blue of space I lean to thee,
Child of mortality.
With fingers dipped in poppies' blood, I touch
Eyes that have wept o'ermuch—
Thine eyes, that shall for one brief space forget
Griefs that they oft have met.

For one brief space despair, the pains of Life,
Sorrow and all ills rife
Shall be forgot; while Love and Fame and Power
Thine shall be, one short hour.
Drink now thy fill of Joy, of Gladness, Mirth.
Waking comes, Child of Earth.

THE OPAL.

Anon.

A dew drop came with a spark of flame
He had caught from the sun's last ray,
To a violet's breast, where he lay at rest
Till the hours brought back the day.

The rose looked down with a blush and a frown,
But she smiled all at once to view
Her own bright form, with its coloring warm,
Reflected back by the dew.

Then the stranger took a stolen look
At the sky so soft and blue;
And a leaflet green, with its silver sheen,
Was seen by the idler, too.

A cold north wind, as he thus reclined,
Of a sudden raged around;
And a maiden fair, who was walking there
Next morning an opal found!

"I LONGED FOR LOVE."

By Florence Earle Coates in The Outlook
I longed for love, and eager to discover
Its hiding place, I wandered far and wide;
And as, forlorn, I sought the lone world over,
Unrecognized, love journeyed at my side.

I craved for peace, and priceless years entended
In unrewarded search from shore to shore;
But, home returned, the weary seeking ended,
Peace welcomed me where dwelt my peace of yore.

HEART'S INN.

By Virginia Woodward Cloud in Smart Set.
"Oho!" quoth Love, "'tis the Inn of the Heart,
I'll hie me thither and claim my part,
For many a guest will there have place
Who knows Love's name, but never his face!"
So to the Inn of the Heart Love came,
And warmed him well by that hearth's flame;
Guests who had fed them and paid no fee
Stole from the presence of such as he.

Pain and Longing and gray Despair,
Slipped they back to the shadowy air;
Though the Inn was full at setting of sun
Love, of guests, was the only one,
For he peopled with dreams of radiant joy
And paid Life's coin without alloy;
At the Inn of the Heart, 'neath its purple vine,
Love fared for a night off roseate wine.

A minstrel sang; Love turned his face,
For the Inn of the Heart is a quiet place;
A vendor called his wares in the street,
And the door swung back for Love's flying feet;
The door stood wide, but he fled with day;
Then silently back the same old way,
Came Longing, Despair and the older Pain,
To fill the Inn of the Heart again—

Save for a small, sequestered room,
Where memory spun with web and loom.

The railroad to Mecca will probably increase the number of pilgrims. Will it also increase the amount of smallpox which appears to be inseparable from the pilgrimage?

The American Consul for Dalny in Manchuria is here, waiting his orders to proceed. What a delightful welcome he will have, and how he will enjoy his stay in Dalny when he gets there.

We Californians are a forbearing lot. The Portuguese who refused to lend the straw to repair the levee, the break in which caused the flood, is still alive.

An English physician notes that there is not much difference between a monkey and a baby a few hours after birth. We may add that the likeness often persists to maturity, and cite Harry Lehr as proof.

"Marriage for love," rules a New York Judge, "is a condition favored by the poets, but not as yet adopted in our jurisprudence." That is to say: Cupid is still in partnership with cupidity.

Kuropatkin is like the policeman in the "Pirates of Penzance"—he is in no hurry to go to the front. It is always next week with him. Well, the religious preparations are enough to frighten any one.

Captain Duke, newly appointed police captain, signalized his promotion by arresting a twelve-year-old boy against whom there was nothing to be found. Query: Is Duke a new broom or a silly ass?

The Senate has decided that Uncle Sam does not owe ex-Queen Liliuokalani anything for the monarchy it took away from her. It wasn't much of a monarchy, and, anyway, if we hadn't taken it somebody else would have.

Paris has a fine, exhilarating atmosphere. Still every possible disease flourishes there. At present they are suffering from an apparently new form of jaundice; at all events, it is called "the yellow terror."

The Russian Commander-in-Chief gave a banquet on the night of the Japanese attack. When he heard the firing he explained that it was on board his own ships. What in the name of all that is holy did he think his ships were firing for at that hour?

The Duke of Connaught is to be the new Inspector General of the British Army. There should be lots to look after. By the lowering of the physical standard of recruits, it is growing smaller all the time, however.

The President has presented to a museum in Thuringia a complete outfit of an American soldier as worn in the Boxer campaign. It looks very much as if some reflection on the uniform was intended. It is the Rough Rider's way of evening up.

Physical degeneration is perplexing the people of Great Britain. It is agreed that insanity is of a much more virulent type and tends to become incurable to an extent far beyond what it did twenty-five years ago. Infant mortality has increased to the ratio of 166 per 1000 births. Rule Britannia!

The County of Alameda is sufficiently advanced to take her place as a leading modern community. She is unable to pay her debts this year. The possession of debts and Colonel Irish is surely distinction enough.

Jamieson's attainment of the Premiership of the Cape is a bitter pill to poor old Kruger. Never say die. Nothing looked more hopeless than the case of the raiding Doctor seven years ago, and look at him now. And poor Kruger, seven years ago, lay awake at nights imagining himself ruler of a Dutch South Africa.

We are acting the policeman with a vengeance at San Domingo. We send a naval captain to observe operations, and this officer forthwith orders the President of an independent nation not to close his own ports against revolutionists who are attempting to overthrow his Government. Such are the effects of a strenuous policy.

A DUTY FOR THE SCHOOL BOARDS.

That Board of School Directors which will wipe out the pestilent system of "vertical handwriting" will earn the thanks of a community which does not often have reason to toss bouquets to the educators of its youth. Theoretically, this plan was excellent: it contemplated the banishing of the "scrawl" that had come from no system at all, and promised in its stead a manuscript that was to be rapid of execution and as clear to read as the printed word. Practically, it has ruined the writing of at least one generation. Now and then we see an example of "vertical writing" that would convince us of the systems' merit, if we did not know that it was done with great pains for show purposes. Any class in any of our public schools produces daily abundant testimony that the "vertical system" is a failure, that it has resulted in something less legible than the "scrawl," and with no character or individuality at all.

The prime object of writing is that it shall furnish a transparent medium for the expression of thought that cannot be otherwise communicated, and shall provide a clear record of thought or transaction needing permanent preservation. But a vastly important secondary purpose is that the writing shall be so far expressive of the writer's individuality as to put forward a ready means for the identification of himself and of his written record of thought or deed. Undeniably, such a means of identification is essential to the world's business. Without it there must be recourse to thumb prints or photographs, each requiring verification beyond itself, or to a system of differentiating and identifying yet to be devised. Any observer of the writing of school children under the "vertical system" will testify that it is unfailingly alike in its characterless illegibility. "Verticalism" has succeeded in producing only an ugly sameness. A few more years of it and the people upon whom it is inflicted will have no difficulty in signing the names of one another beyond the distinguishing of any expert or of themselves.

From the scholastic viewpoint, "vertical handwriting" is an abortion; from the commercial view-point it is an abomination; from the legal viewpoint it is a menace to an all-important factor in the transactions indispensable to organized society.

All of which the News Letter respectfully submits to the Board of Education.

UNJUST POSTAL REGULATIONS.

E. C. Madden is the name of the third Assistant Postmaster-General, an autocrat who, by a strange freak of fortune, is allowed to run the mails of the United States as suits his sweet will, excluding from their use legitimate business enterprises simply because they do not please him or his ideas. The continued demand of the people for a one-cent letter postal rate became so strong that Congress was forced to take some cognizance of it, and as there is an annual deficiency in the postal revenues at present, Loud, who at the time was Chairman of the Post Office Committee in the House, conceived the brilliant idea of making the papers and magazines of the country pay for the shortage, instead of forcing the railroads to reduce their charges for carrying the mails. These charges are notoriously enormous. They are based upon the amount of mail that is sent over a given route for two or three months, every four years. When the time comes to do this weighing of mail, the roads load down the mails with public documents and matter of all kind, every extra pound being paid for, be it remembered, for the ensuuing four years, as it raises the average for that time. It is this scandalous system that creates the deficit, and that keeps the people from enjoying a one-cent rate on letters and better postal facilities. In pursuance of his plan to distract attention from the real cause of the deficit, Loud persuaded Congress to allow the Post Office Department to exclude from the benefit of second-class mail rates any publication they might choose, it in their opinion it was published more as an advertising medium than as a regular newspaper or magazine, besides all regular publications were denied the right to send sample copies of their publication through the mails at the second-class rates, and a number of vexatious and annoying regulations were authorized so that publishers, instead of the railroads might suffer from the indignation of the public at being deprived of their low postage and better facilities. Clothed with these powers the third Assistant Postmaster General undertakes to exclude from the mails any publication he sees fit, passing upon it as a censor of morals, religion and politics, as well as business methods. Under this scheme, he forced Wilshire to move his magazine to Canada, because he declared that Wilshire said too much about himself in his publication, which was self-advertisement, but really because the magazine is a socialistic publication, which does not agree with Mr. Madden's tastes. He excluded "The Appeal of Reason" from the mails for the same reason, and now he has just declined to allow John Brisben Walker's new Twentieth Century Home to go through the mails as second-class rates, for some reason that he will not even deign to explain. The absurdity of these regulations is that by publishing in Canada they can all get reduced rates, over the United States, and will go through the same mails, under the same conditions as those from which they are excluded, if published in this country. Is it not time that the publishers of the country should unite against a continuation of this outrage? It is remarkable that they have stood it so long. What right has the Government to interfere with any legitimate business? What becomes of the freedom of the press if one man is made absolutely press censor of the country? It is now proposed to exclude from the mails all publications that contain medical advertisements. With this added power in his hands, Madden will be able to strike at the circulation of any paper in the country. While he has offered no explanation of his action in the Twentieth Century Home, there is no question but that Walker is being punished because in his other publication, the Cosmopolitan, he has ventured to criticize the Post Office Department for its mismanagement and corruption. Probably he hit Madden a blow in those articles, or is it another case of graft? Congress might do well to inquire into this matter, and probably we shall have another scandal uncovered.

THE MAN WHO SPITS.

At many an occasion, the News Letter has had much to say about the officials of San Francisco, who never do anything, but everybody. The average city official is noted for his unobservance of the statutes rather than for any efforts on his part to enforce them. There is a statute that, for reasons of health and decency, provides for the punishment of men and women who may expectorate in places and in such a manner that the sputa becomes a menace to the health of the people. The vulgarians now at the head of our City Government, by the grace of God, and the chance of politics, know no better than the kine of the field, and it is not to be expected that such an important law should be enforced by this scum unless some one points out the infraction. The expectorator is a terrible infliction, and here in San Francisco he is insistently predominant. His slimy trail is everywhere. He can be traced along the sidewalks, in the halls of amusement and in street and steam cars. He is numberless, and he spits himself into the notice of the decent and the refined at every turn, and unchecked goes on his merry, dirty way. The administration of the city, graduated from the ranks of the canaille, does not see that it is necessary to the public health to enforce the ordinance or because of a fear that a majority of its supporters may be jailed in consequence, it does not see fit to enforce the law. The expectorator should be jailed, and we hope he will be. We also hope that we have made it plain to the administration of city affairs, that eats with its knife and combs its beard and hair with its fork, that the enforcement of the law is a necessity, and will preserve the lives of the unwashed as well as the cleanly.

A VALUABLE JUDGE.

Not very long ago a Judge of conspicuous talent and unquestioned position, would have considered it beneath his dignity to trouble his mind about the morals of young boys. The offenders against the law would have been brought before him and he would have duly sentenced them according to law without the slightest compunction or further thought.

It is a testimony, therefore, to the growth of the idea of social service that a man of the power of Judge Lindsey should have elected to make the salvation of the youthful delinquent the main purpose of his life. The ability to successfully deal with boys, to make friends with them and to win their entire confidence, is one of the very rarest of gifts. How many of us can remember a teacher who was endowed with that uncommon quality? Such a one remains in our memory, and the feeling of close comradeship engendered by association with him never really forsakes us.

To possess this power of making friends with boys, and to use it as a means for reclamation of the boy, is perhaps the finest thing which a man can do.

Judge Lindsey, therefore, has not only lost no dignity in taking up the work which he has elected to follow, but is, on the contrary, proving himself a social factor of uncommon usefulness. It is pleasant to note also that Judge Murasky has become deeply interested in the same phase of work, and is lending it all the influence of his markedly kindly and serious personality.

A NEW IDEA.

They have a new club in Oakland with a peculiar, but in all probability a very useful object. It is called the Home Club, and owes its inception to Mrs. F. M. Smith, who has recently provided it with new headquarters. The purpose of the club is stated to be the "betterment of homes."

What is exactly meant by the phrase would be perhaps a little hard to define, but it is to be presumed that all phases of home life will be closely studied by the members, and that some conclusions will be reached of practical value to the insignificant people who have not the honor to belong to the club.

But it is a strange commentary upon existing conditions when the home has to be the object of organized solicitude. If anything should be spontaneous, it is domestic life, that grouping of father, mother and children, which depends primarily upon affection, and cannot exist without it. Where mutual love rules there is the home. There can be no substitute for that mutual affection. In face of it all the attacks made upon the home by brilliant homeless women, who write out of the bitterness of their souls, fail.

But such a club may, and, it is to be hoped, will be able to distribute information with respect to the beautifying and adorning of modern dwellings. We are a prosperous people, and the children even of our artisans are sufficiently well off to indulge a comparatively inexpensive taste for beauty. If they can be educated to appreciate the simple and the refined, a great impetus will have been given in the direction of healthy happiness, and even of morality.

THE CRITIC AND THE ACTOR.

Fortunately it is Nat Goodwin this time who has raised anew the question of how far one may go in criticising the stage and stage-folk without risk of personal resentment—fortunately, because Mr. Goodwin is a person of the distinction which should be brought to the adjudication of a matter like this. He is still very much alive, with the promise of many more years of active usefulness, and already he has had cigars, neckties, perfumery and other things named after him, which is much more significant of contemporaneous popularity than to have a page all to one's self in "Who's Who?" Moreover, it is not to be gainsaid that he is a good actor, an actor of the first rank. Men have said of him, sadly shaking their heads: "Nat Goodwin is a bad actor," but it has been said in the slang sense, and with reference to his conduct in other places than on the stage.

Fortunately, also, the issue this time involves none of the treasured liberties of the press. It appears that on a recent evening in St. Louis, when Mr. Goodwin, after the play, was doing what the newspapers politely and discreetly call "supping with a few friends," a man named McKane projected himself into Mr. Goodwin's charmed circle, and insisted upon turning the conversation to Mr. Goodwin's art, and upon doing all the talking himself. In the course of his remarks, this McKane crowned the height of his offending by stating it as his firm belief that Mr. Goodwin, on the stage, filled accurately the title of his current piece—"A Gilded Fool." Mr. Goodwin, equal to a controversial emergency, for which the language supplies no words. Seizing the argument that lay nearest to his hand—it was in St. Louis, remember, and after the show, so it could not by any chance have been aught else than a large and heavy stein—he applied it to the person of his too keen critic with such force and precision as to convert a flow of language into a flow of blood. While the critic continued to be silent concerning the stage and everything else, Mr. Goodwin departed in a dignified manner and continued "supping with a few friends" in a place which the police were temporarily unable to locate.

Herein, then, is found vindication on the part of the exuberant McKane of the right of free speech, particularly as it pertains to public things and persons, and on Mr. Goodwin's part of the right of each of us, doing well or ill his business in life, to shut his eyes and ears to unkindly criticism, and to resent, even with a stein, any attempt to force it upon his notice. McKane had his say; Goodwin had his swat—and there you are.

By the forthright reply of Mr. Goodwin to the uncompromising dictum of a critic, who was more candid than courteous, the process of adjusting and harmonizing the relations of those who live by criticising those who play, goes happily forward.

OUR INCOMPETENT LAWYERS.

There are too many lawyers in San Francisco, and far too many poor ones. In saying poor, we do not refer alone to their financial standing, but to the lack of professional knowledge and ordinary care which is far too common a mark of our present-day practitioners. In a vast majority of cases one does not even get the necessary attention which is requisite to secure legal rights, and under such circumstances the practice of the profession by large numbers of those who are authorized to plead cases and prepare legal documents is nothing short of an absolute fraud upon the public.

Recently the writer of this had occasion to examine the record of title to a piece of property. One lawyer had carelessly omitted to copy the description correctly, and the entire title lay under a cloud in consequence. Subsequent to the first wrong description, he had had occasion to file various other papers, all of which contained the description of the premises in question and in every one of which the same description was wrongly copied. This is bad enough in all conscience, and might easily have led to confusion and actual loss, but the worst is not yet told. The search was made by a well-known firm of searchers, and even these failed to note the discrepancy in the descriptions, and, but for the purchaser's own carefulness, he might easily have expended his money for only a portion of the land which he fancied he was purchasing. In this case the fraud is sufficiently obvious. Certain professional gentlemen who had taken an oath to discharge the duties of their profession faithfully had failed in their obligations, and the results might have been serious for the interests of the person who had paid for good service.

This is not an unusual instance. Not very long ago an important case in equity was tried by two leading firms of solicitors and counsellors in this city, and when the case, in the course of which voluminous briefs had been filed, was submitted to the court for decision, the latter, being more careful, found a glaring discrepancy in the description of the property involved which had escaped the supposedly hawk-like eyes of the lawyers on both sides.

Now, this sort of thing is an absurdity, and if such carelessness is characteristic of the work of the local bar, it would be just about as safe to take our own cases into court and leave the Judge to settle the matter simply on equitable grounds. As Ruskin says somewhere with more truth than is to be found in a great deal that he wrote, if a lawyer is not acute he is nothing. To which we shall take the liberty of adding that if he does not conscientiously and laboriously examine his work, he is worse than nothing—he is a fraud, a nuisance and a source of loss.

What is the reason of this professional laxity at our local bar? First and foremost, we have a great many men who are not entitled either intellectually or morally to practice a profession which requires much self-restraint and loftiness of purpose. The entrance examinations are too easy, the bars are let down too far, and the crowd of those who have neither character nor position who are thus enabled to crawl into the forum reduce the potentiality of the profession for good and actually infect it with evil.

In this matter, it is true that the Chief Justice of California is supposed to hold a contrary opinion, and that he favors the abolition of all examinations, having the idea that thus the profession will find its level and the incompetents be weeded out. But in the meantime the innocent suffer, the ordinary layman who fancies that the possession of a license to practice will act as a testimonial of the abilities of the person possessing it, is deceived and suffers detriment.

The worst of the present state of the profession is that some of those who are thus careless and unreliable actually succeed and make money. Their mistakes are only obvious to their legal brethren, who, as fellow practitioners, cannot express themselves, and a harvest of litigation and probable loss is reaped by the trusting clients who have committed their interests to their care.

We have a Bar Association composed of gentlemen above suspicion, many of whom are extremely jealous for the good name of the profession which they ornament, but what steps do they take to raise the standard of legal knowledge, and what is even more important, to raise the standard of legal morality? When a flagrant case of misconduct or negligence has arisen, it ought to be possible to call the attention of the Bar Association to the matter in such a way that the delinquent lawyer might be categorically informed of the opinion in which he was held by his brother practitioners. This course of action would in the course of time have a profound influence upon legal ethics, for the conspicuous ignoring of the unprofessional would be much more deadly in its effects than any amount of individual disbarments, followed, as they usually are, by a restoration to full privileges after a short lapse of time.

A better method of admission, coupled with a stricter investigation of those already admitted, is a necessary preliminary to any real improvement in the condition of things, and to the elimination of that incompetency which is the curse of the profession.

Humor is not dead. In spite of Lent, the Fates are pleased to be facetious. James A. Johnston, the treasurer of the San Francisco Labor Council, was held up by a highwayman. A trades union official held at the point of the pistol by a gentleman of the road is a gratifying and pleasing spectacle, and one, moreover, conducive to general good feeling and innocent merriment. When members of the same profession thus get the drop on each other, the rest of the world may be pardoned for expressing a little too exuberant joy.

De Commonplaces of Life

By Alfred Dezendorf.

Some folks keeps talkin' 'bout "commonplace tings."
 Dey habs nothin' good fo' to say.
 Dey libs on 'citement, and mus' "hab a change!"
 F'um de humdrum wuhk ob de day.

Dey sho' fo'gits dat de commonplace tings,
 Am 'mongst does we lubs de bes';
 De diff'unce 'twix' common and commonplace,
 Am fur as de eas' f'um de wes'.

De stars dat shine, an' eb'ry wind dat blows,
 An' de ole sky what swing so blue;
 Dey all b'longs 'mongst de commonplace tings,
 But neber gits common; dat's true!

De ole fren' dat clasp you' han' as he pass;
 De lil' gal who smile "How-de-do?"
 Some folks 'scribes dem as moughty commonplace:
 I don' call 'em common—does you'?

De kiss in de mornin' an' pra'r at night,
 Dat yo' lubbed ones hab fo' you;
 You 'specs 'em bofe an' calls 'em commonplace—
 But dey neber grows common—sho'.

So, honey, I 'specs dat de folks what wears,
 Dat 'temptius look on dere face;
 Wouldn' feel right in de worl' aftah all
 Ef dey wan't in a common place.

A "MESHUGGENE" FISH STORY.

A "fy" commercial traveler from New York was the immediate instrument for starting a new by-word among devotees of whist in local Jewish circles. He was allowed to make the fourth at a game at one of the summer resorts last season. The three other players were veterans whose play had been perfected by constant practice at their clubs and homes. They gave their attention to the game as they would to the large details of their business interests. The drummer was boastful and flippant. This was endured in silence. But when after leading the seven of trumps which was taken by his partner, J. Greenbaum, Mr. Greenbaum found when he led back the suit that the seven was the young man's only trump card. Greenbaum threw up both hands and ejaculated in solemn tones: "The fish walked round the block." There was no further reproach, though the other players, Kaufman Wertheimer and A. Levin, looked at him big-eyed. It was whist, and no questions were asked till the hand was through. Then, under pressure, Greenbaum explained:

"The teacher of a Yiddish school in the East Side of New York was telling the children about verbs. Each pupil was to make a sentence containing the word 'walk.' When it got to Izzy Rosenstein, he found that most of the animals he knew anything about had already been named, so he said: 'The fish walked around the block.' The teacher remonstrated that this was impossible, since the fish had no legs. Izzy wanted his good mark, and he insisted: 'But, yiss, deacher. You don't know vat queer things a 'meshuggene' fish will do.'"

Each of the other players grinned, and the drummer still wonders why they didn't care about playing whist with him any more during their vacation. "Meshuggene" is the Hebrew word for "crazy."

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

It is just now beginning to dawn upon the Anglo-Saxon race more particularly that there is an issue growing out of the Russo-Japanese war which transcends in importance to civilization and the personal liberty of humankind mere territorial expansion or the glory of achieved victory upon the battlefield. This issue is an ethical-economic question, and it concerns most of Europe and all of America. It is thus: Suppose Japan is left to work out her own national salvation, and that she is finally driven to the wall. Would it not mean that all of Eastern Asia would ultimately have to yield to Russian absorption and Russian laws and Russian customs? Would not the form of Government be ultra autocratic and the civilization be even lower than is maintained in the present Russian empire? Would the spirit of constitutional Government, to say nothing of democracy and the rights of man, be permitted to find expression in public sentiment? Is it not easy enough to foresee that the St. Petersburg autocrat, who is also, or rather claims to be, the infallible head of the Christian Church, on earth, would dominate and practically govern an additional population of quite 450,000,000 Asiatics and fly the flag of the Bear over 4,000,000 additional square miles of territory—about the area of the United States, including Alaska? And would not the traditional Romanoff hatred of intellectual and moral forces that work for the betterment of man's condition of existence be the measure of Russia's standard of civilization in Eastern Asia? It is this possibility that is just now engaging the attention of the world's strongest and ablest thinkers, and it is this possibility that is everywhere outside of Russia and royalty in Germany that is arousing human sympathy with Japan. It is the fear of the consummation of Russia's bold scheme to increase her territorial possessions by one third, and oblige nearly one-third of the world's population to surrender all hopes and aspirations for personal liberty and a higher civilization, and bow the head in abject submission to the will and wish of a mentally and morally diseased ruler, who is always a law unto himself, without restraint and without responsibility to any one. Japan has already demonstrated her worthiness to have from the Anglo-Saxon all needed moral and physical forces in her great undertaking of leading Eastern Asia out into broader and more fertile fields of intellectual force, moral worth, commercial integrity, industrial activity and encouragement to individual effort for greater personal freedom and collective progress. There is a mighty ethical issue in the Far East, and the god of advancing civilization demands that the Russian Bear be caged within the confines of his own liberty-hating country.

* * *

Japan's Military Genius. The past week has been full of events in Korea and Manchuria. The calm but merciless precision of Japan's tactics, and the persistent energy of their unfoldment from day to day, have revealed a standard of knowledge of the science of war that surprises everybody. And the surprise is so great to the hitherto blustering Russian Generals and Admirals that they seem to have lost their heads. Port Arthur is practically invested, and the General in command admits that its fall into the hands of the Japanese is merely a question of a very short time. Only two of the Russian squadron that was at Port Arthur are seaworthy. Japan's superb marksmanship has destroyed the others, and not only is Port Arthur practically lost to Russia, but Vladivostock is cut off from communication with Russian headquarters. This gives Japan the complete mastery of the entire water front of Manchuria and Korea, which not only enables her to sail her troop ships without convoys, but gives her such complete mastery of the situation as to naval operations that it would be impossible for Russia to make even a weak naval demonstration; besides, the Baltic fleet has been ordered to return to its old quarters, and the Black Sea fleet has concluded to remain where it is. Thus is Japan without annoying opposition in the waters of Eastern Asia. From now on the theatre of action will be, therefore, on Korean and Manchurian soil, and it will be real war on lines of consummate strategy. But it is not likely that Russia will invite a trial of strength just now. It will require several weeks to prepare the incoming reinforcements for field duty, so great are the hardships engendered by the long and tedious journey through Siberia. This much St. Petersburg admits. Then, again, the landing of Japanese troops a few miles from Vladivostock is a movement to cut the Russian army in two, but the greater danger to the Russian forces is in the probable purpose of the Japanese to destroy the railway system of Manchuria at strategic points. It must be remembered that Russia has about 1,800 miles of railway in Manchuria to defend against Japanese flying columns of regulars and Chinese organized freebooters, who are in sympathy with Japan. On the other hand, in making the move to divide the Russian forces, Japan divides her own army of occupation, and defeat to the Vladivostock inland expedition would most likely mean its utter destruction. The Japanese general staff has just now reached the field of operations, which would seem to indicate that all is ready for a forward movement in force into Manchuria to strike right and left before the Russian plan of concentration is consummated. Thus far every point has been won by Japan, but no great battle has yet been fought.

Two Important Events. Two highly important events have transpired the past week, and either one of them is enough to start an international fire. Korea has defiantly annulled her proclamation of neutrality, and has not only entered into an offensive and defensive alliance with Japan, but has actually ordered her war establishment to report to the commanding general of the Japanese army for orders. This act of Korea is the equivalent of a declaration of war against Russia, and apparently without any cause other than Japan's adroit diplomacy. The other event is the exposure of China's insincerity toward Russia. It seems to be clear enough now that China has no idea of continuing neutral when she issued her neutrality proclamation. Well drilled and thoroughly equipped Chinese soldiers are concentrating at strategic points near the Manchurian border, nor does even Russia believe the Peking Government when it denies that these troops are going forward as an "army of observation"; still the Chinese authorities are playing the game of hypocrisy so adroitly that the other powers can find no excuse to interfere. But neither Korea's alliance with Japan nor longer. There is a strong suspicion in Berlin and St. Petersburg that Great Britain and the United States are in China's confidence; and that Peking is acting upon the secret advice of London and Washington. As a selfish proposition, that is exactly what the Pacific Coast desires the United States to do; i. e., make this nation solid with China and Japan, for Eastern Asia is the Pacific Coast's greatest and richest field of commercial and industrial expansion.

Obituary

George P. Morrow, son of the late George Morrow, pioneer hay and grain merchant, of San Francisco, died at his home in Oakland last Monday. Mr. Morrow was a prominent grain broker of San Francisco, and was known in political and club circles. The deceased was a native of San Francisco, and aged 46. Although Mr. Morrow was born in San Francisco and carried on his business in this city, he has lived nearly all his life in Oakland. He studied in the public schools of Oakland, and is a graduate of the University of California. He leaves a wife and two children, George W. Morrow, aged 21, and Rachel Morrow, aged 18.

GEO. P. MORROW

William E. Dargie, Jr., is dead, and there are hundreds that grieve because of his untimely end. He was one of those rare personalities beloved of all men. His was a cheerful disposition and a helping, sunny and kindly nature. He was the inheritor of some of the best blood of California, but his individuality raised him far above the mere circumstance of birth, and there are many who will mourn his taking away as a personal loss. Mr. Dargie was but 21 years of age at the time of his death. He was attached to the California Commission at the Paris Exposition, and won the greatest praise from those with whom he came in contact. The writer of these lines knew him personally since childhood, and remembers him for his gentleness and for his promise of a brilliant manhood.

ELEVATOR INSPECTION.

Another terrible calamity was recorded in the daily press of last week. An elevator started, without apparent reason, and in the endeavor to save her mother, who had been crushed into a shapeless mass, a beautiful young girl was killed. This is the third accident in one week recorded by the newspapers. The third case is that of an old pioneer who was crushed to death by an unreliable machine. This is probably another case of lack of inspection. Samuel Baden has been sacrificed to the monumental stupidity of our city authorities.

When will the wise men who sit in government over the people in the city's legislative halls get down to business and do something besides doing everybody? Isn't it about time action was taken? Does our highly intellectual Mayor wish to wait until such time as a dozen or more cases are on record before he appoints an inspector of elevators? Is there any good reason why the Supervisors do not take this matter in hand in company with our delectable chief executive? Are we not entitled to this protection, and is it not the plain duty of Mayor Schmitz to take the initiative?

If, as has been stated, the real Mayor is Mr. Abe Ruef, why does he not instruct his puppet in his duties. Ruef has never as yet been accused of suggesting neglect of duty to the fiddle-headed Mayor. Ruef is credited by his associates, with extraordinary common sense. Why not suggest to the Mayor that he take this matter in hand and name some good man as elevator inspector before some terrible accident occurs in one of our office buildings, and ten or a dozen lives are lost?

Violet. This is not about a girl, although the title would seem to imply as much. It is the story of a dreamy, musical sort of boy whose father had been hanged for poisoning a half-witted niece for her money. Not a very engaging theme to hang a story on, is it? The tale is sufficiently lugubrious, it could not well be otherwise, but it is more than usually well-written. It is only fair to say so much. The range of characters is great, embracing as it does fisherfolk, a distinguished musician, and a group of third-rate theatrical people. No description of the story is necessary. The book is primarily a psychological study, but its usefulness as such is impaired by the peculiarity and unusual character of the material.

The writer is the Baroness von Hutten. She is an American woman, a native of Pennsylvania, who married Baron von Hutten, of Bavaria, at Florence, in 1897. She and her husband live most of the time at the ancestral seat, Steinbach, in the Valley of the Mairi, Bavaria.

It's a far cry from Balboa, "silent upon a peak of Darien," to Lewis and Clarke upon a "beautiful sandy beach through which runs a small river from the hills," but Mr. Thwaites has condensed the history of "The Expansion of a Republic" into a very entertaining book of 250 pages. Although most of the incidents are well known, this is the first time that these records have been treated in a connected form. The book is interesting from beginning to ending, and the illustration and maps are excellent. "Rocky Mountain Explorations," by Reuben Gold Thwaites. D. Appleton & Co., New York. $1.25 net.

George Barry & Sons, of Philadelphia, are issuing "The History of North America," by Professor Guy Carleton Lee and a corps of assistants. This is the most comprehensive survey of North America ever published, commencing when the past was a formless land, an unfitted waste for the habitation of man, continuing through the times when it was only a habitation for Indians, while great nations swarmed in the lower latitudes of the continent, and hundreds of tribal organizations peopled the region north of the Rio Grande. Thenceforth the evolution of American history is traced, chapter by chapter, volume by volume, each of the latter being compiled by a specialist in the particular subject or period with which it deals, until from the imperishable records of prehistoric man, dug from the scarped cliff or quarried stone, we land at last amid the events of the present day. Hence the claim, which we are not disposed to dispute, that the work under consideration is the only general history of North America in existence.

Henry Harland's agreeable little romance, "My Friend Prospero," which has been running as a serial in McClure's Magazine, is now published in book form by McClure, Phillips & Co., and goes to complete the trio of comedies in masquerade, the other two of which are "The Cardinal's Snuff Box" and "The Lady Paramount." This is a slighter story than either of those, but it is of the same sort and in its smaller way almost as pretty. But has not Mr. Harland almost exhausted the possibilities of the ingenious formula which serves with slight variations for all these stories? But though replicas of a good story are good, a new story is better, and having now set before his readers all the possible combinations of the given formula, it may be trusted that Mr. Harland will resolutely go to work to break new ground. Political

While the meeting of the State representatives of the Iroquois Clubs of California in this city last week did not accomplish much so far as defining the future policy and position of the Democratic Party in this commonwealth is concerned, it had a decided dampening effect on the prospects of the Honorable William Randolph Hearst for the Presidency. While it is true that there was a small picture of the editor displayed in the hall, and that the delegates expressed their pleasure that Congress had concluded to let his henchman Livernash continue to occupy a seat in the House of Representatives, yet it failed entirely to indorse the candidacy of the Sausalito Don Juan, although strenuous efforts were made to secure an enthusiastic approval of his candidacy, and it refused to endorse the Kansas City platform upon which it is understood Hearst proposes to stand with Bryan's help. Nay, more, at the banquet, J. V. Coleman, toast-master, set the pace in favor of an uninstructed delegation to St. Louis, and if that policy should be carried out, the Hearst boom would go begging, for an endorsement by his native State is absolutely necessary to the self-appointed candidate.

* * *

While the Iroquois showed themselves indifferent to the interests of the New York Congressman, even though his friends did everything they could to get him the endorsement of the club which he so much coveted, the leading Democrats outside of the city, and some in the city, are showing themselves decidedly hostile. Editor Leake of Woodland, for instance, publishes articles in his paper denouncing Hearst, which would be distinctly libelous if it were possible to say anything about Hearst which is libelous. But his record is so debasing that it is impossible to say anything of him worse than the truth, and therefore all danger of libel is removed. It is a notable fact that while Franklin K. Lane has said nothing, publicly, at least, against Hearst, yet nevertheless every paper which supported him energetically and loyally, is violently opposed to Hearst, and if he were named it would only be necessary to republish what they are now saying to show how unfit he would be to hold the position of dog-catcher, not to speak of the place he aspires to. It is evident, therefore that Lane is anti-Hearst, and as Lane is never anything until he has asked McNab what he should be, it is equally evident that McNab is anti-Hearst also. Now, while McNab does not amount to much as a help to a man to get a position, he has a good deal of negative strength, and can be a heavy load on a man who wants to reach a political goal which the Scotchman does not want him to reach. Just as Tammany cannot elect one of its members, Governor of New York, even though it were the famous John Kelly, its sachem of other days, himself, and yet it could keep a lot of other fellows out of the office—especially the nomination—so McNab's opposition will do much to weaken Hearst's candidacy in this State, and McNab is undoubtedly out against the editor, although as yet he is working against him on the quiet. The conservative element in the party is anti-Hearst also, and Editor Leak add Editor Green and Editor Henry, of Woodland, Colusa and Livermore, are going to help elect anti-Hearst delegates. The Los Angeles Democrats are weakening, also, it is rumored, and Snyder now favors an uninstructed delegation.

* * *

The news from the East is no more cheering for the Hearstites than the prospects here at home.

Murphy of New York has definitely decided that Tammany will not support Hearst, and as a result the batteries of his New York organ is busy violently attacking the Mayor of that city, Murphy's figure-head, and even Murphy himself. The methods employed by Hearst to attack McClellan and Murphy was so characteristic that I shall repeat it: The gas in New York is apparently as poor as it is in San Francisco, and Hearst called upon his readers to send complaints to the Mayor. Immediately His Honor was deluged with several thousand complaints. The Journal urged him to act, and insinuated that if the consumers did not get better gas it would be the fault of the Mayor. The Mayor accordingly wrote a personal letter to each one of those who had filled out a Journal complaint coupon and asked for specific details, with the result that he discovered that a large number of the complaints were purely fictitious. Thereupon Tammany announced that it will not allow Hearst to buy his way back into the next Congress, and that he must stay at home or get a constituency to elect him over whom the Wigwam has no control. Hearst then attacked the nomination of Burke Cochran for Congress, but as the Republicans put up no opposition ticket, he was practically elected without any opposition at all, and Hearst got another black eye. Hearst was invited by the Legislature of Mississippi to make it an address, but as he could not very well stand up before that body and have Arthur McEwen, who it is said writes his letters for him, to stand by and prompt him, he was forced to decline the invitation. In Chicago Andy Lawrence got into a row with Mayor Harrison, and as a result all the Harrison influence is anti-Hearst. Senator Jones is trying to save Arkansas for him, but as Jones could not save himself from being ousted from the Senatorship, his influence in Arkansas is not great enough, it is said, to control the next delegation from there to St. Louis. In fact, it looks now as though Hearst will not have a fifth of the delegates to the National Convention, including California, and if he loses this State, the territories are about all he can count upon, and he is none too sure of them.

Senator Bard may be considered as out of the Senatorial contest. He announces that he will make no effort to be re-elected, and that if he goes back to Washington for a second term, he will only do so at the spontaneous demand of his party and the people. There is not the slightest chance of there being any such spontaneous demand, and therefore the Senator may be considered out of the running. The State is therefore free to select a candidate who will be of some importance in the National Capitol, and who will not give receptions with cheese sandwiches as the only refreshment. Even in the old days of Jeffersonian and Jacksonian simplicity, the diet was heavier than that, for at his inauguration Jackson had tubs of punch, if history speaks truly, for the refreshing of his horde of visitors; and Jefferson was a very liberal provider. Coming after men like the elder Hearst and Stanford, the parsimony of the Ventura statesman makes a very painful impression on the people of Washington, who are unfortunate enough to be invited to his "receptions" and the result is seen in the very meagre results which he has achieved for this State. No man can do successful politics in Washington on a Lenten diet. He must entertain, and if he does not care to he had better stay at home, especially if he has no personal brilliancy to make up for his poverty of menu.

—Junius.

"The Russian does not like us,"
So Mr. Hearst is wailing,
As he paints his dismal pictures
Of our Russian commerce failing.

Suppose the Jap victorious,
But Mr. Hearst won't have it;
For the man that makes his policy
Is Mr. Michael Davitt.

The Pacific Coast merchant is annoyed because I do not approve of the agitation against the Parcels-Post. Then he says: "Do you know that this Parcels-Post movement is backed by a few large Eastern mail-order houses, which, if the bill is passed, will cover the country with their catalogues, not only of groceries, but of every other commodity which is sold to the consumer throughout the land?" This is exactly the position which we have maintained—the agitation against the measure is selfishly made by the retail dealers, and is intended to prevent access to the people of goods at reasonable prices. Gentlemen of the retail trade, it will not do. The Parcels-Post is part of the development of things; it is to benefit the mass of the people, and it will of necessity become a fact accomplished. It is simply waste of time to contend against it. As things are developing now the small trader will have just about as much chance as a hand-loom weaver against the latest textile machinery. And to ask what I am going to do about it is altogether beside the mark. I am not an infirmity for institutions which have outlived their usefulness.

The new method of highway robbery as conducted by ladies is just as effective, and as might be expected from the sex, much more artistic than the common and ordinary male variety. Their formula is about as follows, if we take the Clarke case as a criterion. First catch your man and keep him in captivity a day or two, plying him well with liquor in the meantime. Then make him marry you. In the course of time he will awake from his comatose state and demand of the law a release from the bonds of matrimony. They you come in with your fine work. You demand a divorce on the grounds of desertion, which you know you cannot get for want of the lapse of the statutory period, two hundred and fifty dollars a month alimony, five hundred dollars for costs, and two thousand five hundred dollars for lawyers' fees. It is all very wonderful, particularly the lawyers' fees. The vivid imagination of those attorneys would appear to show that they have missed their vocation. What company promoters they would have made?

The Davitt family appear to be doing fairly well at present. Mrs. Davitt is in Oakland looking after money matters, and her illustrious husband, Mr. Michael Davitt, is selling the products of his pen regularly to Mr. Hearst. No one complains of what Michael Davitt says. A man who has suffered as much for a cause as he has is entitled to say almost anything. But when Mr. Hearst endeavors to persuade us that the biased and burning opinions of this man are of actual value in determining political issues, Mr. Hearst is laughing at us. Incidentally, however, he is getting the nickels of all the ex-members of the Clan-na-Gael.

Professor Hilgard of the State University is one of the greatest agricultural chemists alive. We have a Secretary of Agriculture who has just about as much practical knowledge of matters agricultural as Sir Joseph Porter, K. C. B., had of naval strategy. The politician has made a side attack upon the scholar, and the latter has countered with a reply so beautifully worded and so deliciously ironical that it deserves to be placed on record. He says that Secretary Wilson "does not pretend to be a scientific expert, and we must assume that his ideas on scientific work are mostly the result of his environment." The satire in that "environment" is so deliciously subtle and refined that it is to be feared a mere politician will never appreciate it.

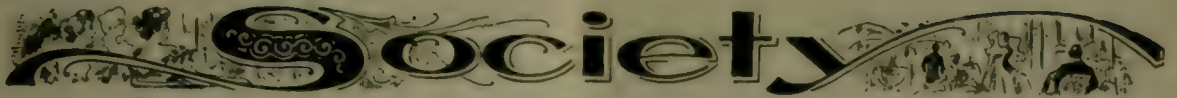

The war is responsible for the resurrection of an old type which I fancied was extinct. It used long ago to be called the "almshouse" politician. You may sit in your restaurant and observe the man with the big chin and noisy manners giving his fellow dry-goods clerks lessons in the art of naval strategy by means of the bread and a couple of dinner forks. Watch him crane his neck to note if he is attracting attention, and hear him bellow his loudest when some one turns an eye in his direction. "An ignorant, noisy fool," you mutter in disgust. My dear sir, he is the stuff of which popular leaders are made. You will find him president of his lodge and a leading man wherever he happens to be. He is ignorant. Nay, wise one, he can talk folly with more wisdom than a philosopher can talk sense.

The zeal for social functions across the bay is nothing short of intense. Lately a number of youths all but broke a house down because they were not invited to a christening. They interrupted the service with cat-calls, and paid their compliments to the principal in the religious rite by heaving stones through the windows. So does the appetite for pleasure become nourished by what it feeds upon. A charivari at a wedding was formerly enough of an opportunity for the rustic to satisfy his yearnings for delight, but now his developed appetite also demands a christening. It also demands at least three months, for the protection of the public.

What thorough-going people our women are. Let them take up any line of active work, be it bicycling, golf or politics, and the efforts of poor man are but as the movements of a feeble infant compared with strenuousness of the woman who has convinced herself that she has something to do. But when women take up club politics, the flames of their enthusiasm mount to such heights of personal abuse that poor man is obliged to blush for them. A little more maver in modo, ladies of the Papyrus Club, if you please.

Albert B. Mahoney, ex-County Clerk and several other things with which the laws of his State are more immediately interested, expresses his opinion that though he may be indicted, he will never be convicted. Unfortunately, there is too much reason to suppose that Mr. Mahoney is a good deal of a prophet. There is a great gulf fixed between indictment and conviction; in fact, it looks at the present time as if he will not be even properly indicted.

The most pathetic incident of the war so far is that recorded at the sailing of the "China." The Russian beef was discharged from the hold of the vessel, as being contraband of war, and the Japanese clambered on the barrels to cheer their departing fellows. When the commissariat is thus defiled, it can hardly be expected that the Slav will have much stomach for fighting.

Society

Dear Bessie: Have you got a work-box? That is the question one hears many girls ask each other nowadays, for "sewing bees" have become the fashionable pastime of the hour since Ash Wednesday came upon us. They are pleasant little affairs; what the Bostonese call "a dish of tea," and dainty cake, and lots of lively chat while the fingers fly fashioning garments for the poor! Fanny Grant was the first to have one, which she gave last week; it was a drearily wet day, which perhaps was one reason why we enjoyed our gossip and tea so much, and I got no end of hints about pretty neckwear which some of the girls were making. Then we discussed the last new play and players, and the last society engagement. Of these several have been made known this week. Possibly the most interesting is that of Bessie Center and J. N. Stane; it has been awaited for months, as it was almost a foregone conclusion when they sailed away together last September. Bessie is an awfully nice girl, and has the good wishes of all who know her. The other happy couples are Florence Bailey and Fred Mohr of New York, whom she met when East lately, with Easter week as the probable time for the wedding, and Genevieve Huntsman and H. S. Willair, and there will soon be others—you mind what I say.

With the exception of Mrs. Harry Mendall's dinner, feasting has been confined to luncheons, and of them there have been a number. Laura Farnsworth had a luncheon and matinee party at the California last Sunday, and in the Palm Garden of the Palace the same afternoon Nettie Schmiedell Howard had a dainty little luncheon party of half a dozen; Amy Gunn gave a luncheon on Thursday—a quiet little party of six of her best friends; and over at San Rafael Mrs. Oscar Sewell was given a luncheon at the Fosters—a party of a dozen or more.

There has been one or two dinners at the Palace, but with the exception of the one given by Mrs. Tim Hopkins in her own rooms there, which were lavishly decorated for the occasion, they have been comparatively small affairs.

Between bowling and cards we are not likely to find time hanging very heavily. The alleys at the new club are all engaged days ahead, but the evenings are the jolliest time for a game; still, cards are the staple form of amusement for whiling away the leaden hours of Lent. Which is the favorite game? I think I hear you ask. Ah, that is something time alone will show. Mrs. Austin Tubbs was the first Lenten bridge party giver, though perhaps I should say she divided the honors with Mrs. Miller, who supplemented her pretty little luncheon last week with the fascinating game. Mrs. Robert Hooker had a large bridge party of thirty-six last Tuesday, and Mrs. Charles Foster and Mrs. Van Bergan were joint card hostesses on Thursday. I hear there is nothing but five hundred played over in Oakland, which has superseded their stand-by, whist, much to the surprise of even the votaries of that game themselves.

I understand that efforts are to be made to have the coming opening night reception of the spring exhibition at the Hopkins Art Institute up on Nob Hill, which is named for the 24th of this month, more nearly resemble, in a society point of view, some of their old-time functions than has been the case for several years past. I do hope they will succeed in infusing a little life into it, for anything more drearily dreadful than the last I cannot well picture to myself. Then there is a good deal of talk about the garden party which the lady managers are to give for the benefit of the St. Ignatius Training School for girls. You know that in this vicinity garden parties have always been a hazardous experiment, the givers of them never seeming to strike the right kind of weather; but how delightful they are when everything unites for their success! So we are all hoping and looking forward to the 9th of April, when it will come off in the Phelan grounds at the Mission—but I will tell you more about it later on.

But what do you think? We are going to have Captain Frank Winn here en permanence, as General MacArthur has appointed him aide on his staff. He arrived last week and expected to sail for the Philippines with his regiment on Tuesday, and Mrs. Boardman, who was so ill during her visit at Del Monte, hurried home so as to see and bid adieu to her son-in-law; you can fancy how pleased she is that he is going to stay. I hear that Sam and Bernie have been having a fine time in Honolulu, but wish it would not rain so much. I went yesterday to see Mrs. Tom Pearce—she was Minnie Burton, you know—in the pretty apartment she and Captain Pearce have on Washington street. She is looking exceedingly well, and her two children are perfect pictures.

California is attracting a lot of Eastern people just now, glad to get away from the frozen East. The George Goulds have been down at Coronado for some time, while I couldn't begin to tell you of all those at Santa Barbara; among them are the Sloans. Here in San Francisco we have the wife and daughters of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mrs. Leslie M. Shaw and the Misses Erma and Enid Shaw, who are being numerously entertained. The D. O. Mills party, which includes the old gentleman himself, the Whitelaw Reids, Miss Jean Reid and her friend, Miss Harriman, have also arrived and are at Milbrae. Mrs. Andy McCreary is also here, and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Harding Davis were here last week, but sailed on the China for the Orient. We are soon to have visits from some of the former belles of San Francisco; Helen Stubbs, who is now in Arizona with her mother, is one of them, and Carrie Merry is another who will be here in April to visit Grace Martin. Don't you recall how popular the pretty Merry girls were, and what a leading place they took in the affairs of St. Luke's Church?

They say the Jack Breckenridges and Mrs. Murphy are soon coming back home; but do not know if it be so; the more the better, for quite a number are talking of fitting Eastward ere long. Mrs. Will Tevis is one, and she expects to go abroad for several months, and so, too will Genevieve King, who will accompany Miss Herrick across the Atlantic, who has been visiting the Kings this winter, and who has already gone East, Genevieve following her next week. Mayor and Mrs. Darling have also gone, and intend to make Florence their home for the next two years, possibly longer. The Borels are going to spend the rest of the Lenten fast down at their home in San Mateo, but are coming back to town for the Easter gaities, which I believe are to be quite numerous. The girls are so fond of an out-of-door life and never take kindly to being cooped up in town.

The Burns McDonalds only waited for Hilda's wedding, and are going to live in Denver; she has the same bright, happy personality which so belonged to her as Bessie Younger. Hilda Baxter and Ralph Hart are to be married to-day. Kate Selfridge has gone East for a two-months' passear. She left Monday. The Arthur Chesebroughs started on their Eastern trip last Saturday; Mrs. Sam Knight and Harry Holbrook have been making a visit to Los Angeles.

The McCutcheons and Sadie Collier are looked for about the end of the month. Sadie is now visiting friends in Washington, and we are to have Miss Jennie Flood back again in a couple of weeks from New York, where she has been having a fine time. She will return with her brother Jim and Major Rathbone, who have just gone East together.

"The All Star Company," a party of young people interested in amateur theatricals, gave a clever little one-act farce at the residence of Mrs. George A. Hastings, on Pacific Heights, last Saturday evening, followed by a leap year dance. Those in the farce were: Miss Anna Livingston, Miss Aida Hastings, Miss Zita Hastings, Miss Esther Lambert, Harry W. Seawell, Frank Erlin, and Charles D. Holman. The most amusing character was that of "Mary Ann," which was well played by Miss Zita Hastings. Those present were: Judge James M. Seawell and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Jordan of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. R. Derby, Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Dodge, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Rix, Mrs. E. H. Palmer of New York, Miss Polly Tongue of Portland, Or., Mrs. H. M. Hastings, Mrs. C. F. Holman, Miss Florence Holman, Miss H. Hastings, Miss Marie Ver Mehr, Miss Hazel Hobson, Miss Ruth Higby, Miss Cornelia Curtis, Miss Levy, Francis Boland, Newton Kelsey, Joseph Hill, William Knowles, Alan Diamond, Arthur S. Holman, Stuart Ver Mehr, Wallace Hastings, Vernon Alvord, Jack Fletcher and William Douglas.

Arrivals at Hotel Rafael during past week: Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Dungan, Mr. E. Held, Mrs. H. W. Brolaski, Mrs. Harry Brolaski, Miss Belle Brolaski, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wheatly and sons.

The mandolin and guitar studio of Miss Rose Brandon, formerly at 478 Eddy street, is now located at 1098 Pine street.

The pony races at Del Monte were so successful that the second meet is to be held at Tanforan on Saturday, March 12th, and Monday, March 14th. There will be six races each day for cups and purses. At the present writing it was the intention of the California Pony and Polo Racing Association, under whose auspices the meet will be held, to make the week of March 14th a gala racing and polo week. Polo championship games will then be held, and although the programme has not been definitely settled, it is expected that the races and polo will be held on alternate days during the week. The crack English and Californian polo players will meet, and some exciting games are expected. In the races, additional gentlemen, in addition to those who were at Del Monte, will ride, and some splendid finishes are looked forward to. The chances are that the race entries will be even better than at Del Monte. Entries to all events close Wednesday, March 9th. By courtesy of the New California Jockey Club the above races will be held at Tanforan. There are no entry fees, and the events are open to all ponies three years old and over and not exceeding 14h. 2in. in height. Ponies must be ridden by qualified gentlemen riders. The rules of racing as adopted by the California Polo and Pony Racing Association govern all races. The Association reserves the right to reject any entry. For stabling accommodations, track facilities and further information, apply to Robert Leighton, Racing Secretary, C. P. & P. R. A., room 21, 421 Market street, San Francisco, Cal.

We may not dance, we cannot sing
The dreary hours away,
The ennui grips you like anything
This rainy, rainy day.

But there's the blessed telephone
To soothe the tiresome hurting,
Lent keeps us from the dance, I own,
But can't prevent us flirting.

Tom Fitch of Arizona, he of the "silver tongue," is adding to the gaiety of nations by publishing occasional reminiscences. That is enough to prove that the erstwhile spellbinder is getting old. Years ago, Fitch was one of the leading men at the Arizona bar. That was in the days when it required nerve to live in Arizona at all, and to succeed at the bar a lawyer had to have some knowledge of the books, but a much greater knowledge of human nature and of the carrying capacity of a forty-five. Fitch's clients included a number of gentlemen who felt that the world owed them a living. Therefore, they picked up any good thing that happened along the highway, always provided the "good thing" did not get the drop on them first. He succeeded in releasing from the clutches of the law so many rising Claude Duvals that the Amalgamated Association of Road Agents elected him an honorary member. And it was no empty honor, as Fitch proved to a visitor from the East. This gentleman was about to start out on the Tucson stage, when he asked Fitch whether any of his clients would be met on the road.

"Well, the boys are getting busy," Fitch responded. "If they get too busy it will make me busy getting them out of jail. But they won't touch a friend of mine. Here, I'll fix it for you," and Fitch took out one of his cards, and wrote on the back:

"To all Road Agents: Please pass the bearer, who is a friend of mine.

TOM FITCH."

The stage was stood-up, the passengers were lined along the road, and one of the enterprising gentlemen was about to separate Fitch's friend from his wealth, when the traveler, as a last chance, said: "Say, you hold on. I'm a friend of Tom Fitch. You just pull out that card in my upper left hand vest pocket and read it. It's a pass from Fitch."

The road agent pulled out the "pass," read it, and then taking a pencil from the traveler, scrawled across the card: "O. K. Arizona Dick."

"You're all right," he said to Fitch's friend. "Tom Fitch's name goes with me. I don't touch you. That pass goes all right. Now, you take it back, and if any of the rest of the bunch should stand you up further down the line, you just flash the paper, and show Fitch's name and mine."

And the man from the East continued his way wondering.

Bailey Millard has been "doing" the Sacramento flood for one of the local papers. The scene of watery desolation has impressed him, and he has used real "literary" language to tell what he saw.

"Under the uncertain moon," he writes, "which hangs a luminous rag among the threatening clouds that lower over Sacramento, lies a great inland sea of muddy water that gleams white and tragic over thousands and thousands of fair and fertile acres which will bear no crops this year."

"Now, I consider that description what Mr. Millard might call an epic. Of course, it is rather ungallant to call fair Luna a rag, but then, remember, Millard says she is no ordinary rag, but a "luminous rag." A rag that is red in the face, as it were. Perhaps he meant she was a danger signal to warn all good men away from Sacramento. To make sure, about this particular moon, he hangs her among the clouds. Most moons rise above the clouds, but those Sacramento clouds are something fierce. They get right in among things; same way with the moon. Raggy Luna, being red in the face, got down among the clouds. Of course, her object was to see the white gleam of the muddy water. That white gleaming mud must be a new brand that the river has torn up from its bottom. The rag aforesaid, it will be noticed, also threw a tragic gleam over the flood. Now, I like a "tragic gleam." It means so much. Millard says it so nicely, too. But he is particularly felicitous in the concluding paragraphs of his story:

"The wrecked river looks malignantly at the town, and says: 'It's you I want. You, you!'"

"But the town looks on the river bravely, and says: 'Not yet, not yet!'"

Bully for the town. "And the villain still pursued her!" Millard, who is a hard work literary critic and poetaster, should set forth his views of the Sacramento flood in hexameters, under the heading: "Bosh and Bathos: or, The Luminous Rag of the Sacramento."

So the expected row in the Papyrus Club has at last developed. None of the husbands of the ladies of the club are much surprised. They forecast it long ago. Jealousy seems bound to creep in, and disturb things in woman's clubs, and the Papyrus is suffering from an overdose of the lady with the green eyes. Of course, men's clubs frequently suffer from the same complaint, but then, clubmen, you know, are not trying to revolutionize social conditions. They are only mortal, and therefore apt to err. The Papyrus ladies are the real thing in culture. Some of the stories told at their gatherings came down from the days of old Rameses, but then, the girls don't care. They are hearing them for the first time, and that is enough for them. Even in Egypt the ladies had rows about the election of officers of their clubs, so the Papyrians may be consoled in the knowledge of the fact that when they fell into dispute over the reelection of Mrs. Kinne they were following an ancient custom. That any dispute should center around Mrs. Kinne is a cause of great regret, for she is one of the women who honor clubdom. No man can get at the bottom of a woman's row, but as far as I am able to make out, the trouble arose from the over-zealousness of one of the club boomers. It is to be hoped it will be satisfactorily settled. At the next meeting of the club, it is said, a leading member will deliver a Shakespearean selection, in which will occur the lines: "Off with his head! So much for Buckingham."

manager of prize fights, and promoter of sporting events in general, was not always as he now appears—a very devil of a fellow. Shortly after Jimmy had been appointed Secretary of the Superior Judges, he was loitering in Judge Coffey's court during the trial of a case in which there was considerable salacious testimony. The court observed the youthful James.

"Bailiff," said the Judge, beckoning the Sheriff's man, "just ask that young man to withdraw. The matters under consideration here are not for the ears of children."

"Jimmy," said the bailiff, "it's your move." And Jimmy moved.

The Looker On is in receipt of a programme which translates the Strauss-Tausig Valse Caprice, "Man lebt nur Einmal," as "Man lives but once." The sender of the programme inquires: "How about woman?" He also suggests that as the first part of the entertainment was a play which served as a "curtain raiser," the second or musical part might fittingly have been termed a "hair raiser" or "curtain dropper."

There is an alarming increase in the disease called "Ferrywalker Vulgarious." The individual afflicted is chiefly noted by a receding chin or a pointed beard a la Albert Edward. The disease very rarely attacks the female, but seems to confine its ravages to the commuting male. The most virulent type appropriates the forward decks of ferry boats and then takes violent exercise walking about in a nervous and jerky manner to the discomfort of all passengers. Subjects that have been under the examination of noted alienists are pronounced only slightly deficient in intellectual development. The disease seems to be more alarming in the morning. It develops in the adolescent, and keeps right on until the patient reaches about forty, when he generally develops enough sense to stop the idiotic practice. There are more victims of "Ferrywalker Vulgarious" in Oakland than Alameda, and but a very few cases in San Francisco. This has not yet been explained by scientists, but is a feature that invites deep research.

There is a heated discussion going on among the literati of San Francisco regarding the mission of Wagner's great production. With each critic or admirer a new "motif" is sprung. Some attribute a purpose to the play or opera that is Buddhistical. Others make all kinds of claims for the Christian's Christ. Musicians discover new features that Wagner perhaps never dreamed of.

Others content themselves with sighing and sighing, and hinting at what Wagner intended to hint through the character of Kundry. In this connection the News Letter may be pardoned for re-printing a letter written by Wagner from Siena, dated Sept. 28, 1880, which knocks the Buddhists into a cocked hat: "I have been asking myself seriously how I can rescue this last and most holy work of mine from the fate of a vulgar operatic career. A decision is rendered imperative by the fact that I am unable longer to conceal the real subject of my 'Parsifal.' How can and dare there be produced in theatres like ours, and together with a mixed opera repertory, a story (Handlung) in which the most exalted mysteries of the Christian religion are depicted in the open scene? I could well understand that the Church might object to the performances of these sacred mysteries on boards where yesterday and to-morrow Frivolity holds sway, and before a public which is attracted only by that same Frivolity. Because of this feeling I entitle my 'Parsifal' a 'consecrational festival play.' Therefore I must seek a stage to which I can consecrate the play, and that stage is nowhere else than in Bayreuth. * * * Never shall 'Parsifal' be produced on any other stage, and it is my one and only desire to find means whereby I can encompass that end."

The spirit of commercialism has given us the opportunity to enjoy Wagner's masterpiece even though the great musician strove strenuously to keep it from us. It is a question whether good Christians may waive the claim of the "Widow of Bayreuth" and attend the theatres giving the "Parsifal." It is a question whether Wagner really had the right to deny the world his masterpiece—whether any great author, inventor or composer has such a right.

PLEASURE'S WAND

A TRUSTY TIP ON THINGS THEATRICAL.

COLUMBIA—Denman Thompson. Good.
GRAND—The Hills of California—Good.
ORPHEUM—Nirvana and specialty vaudeville—Good.
LYRIC HALL—Harold Bauer, a wonderful pianist.
FISCHER'S—Roly Poly to big houses.
TIVOLI—Stupendously magnificent in chorus and mounting—Gypsy Baron.

ALCAZAR—A clean, conscientious, finished performance of Miss Hobbs.

CENTRAL—The audience makes a "break for liberty" after the play.

CHUTES—A very good show.

Jerome K. Jerome could not wish for a clearer-cut or cleaner performance of his sane, healthy and highly enjoyable comedy, "Miss Hobbs," than that given by the Alcazar stock company.

Mr. Durkin was in fettle as "Kingsearl Major," and gave an admirable rendition of the author's lines. Miss Block as Miss Hobbs was at her best, and earned the envy of many a woman in the audience when she appeared in a magnificent creation of the modiste in the last act.

Mr. Harry Hilliard, as "Kingsearl Minor," was forceful, and best of all, earnest. He appeared to better advantage in this play than in any role he has recently attempted. There is much to be said in favor of the other ladies and gentlemen of this company, and it is all complimentary. The play is a good one; it has a purpose; it does more than amuse; it teaches a healthy lesson each night to more than one man or woman in the audience.

* * *

"Roly Poly" continues to fill Fischer's nightly. It is a hodge-podge of nonsense, admirably suited to amuse without burdening the mind to any appreciable extent. The new songs are all good, and Miss Russell's "Ramona" creates a tremendous enthusiasm, and Kolb and Dill, with Allan Curtis, assisted by a camel, do a turn with the song "We Come all the Way from Heidelberg," that catches the house every time for many encores. The little coon who floats in the air in a watermelon chariot and finally descends to the stage to be cuddled by Miss Lynch, captivates the women and children. A good show.

* * *

"The Hills of California" might have been located on any old hills, but still the play is a fairly good one. Frank Bacon and the rooster divide the honors. They are great in their respective parts. The play has been called an imitation of the "Old Homestead," and, indeed, it has many points of resemblance. The Amos Hill of Bacon is a very acceptable piece of work. The rest of the company is all that is claimed. The production is such a vast improvement over the barn-stormers that have recently, with but few exceptions, held the boards at the Grand that the principals and company shine like stars of the first magnitude.

"The Hills of California," formerly "The Estate of Hannibal Howe," is given in a way that any one not disposed to be hypercritical, would enjoy.

* * *

Small audiences at the Central Theatre are greeting "A Break for Liberty," and that's exactly what I did—broke for liberty—as soon as possible. The audience has not the same excuse. They take in these things month after month with enthusiasm, and then suddenly comes a change of heart and the audience becomes critical. There is hope for South of Market when it begins to discriminate.

Strauss, from his seat in the heavenly choir, must have squirmed to hear "The Gypsy Baron" done by the Tivoli people. Ferris Hartman as Kalman Zsupan, makes the worst of his part. As good as he was in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," so bad is he in the "Gypsy Baron." On the other hand the choruses are excellent, and the scenic arrangements are stupendously magnificent. I have seen many an excellent company do the "Baron," and must say that I have never witnessed better stage work or mechanical effects. The Count Carnero of Cunningham is not particularly good. Count Homonay, by Teddy Webb, is worse than Hartman as the dealer in pigs. He utterly spoils the song of the Recruiting Wine, which should be a feature of this opera. Russo was in good voice all week. The diminutive gentleman has trained so long in grand opera that there is little hope that he will ever become an actor. He deserves a great deal of credit for his attempts at English, and while the audience suffers, it is silent suffering, and in a good cause. He is too small as a foil for Carò Roma, and the robust lady must have felt odd while singing love songs over Russo's black wig. Johann Strauss wrote "The Gypsy Baron" as a romantic opera. He gave the pig raiser a singing part; he gave us others in singing parts, and he never intended that the opera should degenerate into cheap buffoonery, with interpolation of modern jokes. "Verbum sat sapienti."

* * *

Nirvana and her statue horse Loki are drawing crowded houses to the Orpheum. It speaks well for San Francisco that such crowds turn out nightly and display such enthusiasm simply out of a love for the beautiful. The specialties on the Orpheum bill are all good and meet with much applause.

* * *

Denman Thompson goes on with his very good work at the Columbia, and the show has been complimented by appreciative houses.

* * *

"Sag Harbor" is being murdered at the California with the customary dullness.

* * *

Harold Bauer, who is the greatest pianist of the world, is at Lyric Hall this afternoon, and will attract an enthusiastic and large audience.

* * *

The Grand Opera House will close for two weeks, at the end of which time Mrs. Fiske will appear.

* * *

I find that my comment has excited the connoisseurs, and the opticians report extensive sales in high-power binocular instruments. There may be method in Miss Russell's madness; it may be she wears such loose-fitting gowns to excite the male man into rhapsodical curiosity as to the possibilities of an unclothed divinity.

* * *

Rice and Elmer, renowned as the most amusing and skillful triple horizontal bar performers before the public, will make their first appearance at the Chutes this coming week in "A Rube's First Visit to Chinatown." The Bennington Duo, clever Tyrolean warblers, will also be new, presenting their very funny skit, "The Other Fellow." James Hennessy, the monologue man, will vary his stories; Coleman and Mexis will continue their wonderful exhibition of sharp shooting, and Kelly and Violette, the "fashion plate singing duo," will appear for the fourth and last week of a most successful engagement in a change of songs and costumes. Mabel Lamson, the popular illustrated song singer, and the animatoscope, showing the latest novelties in moving pictures, will complete the bill. The amateurs will appear in all kinds of specialties on Thursday night. The zoo is constantly in receipt of rare animals from all parts of the world, and new attractions are to be found all over the grounds.

"Mr. Pickwick" will follow the Gypsy Baron at the Tivoli. The music is by Manuel Klein and the lyrics by Grant Stewart. The words are by Charles Klein. Several new faces are to be seen in "Pickwick."

The Barrows-Lancaster Company opens a limited engagement at the Orpheum the week coming, and in the line of musical specialties the management offers the Swedish Ladies' Quartette. Gillo's Artesto is bound to excite the enthusiasm of the audience as well as its most intense curiosity. This is an importation from Paris, and is in the shape of an automaton boy. He draws and at the request of any one in the audience will turn out what is advertised as a portrait of the petitioner. We are told that Homer Davenport is coming to San Francisco again as a public lecturer, and that he is a close second to Artesto. This does not speak well for the dummy, but is volumes of praise for Davenport.

"Parsifal" will open at the Alcazar, under the eye of the dramatizer, Mr. Fitzgerald Murphy, on March 14th, as originally arranged. The orchestra has been doubled at the Alcazar for the performance of "Parsifal."

J. C. Williamson, the theatrical magnate of Australia, before sailing for home on Thursday, purchased from Frederick Belasco the sole Australian rights to Fitzgerald Murphy's dramatization of Wagner's music play, "Parsifal," to be presented at the Alcazar, March 14th.

"The White Horse Tavern" is next on the programme at the Alcazar. This is a unique play, because three love stories are unwound at the same time. It occurs in the Tyrolean Alps, and it will give us another chance to watch these favorite stock people in characters not heretofore tried by them.

The last performance of "The Old Homestead" will be given at the Columbia Theatre on Sunday night. Denman Thompson will on that occasion appear for what will probably be the last time in this city as Joshua Whitcomb.

Among the stars to appear at the Columbia Theatre in the near future are Anna Held in her stupendous production of "Mam'selle Napoleon"; Mary Mannering in her latest success, "Lady Harriett's Honeymoon"; and Richard Mansfield.

"Rip Van Winkle" will be the bill at the Central the coming week, and it is safe to say will meet with good houses.

Plans are being drawn by leading theatrical architects for the complete remodeling of Fischer's Theatre. As soon as they are ready, the house will close for a short time,

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.
F. E. BECK, Manager. P. G. EASTWICK, JR., Ast. Mgr

The editor of the News Letter has received the following communication. It is printed with all due apologies to Fernald Travers.

San Francisco, February 29, 1904.

Editor News Letter: I don't want to swell the appreciation Fernald Travers already has of his own importance by unnecessary attention to his amusing "views of San Francisco," now running like the babbling brook through your columns, but I do want to locate a measly little under-bred "remittance man" of his name, who owes me a few pounds loaned him under peculiar circumstances. It happened a few years ago when my own absence from the family fire-side in England was advisable, and the governor had forgotten to send me the usual twenty pounds. Travers and I had been swelling around Coronado like the ordinary "English gentleman tourist," with our "men," and gall. I include myself in these partnership adjectives, for I have now cut it all, and am living as a gentleman, without the conceited English prefix or affected nonsense of a "man," and within my income. We had been rivals for the fortune of a chic little Boston girl, with stockings of fashionable black rather than Puritan blue, to whom we seemed about equally inoffensive. Travers was much the same sort of an ass your Travers is, and blew his remittance rather more effectively than I and went broke first. Finally I tumbled to myself. I like your American slang; that's a more soothing way of admitting my idiocy than to say I had been splurging as a man of parts, money and ancestors. We were both younger sons of "governors," struggling in trade and society, who had been kicked out on a remittance to be jolly well rid of us. So I drew out of the fortune hunt and went to work—as your Travers may when you quit paying him for his cad rot, unless seeing his name in print makes an "author" of him and he returns to dangle himself before the book-crazy English public. I disappeared for a month, came back up to San Diego with a disguising stubble on my face, and went to slinging hash as a night waiter in a stingaree restaurant where I hoped no one would recognize me. I had been on the all-night watch about a week, when a swell chap with his top coat collar turned up, dropped in one morning about seven o'clock and sided along up into a dark corner and sat down at a table with his face turned from the light. I went up to wait upon him. He scarcely looked up as he ordered "coffee and doughnuts," and I didn't recognize him, nor did he seem to know me. I brought his chicory and sinkers, spread out a paper napkin before him. He looked up grateful for attention in such a dive, tucked the napkin into his collar as "Roger" had taught him to do, and as he raised his chin recognized me. "For God's sake, Carling, have you come to this!" said he. "Yes, Travers, but I don't eat here," I replied. Well, the thing seemed to stun him. He cried like a baby. Of course I pitied the poor chap, and more when I noticed the bruise under his eye and the blood stains on his shirt. As I had been on the all-night shift, and was off at seven o'clock, I brushed up, dallied a little, and went outside to wait for Travers. I had loitered on up the block, thinking of the fellow, when he came out and was at once attacked by Roger, who proceeded to kick him up the street toward me. I knocked the fellow down and caught Travers as he fell into my arms. I almost had to carry Travers up to my room, where I put him into a clean shirt, a suit of tweeds, and took him off to a good breakfast with me. Travers told me a pitiful tale of hard luck—remittances had been cut off: had just about won the girl; hotel wanted their blawsted bill paid; Roger was nasty—wanted his wage: had licked him the night before when he came home. Travers had wandered around Coronado all night, afraid to face Roger again, and ashamed to face the night barkeeper with his unpaid peg score, and had taken the early boat to San Diego, hoping to eat, clean and brace up, and make a raise before Roger could lick him again. Well, I knew what it was to be broke, so I staked him to the five pound note my sister had just sent me as a birthday present, and I have never seen or heard of Travers since. I came here on the last China steamer, read Travers "views on San Francisco," and have written him twice in your care—but he does not answer. Of course, it may not be my Travers, but his caddish resentment of the "dining in Fleet street" suggestion and arrogance over knowing the difference between "dining and eating" led me to feel sure that your correspondent has my five pounds, suit of tweeds and shirt. My Travers used to rail at the fates which had not endowed "English gentlemen" with eternal vigor and feudal tailors to escape the beastly nuisance of having to eat to exist, and owe for clothes. The fellow is welcome to my old tweeds and the money if he needs it, but I'd like to show San Franciscans how he would look to them after I polish the toe of my boot upon the seat of his (or my) trousers a bit.

Very truly,
REGINALD CARLING, Tourist.

PEDICULTURAL PATRIOTISM.

Mrs. Bradley-Martin signifies her adherence to the United States by an abiding reliance in our shoes. An Eastern paper tells us that she placed an order this spring for forty-nine pairs of American shoes. What a comfort it is to us to know that Mrs. Bradley-Martin has remained patriotic in her feet if not in her head! Bless her tootsies! And let us hope they will lead her erring head back to Americanism.

There is a story going the rounds that not long ago Joseph Jefferson took part in a benefit in aid of a New York hospital. He opened the entertainment with a short talk, other noted players crowding at the wings to hear his remarks. Just then two highly-rouged girls of the song and dance persuasion came down the winding staircase from their dressing room. One of them came to the wings, listened a moment and then went back to her companion. The latter said: "Who's on now?" "Some old guy doin' a monologue," was the reply, "and, say, he's doin' fierce. Been on ten minutes and ain't had a laugh yet."

The News Letter is close in touch with all sources of information, and as yet has failed to hear of any failure of any really prominent fire insurance company as the result of the Baltimore fire. The News Letter openly and avowedly told its readers that there would not be any failures in the ranks of the great American fire insurance companies as the result of the Baltimore blaze. Now comes the Rochester fire, and still the daily press, to the contrary notwithstanding, the American fire companies are meeting their losses, and are still doing business at the same old stand in the same old way.

* * *

The American Surety Company, Mr. H. D. Lyman, President, issues the following circular: "The American Surety Company, in its long career, has, as surety, had to meet the losses of other corporations, sometimes in very large amounts, and has done so with equanimity. With equal equanimity, but with no pleasure, it now announces to you that Wallace H. Ham, treasurer of St. Paul's Church, treasurer of St. Luke's Home for Convalescents, and manager of the American Surety Company at Boston, Mass., is a defaulter in about the net sum of $190,000, divided between the Home and the Surety Company in such amounts as only a joint examination may hereafter determine. On ascertaining the facts to-day in full, the executive committee of the American Surety Company ordered the arrest of the culprit, and appropriated out of its surplus and undivided profit account of $2,084,000 sufficient to defray its proportion of the shortage. The above is all that can be said at this time. We have put the loss behind us and jailed the culprit."

The jailing of the culprit is a part of the American Surety Company's business. It has relentlessly pursued defaulters under its bonds as far as Chili, and brought the pursued back to the United States for a long term sentence in the penitentiary.

* * *

To its charter privileges it adds that of a detective agency, and it usually gets the defaulter at its own expense and by means known only to the corporation. Mr. Wallace H. Ham, who was the New England States' agent for the company, at Boston, Mass., pleaded guilty to stealing from a bonding company.

* * *

The facts of the matter are that the bonding company was so careless in the management of its own affairs that it afforded the opportunity to its trusted agent to get away with about a quarter of a million.

The question then comes up, who shall bond the bonders?

* * *

It is a well known fact that in life insurance the policyholder is subjected to a quiet inspection, and it is equally well known that the man bonded by a surety company is constantly under supervision. The cashier, bookkeeper or confidential clerk bonded by a bonding company may rest assured that he cannot play the races or speculate in stocks without the bonding company knowing and warning his principal.

This careful look-out, as well as the vindictiveness of the companies in getting their man, is a deterrent of crime.

The man who is bonded by a surety company must be square and live square, or else face the endless train of detective ability which, if he merits it, will land him in the penitentiary.

Mr. Ham of Boston did not care to speculate from the ordinary man. He flew at and captured larger game.

He was a trusted employee of the American Surety Company, and he swindled it out of about a quarter of a million dollars.

This amount does not affect the company, but it raises the question of the company's business acumen.

No well managed company will allow any agent to handle its securities to this amount and juggle them between two institutions. Mr. Ham seems to have been playing a sort of heads you win and tails I lose game, and the American Surety Company seems to be it.

It, in its circular, confesses that it has put the loss behind it, but what can be said of the company which, contrary to all the espionage methods of its class, is so lax as to permit its agent to not alone handle, but hypothecate its two hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of securities?

* * *

An Eastern exchange says of his downfall: "An accident, trivial in itself, but fatal to his schemes, brought Wallace H. Ham, New England agent for the American Surety Company of New York, treasurer of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and trustee and treasurer of charitable institutions, from a high position in society to a prison cell. An unexpected call by the American Surety Company for its securities led to his undoing, for he had hypothecated them with the St. Luke's Home for Convalescents to cover a shortage there. Facing an exposure, he confessed. He also confessed to embezzling from $40,000 to $60,000 of the Home's funds. An investigation showed that the church with which he had been connected also had suffered. For fifteen years, according to his confession, Ham had led a dual life. Prominent in church work, and looked upon as an unusually successful business man, no suspicion of his probity ever had been entertained. In the "bucket-shops" of Boston he poured from $226,000 to $286,000 of trust funds. Of this amount the American Surety Company loses approximately $225,000; St. Luke's Home, from $40,000 to $60,000; and St. Paul's Church $1,500. In addition to these amounts, Ham lost his wife's entire estate, amounting to about $47,000.

"Twenty years ago he became prominent in St. Paul's Church, one of the oldest and most fashionable in the city, and soon was elected treasurer. About the same time he took an interest in St. Luke's Home, conducted by the Episcopal Church, and was made treasurer of that. According to his own statement he began fifteen years ago to speculate in a small way. He took securities from the funds of which he was treasurer, borrowed on them at banks and did all his dealings in the stock market on a cash basis, though nearly always on margins.

"About four years ago he found that he had accumulated a considerable private fortune. Then the huge bull campaign came on. He entered the market but he was on the wrong side so long that he lost his own money."

This is nothing more nor less than the same old story of the trusted employee and the "busted" employer.

"Ham said he had no special line of speculation. He bought and sold all kinds of stock, good and bad, and says the general condition of the market within the past two years was his undoing. Ten years ago Ham married a widow with some money. Lately he had induced her to give him this, and it is gone now with the rest.

"Ham had made an appointment for last Thursday for an examination of the securities of the St. Luke's Home. It was his habit on these occasions to substitute securities of the American Surety Company for the missing ones, and he had done so for the examination of Thursday. But, without warning, an auditor of the Surety Company dropped into the office that day and asked to see the securities on hand. Ham, unable to gain time to secure enough of the St. Luke's securities to cover the company's shortage, saw nothing to do but confess. Ham is 48 years old. His salary was $7,500 a year."

The story of this Ham is told, and it may unfortunately fall to the lot of the News Letter to write the same history of other men, and the defalcations have happened in San Francisco.

James D. Bailey, Pacific Coast General Agent of the old Insurance Company of North America, sketches the history of the century old corporation in part as follows: On January 1, 1871, the assets of this company were $3,116,236.01, and the net surplus $745,117.68. In that year the company suffered a loss in the Chicago fire of $750,000, and in the following year, 1872, a loss in the great Boston fire of $1,000,000. On January 1, 1904, the assets of the company were $11,290,773.87, and the surplus and contingent fund, $2,452,410.42. The losses of the company in the Baltimore fire will probably not exceed $500,000. After providing for this amount, the surplus, as to policyholders, including capital, is about $5,000,000. In over one hundred years of honorable business experience, this company has paid in losses to its policyholders over $115,000,000.

Professor Albert Van der Naillen will give a lecture at the rooms of the Board of Trade on March 4th, on the subject of wireless telegraphy. A great deal of interest is being manifested in the subject, and the noted electrician will be sure of an attentive and intellectual audience.

BY THE AUTOCRANK

The continued wet spell has somewhat restricted the pleasure of automobiling on the local roads. In the meantime the enthusiasts have been planning for the coming season.

It has been suggested that the Automobile Club of California give a run starting as far north as there are any owners, and continue on down through the State to San Diego. The event could be conducted the same as the Del Monte run last year.

There is a need for just such a run, for it will do more to advance the interests of good roads than anything else that can be thought of at the present time. It will bring the owners in closer touch with one another, and make it possible to work out good laws and good roads in a more satisfactory way. Correspondence can do a good deal, but nothing cements interest in sports and pastimes so thoroughly as the actual personal intercourse of ideas of the enthusiasts. Such a run, which could take in the Yosemite and other many points of interest in the State would make an ideal vacation.

It would be more so if there were several machines in the squadron.

If the Automobile Club of California expects to give a meet in May, it is about time that the officers were taking some steps to prepare for the event. Up to Tuesday no word had been received of a meeting being called. Sixty days is a very short time to get up a meet. That is, if the racing talent is to be brought from the East. Barney Oldfield alone will not be attraction enough. There will have to be several Barneys to draw the crowd to the track. There was not enough publicity given to the last event. It should be so handled that the public will know a week before the races just who will take part.

Now that the Park Commissioners have extended the privileges in the Park, it is the duty of every automobilist to strictly observe the law, and see that others are complying with the regulations. They should report the number to the officers of the club of all those who transgress.

Every owner must feel that it is his special duty to put a stop to any infringement of the ordinance.

The automobilists of Los Angeles are making great progress with their special roads, and it would not be surprising if they were opened by mid-summer.

The Pioneer Automobile Co. last week delivered to Mr. Garland of San Diego a new 1904 Winton Touring Car.

We want uniform "auto" laws in the State.

Mr. A. E. Brooke Ridley takes pleasure in informing the public that his machine shop at 18 Fell street is thoroughly equipped to execute repairs of every description.

We must have an open park to the automobiles.

Dr. J. Coplin Stinson, member of the Board of Health, purchased from the Mobile Carriage Co. a Pierce Arrow touring car, which he is to use in his practice. The Doctor has owned a popular priced automobile, but he found it did not possess sufficient speed for his work.

* * *

We must have better roads.

* * *

Three more curved dash runabouts were shipped to Mr. George H. Osen, the Pioneer agent at San Jose.

* * *

We want California to be the winter racing ground of the world. There is no other place so well suited to the game.

* * *

J. A. Marsh, president of the Mobile Carriage Co., and Mrs. Marsh, have returned from their trip to Del Monte. The conditions of the road were exceedingly bad. On the return over the San Juan grade the mud was to the axle for a distance of fourteen miles. There were five people in the Arrow, making a very heavy load under the conditions. The little car went through without a mishap or assistance.

* * *

We want San Francisco automobilists to keep their eye on Los Angeles, or they will be distanced in the race for popularity.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. De La Montanya, and party of friends, after an afternoon's run in their French touring car, dined at the Jefferson Square Club, after which they spent the evening bowling.

* * *

We want a great highway from Oregon line to San Diego.

* * *

The Reverend Cyrus Townsend Brady and Mrs. Brady were the guests of Frank E. Hartigan, manager of the Mobile Carriage Co., for an automobile ride about the city. The French Arrow was placed at their disposal and the trip was made through the Park, Cliff and about the Presidio.

* * *

We want a race meet that will give us all the world's records.

* * *

R. E. Olds, of the Oldsmobile fame, is visiting California. He has been spending some time in San Diego, and Mr. Brinegar, president of the Pioneer Automobile Company, is in receipt of a letter stating that Mr. Olds will visit San Francisco in about ten days.

* * *

We want to hear of the pleasant runs made by our readers. Send us a description of your outings.

* * *

Arthur W. Robinson, English manager of the Locomobile Company, returned recently on the "Celtic." He was accompanied by Mr. Irving J. Norse, of the London office.

* * *

We want to see a red-letter year in the sport on the Coast. Everybody with their shoulder to the wheel.

Mr. W. J. Cornell, the well-known cashier of the Pioneer Automobile Company, who has been with the company since its incipency, has just received a very flattering offer from an Eastern manufacturing concern. Mr. Cornell, while not a Native Son, is much taken with California life.

We want the ferries to carry autos at all times.

The Pioneer Automobile Company is in receipt of a copy of a letter written by Mr. A. A. Moore, Jr., to Mr. Riker, vice-president of the Locomobile Company of America, at Bridgeport, Connecticut, in which he describes the most perfect run from San Francisco to Los Angeles:

"I have just returned from a trip from San Francisco to Los Angeles in my four-cylinder Locomobile.

"The distance was 487 miles, 230 of which was over mountains. I took the Coast Road. From the time I left San Francisco until I arrived at Los Angeles, the engine never stopped of its own accord. In fact, it ran as perfectly as my watch. Not even a spark plug was removed, or a monkey wrench applied. Nothing about the vehicle was broken or sprung, and when the machine arrived in Los Angeles it was in as good condition as when it left, with the one exception that on a long mountain grade, a section of a wooden brake shoe was burned up to the extent that not even the charred ashes remained. This did not interfere, however, with the working of the brake. Nobody seems to believe that the car

THE JAP.

Being a reminiscence of the advance on Peking, by Corporal Rufus Green, 9th Infantry, U. S. A., the same being set down by Herbert David Walter.

Of all the different soldiers that I met across the sea,
There's a fighting man, who does his country proud.

Who's always Johnny-on-the-Spot, wherever he may be,

Though he's so small you'd miss him in a crowd.
The Englishman he swaggers, but he's nery and he's clean.

The Frenchman simply isn't worth a rap.
The Russian's mighty dirty, and the German's a machine;

But the keenest man in China was the Jap.

Yes, you bet your life the Jap,
On a hike, or in a scrap,

He's the guy what is an honor to the trade.
He'll put up a rattlin' fight
After marchin' day and night;
For he's the finest soldier that is made.

The Russian keeps on marchin' like a lot of driven swine,

But he couldn't use his block to save his neck.
The German needs ten officers to bring him into line,
But kill 'em off, and he becomes a wreck.

Our boys can do some fighting, and they shoot the best of all,

Though to beat the others shooting is a snap.
But in each and every mix-up that I can now recall,
The man that did the business was the Jap.

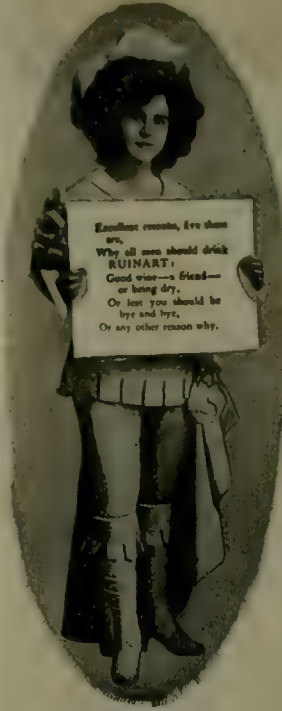

Said their General: "The enemy is tired—so are we;
But the enemy is scared, and we are not.

And since to get the Boxers we came across the sea,
We're going to make the pace extremely hot."

So they marched the Allied Armies most completely off their feet;

And they chased the Boxers all around the map.
But it wasn't only hiking, for the man that had them beat

In discipline and neatness was the Jap.

A Riotous Foreign Mob.

It would be unjust as well as untrue to refer to California as a lawless State, and yet the way things have been going for some time past, and not due to any overt act upon the part of our own citizens, serves to cast a reflection of disorder within her gates, which is not pleasing, to say the least, for law abiding citizens to contemplate. Twice within the past six months the owners of prominent mines in California have had to appeal to the strong arm of the Federal Government for protection of life and property. In the last instance a band of newly imported foreigners, who, from all that can be learned, are scarcely able to speak the American language, have literally taken up arms in a peaceful commonwealth, which they have invaded with the avowed intention of obtaining a livelihood, and threatened their employers. The strike at the Royal Mine of Calaveras County was bad enough in its way, while that at the Rawhide Mine of Tuolumne County, owing to the conduct of the strikers, can only be denounced as an outrage. It is one thing where a body of intelligent American citizens knock off work to settle some difference of opinion with an employer. With them there is no danger of violence to person or property, and an amicable settlement can always be expected. It is different, however, with the beetle-browed type of low-class foreign element, who in their native haunts are but a grade removed above the Asiatic coolie. The strange part of the affair in the case of the Rawhide disturbance is that the authorities do not make an effort to suppress the mob without having to drag the Federal Government into the affair. There should be power enough upon the side of the law-abiding element of the county itself to see that the reputation of California does not suffer at the hands of aliens who, by their very action of to-day have proved themselves an undesirable class to be granted the privileges of American citizenship. The whole fact of the matter is that the Government has had its attention so closely concentrated on the western portals of the country in an effort to check the ingress of an alien horde from the Orient that it has overlooked the Eastern entrance to the country, with the result that an element has been permitted to creep in from Europe, which had been better kept out. There is some satisfaction in knowing, however, that now that the power of the Federal Government has been invoked, it will go hard with those who oppose it, and that order will be maintained at any cost. Objectionable arrivals from the Orient are transported without much trouble under the category of "undesirables," and the same law should be invoked to move some of the Rawhide alien rioters back where they came from in short order. A few examples of the kind might teach this class of foreigners the lesson that the first thing they must do when they enter this country is to learn how to behave themselves.

Another Notable Industrial Combine.

The absorption of the United Gas and Electric Company by the California Gas and Electric Corporation has furnished the "street" with another opportunity to discuss the ability of our local financiers. We have had the very remarkable elucidation of the problem how to figure up millions on paper and come out short on the cash end of the horn in the United Railroads, where the New York promoter got the best of the bargain, and then followed that remarkable exhibition of financiering, the S. F. Gas and Electric combine, so top-heavy even from the start that it could not stand on its own legs for a moment without being propped. Now comes the California Gas and Electric combination, with a bonded indebtedness of over $23,000,000. Of course this company makes a large amount of money, but it will take a mint to meet the charges on the indebtedness. It will be interesting to follow the fate of all these heavily capitalized combines in face of a proposition always likely to be encountered in the form of opposition companies. The investing public will very naturally be cautious in dealing in a class of security where the industrial values are shaded by the speculative results of market manipulation of bond issues which are not so easily worked off here as elsewhere.

Banks Spring up in all Directions.

One would think that there were banks enough already of all classes to handle the business of the State. It would appear not, however, from the manner in which licenses are being issued by the California Bank Commission, no less than 8 new concerns Bank Commission, no less than eight new concerns being granted in one day during the past week. There is no denying the fact that the millions in gold coin are piling up here all the time, but not so fast that the old-established institutions are not in a condition to handle it. Naturally the old and well known banks will continue to obtain the patronage of the public, and for this reason it is difficult to understand where and from whom these new banks expect to draw for support. Most of these incorporations were incubated during the temporary suspension of the powers of the Bank Commission. The number of the creations taking place in such a short period of time makes one wonder how many would spring up, mushroom-like, had the powers of the State Board been abolished instead of a mere suspension. It looks very much as if every second man of ordinary means in California desires to figure as a banker.

Pine-St. Market, average on Pine street just now, with prices ruling firm.

No effort is apparent to boom prices, and as for manipulation, every indication of it has disappeared for weeks. And yet the market shows no disposition to fall off, and there is a steady demand for every share offered. The prospects in the north-end mines continue to improve, and if the true condition at certain points in this quarter of the lode were fully appreciated by the public, prices would be materially higher for many of this special line of shares than they are to-day. However, the realization of the truth of the matter will come along in time, and then some changes for the better may be expected.

Local Stocks and Bonds.

Business on the Stock and Bond Exchange during the past week has developed few new features, with a dull demand and prices weak as a rule. A bid, the first on record, for California Gas and Electric—58 at 93 and 95 asked. It is generally believed that Spring Valley can legitimately secure a much better rate by an appeal to the courts, where the true value of its property can be exploited.

It is too much to expect an ability in this particular line of intricate appraisement from the average political swashbuckler, whom fate has provided with a seat in the San Francisco Board of Supervisors, as one of the handy men of a fiddling-boss. This is evident, on the other hand, by the way the Board was jollied into allowing the San Francisco Gas and Electric Company 90 cents per cubic feet for gas, with no provision in the way of penalty for poor quality and bad service. About 65 cents per 1000 would have been the correct figure, according to the evidence presented this august body, which seemed content to bow before the haughty individuals who, for the moment, evidently imagine they own all the gas consumers in the town. Before many months have elapsed a new company will have entered the local field, a prediction which some doubting Thomas with a friendly leaning toward the present gas barons can make a note of for future reference. It would be an interesting matter to hear the subject of the values of this concern threshed out in open court. They would simmer down materially from $25,000,000 if some of the air was let out. With all the dullness in the local industrials, there are indications of livelier times and higher prices in the sugar stocks.

Mining in Siberia. According to the report of R. T. Greener, the American Commercial Agent at Vladivostock, Siberia, the Russian regulation preventing foreigners from exploiting gold mines within sixty miles of the coast, or even in participating in the gold-mining industry in the maritime province, instead of being relaxed, as was hoped for by some of the foreign miners who had already paid a good price for work done before the law has again been confirmed. Russian Jews can only engage in such mining where they have the right to live outside of Jewish settlements. A very rich quarry of lithographic stone is situated in the vicinity of the city of Kootais. Notwithstanding the profit that its exploitation would yield, no one seems to care to undertake the business. This report was filed some weeks before the war broke out, and now of course, under the changed conditions, the industry has been practically stopped, and no work of any magnitude will likely be undertaken until peace reigns again.

The Financial Red Book of America is a directory of the leading financiers, industrial magnates, retired men of fortune, women of independent means, managers and executors of large unsettled estates, and others who fill stations of financial responsibility, and is a work wholly unique in its special field. The volume which has just been issued is a compilation of the names of those individuals and large estates throughout the United States that are believed to be worth $300,000 and more. Although in the main filled with hard and dry facts, the pages of the volume reveal something more than the merely material statement of America's wonderful prosperity. About 15,000 names have been collected as coming within the requirements of the work, and these are presented in attractive style and in a manner that makes them convenient for ready reference and frequent use.

The Story of Yan Loo Tat

BY P. N. BERINGER

The Official Directory of the Far East speaks of the savages of Formosa in the following manner: "There are two classes of savages in Formosa, namely, the savages of the plains and the mountaineers. The hill tribes coerce the men of the plains to assist them in carrying on war against the Japanese, the latter being reluctant to break the friendly relations that exist. Among these savages there are tribes whose young men are not allowed to marry until they have brought into camp the head of one Chinaman at least. * * * The Formosan bent on winning his spurs as a valiant warrior lies in wait for some passing Chinaman, or perchance a party composed of three or four Chinese tradesmen, upon whom he springs from ambush before they suspect danger. A short scuffle, if any, ensues, and the headless trunk of an inoffensive Chinaman lies on the ground, while the savage, bounding over hill and dale, makes off to his camp with the coveted trophy in his hand. Upon arrival, the warrior goes straight to his chief and lays before him the ghastly evidence of his prowess. A war dance is soon in full swing, amidst which the hero of the hour is introduced to his bride, and before many hours he is allowed to take her to his bark hut."

* * *

When I came to the cane cot Maclean feebly held out a hand and gradually drifted into the chief story of his life.

He spoke in French. "My friend," he said, "you are not alone in wanting to know of me. I hope it may do you some good. It has never been of benefit to me, this knowledge of myself.

"I was born in Formosa, near the village of Tamsui, during the time Liu-Ming-Chu'an was Governor of Formosa. Liu-Ming-Chu'an was a man of extraordinary ability, and he did more in his day to bring the people of Formosa to civilized ways than any other influence before or since.

"Through his influence my father, who was a provincial chief, was induced to place me with Dr. MacKay, a Protestant missionary, who gave me the rudiments of an education. When Mr. Maclean, the English contractor, built the Tamsui Railway, I went in his employ along the line in charge of the track-laying force. Mr. Maclean became interested in me to such an extent that he sent me to Hongkong, where I entered one of the Christian institutions to perfect my education. I soon became dissatisfied, and communicating my dislike to Mr. Maclean, he placed me with a private tutor, who gave me instruction in the French language.

"It was after I returned to Tamsui that Mr. Maclean gave me permission to take his name. At the same time he placed me in charge of the telegraph system which he was placing through the lowland provinces and as far into the interior as the savage tribes would permit.

"Our family is of Malayan origin and extremely clannish. We have always despised the Chinaman or those affiliated with him. My father was a Buddhist in his belief, and my education under different sects of the Christian religion had not given me great confidence in the white man's teachings. Up in the mountains, on the northern road, I was sent to string along wires and establish telegraph stations. I have always suspected that Maclean's kindness to me sprang originally from a desire to conciliate the tribal chiefs along this line of road, as they nearly all were related in some manner to my family.

"Upon returning from the end of the line, I decided to take a trip into the interior and visit the camp of an old chief, an uncle of mine, a brother of my mother. I had keen expectations of a warm welcome, but in this I was disappointed. The old man was devoting the remaining years of his life to weird religious rites, part Buddhistical, part savage. He was quite an expert in the taming of vipers, and his performances with fire and magic made my blood creep.

"I should have quitted the camp, never to return, had I not caught sight of his daughter. It did not take more than a minute to convince me that I should never be happy until she became my bride. As my people rarely consult the women in this matter, I immediately made my proposal to the father. The old man was indignant. He delivered himself of a long speech against the outside world in general and the Japanese in particular.

"His venom was directed against my clothing, the manner of dressing my hair and my unnecessary accomplishments. He criticised my father, and finally wound up by denying me the girl's hand unless I became one of his tribe and dropped entirely the ways of civilization.

"I loved the girl—Geta was her name—with a wild passion that may not be described. For many days I brooded upon the condition, and then I came to the conclusion that once she was my wife I could flee to Tamsui and defy the old man.

"The next day I put aside the clothing of the white man and the ways of the civilized. I donned the tribal headband and assumed a position of authority as the chief's nephew.

"Having complacently demeaned myself to suit his pleasure I now demanded the girl of my uncle. We were sitting before a fire from which at will he brought, by passing his hands over it red, green or yellow flames.

"He turned his hideous, parchment-like face toward me, and said:

"You masquerade well, my nephew, but there is one condition you must fulfill. Remember that you must bring in a head, the head of a Chinaman, ere you can claim my daughter."

"Filled with horror at his demand, I made a mute appeal to his daughter.

"I am my father's daughter,' she said, looking defiantly at me, 'and you are a Japanese coward. Conform to our tribal customs, become a true man, and I will be yours. You had better go at once. Go!'

"After I had left that old devil at his mysterious fire and wandered into the moonlight, I broke into a run down the mountain path toward civilization.

Before making the first turn in the road I looked back toward the great cleft in the rock. There was a green light in the sky, and in relief stood a black figure. It was Geta, and as she saw me stop she flung up her arms. I thought I heard her laugh and the one word: 'Coward!'

"Seating myself by the side of the road, I pondered on the situation. It seemed to me as if a weight of blackness, which never again has lifted, had descended upon me. I thought of my opportunities. I thought of my ambitions and of Maclean and the good missionary, Dr. Mackay. I also reasoned that between civilization and savagery it was but a question of clothing, customs and surroundings. I had seen the white man in China do things that would have shamed a tribesman. I had seen the white man with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other.

"That night lizards croaked incessantly, and it was always the same thing—'Geta, Geta, Geta!'

"I wore a sword something like the Tagalo bolas, and I tried its edge upon my thumb. After all, what was one coolie the less?

"A feeling of numbness came over me and I think I dozed away.

"When I was again conscious it was not yet morning and the night lizards still croaked. I was unutterably tired. Presently I heard some one coming up the path. Instinctively I grasped my sword. It was a man. Just as he passed the spot where I stood I let him have the sword. With all my strength I struck the blow. His head rolled down the road and the body blocked the path. I must have been demented, for I picked up the body and tossed it in the bushes, muttering, 'Somebody might fall over you and get hurt!' I remember that I was much surprised to find the thing still warm when I grasped it by the hair. It was then I discovered the man was no Chinaman. What matter?

"It was with a feeling of joy that I stood again in the cleft of the hill. The old man was still at his mummeries, but before I could speak he raised his head and said:

"I knew you would come back!"

"Geta was lying beside him fast asleep, and at the sound of his voice she raised her head and looked toward me.

"With a swing of the arm I flung the head between them. The thing bounded upon the bark shelter, and after remaining a moment as if suspended, it tumbled into the fire.

"Geta gave a wild cry and fell to the ground, her hands pressed tightly to her eyes. Then rising, after one more look, she sprang into the jungle, from which rang back her shrieks.

"The old man, too, hobbled away into the underbrush as fast as his aged legs could carry him.

"Jumping down, I made my way to the fire. Then for the first time in the light I got a good look at the face.

"It was the head of Geta's brother."

We are indebted to Congressman Livernash for the "Memorial Address on the Life and Character of William McKinley, President of the United States," by John Hay. Delivered under date of February 29, 1904.

"It seems," said the leader of the rescuing party, "that the bandits bound and gagged you in the regular comic opera style." "Oh, no, they didn't," replied the victim. "The gags they used were entirely new."

Mrs. Goodun—Now, after that nice, hot coffee, perhaps you'll be able to split some kindling. Woodent Thinkofit—Sorry, mum, but I forgot to tell you I'm a coffee fiend, and yer well-meant kindness has broke my nerves all up so's I must have perfect rest.

"What are you doing with your hands in my pockets?" demanded the man who had been gazing in the shop window. "Why, sir," whined the crook, "der ain't no pockets in these trousers, an' me hands are cold."

Growl, and the way looks dreary,
Laugh, and the path is bright,
For a welcome smile Brings sunshine, while
A frown shuts out the light.

Sigh, and you attain nothing,
Work, and the prize is won;
For the nery man
With backbone can
By nothing be outdone.
Hustle and fortune awaits you,

From an excellent article in the well-known insurance journal, "Business," of London, England, we take these stimulating paragraphs:

Don't tackle a man in a faint-hearted way, as if you were ashamed of your business.

Enthusiasm is catching. Be enthusiastic in your work and you will enthuse those who work with you.

The practical definition given by energetic minds to the word "difficulty" is—a thing to overcome.

"Men who have risen in the world are not those who have been helped along, but those who helped themselves by putting their own shoulder to the wheel. Whether you work for fame, for love, for money, or anything else, work with your own hands, heart, and brain.

The world has no sympathy with, or respect for, disappointed people. "Laugh, and the world laughs with you; weep, and you weep alone."

He who every morning plans his day's work, and follows out that plan, weaves a thread which will guide him through the business labyrinths of life.

It has now developed that one of the Grand Rapids (Mich.) aldermen sold his vote for $80. How can bribery ever be made respectable when it is put upon such a cheap basis?

Mrs. De Flat—Have you anything new in folding beds? Dealer—Only this, ma'am, and it really is quite a success. On arising in the morning you touch a spring and it turns into a washstand and bathtub. After your bath you touch another spring, and it becomes a dressing case, with a French plate mirror. If you breakfast in your room, a slight pressure will transform it into an extension table. After breakfast, you press these three buttons at once, and you have an upright piano. That is all it will do, except that when you die it can be changed into a rosewood coffin.

"Didn't I hear your wife refer to you as the human mince pie?" said the curious person. "Yes," answered Sirius Barker. "Is that a compliment?" "Not exactly. She means that I never agree with anybody."

He was a philosopher and a talker. She was a woman of action. They stood together on the bridge and watched a tug that was hauling a long line of barges up the river.

"Look there, my dear," said he. "Such is life. The tug is like the man, working and toiling, while the barges, like the women, are—" His wife gave him no time to finish the sentence. "I know," she said. "The tug does all the blowing and the barges bear all the burden."

Once there was a rich man—a very rich man—who wanted to do something very handsome for a struggling institution of learning.

He called the directors together and said to them:

"Gentleman, I propose giving your institution $5,000,000."

"But," they said, after they had recovered from their surprise, "it will be impossible for us to raise the $10,000,000 that will be needed in order to secure your munificent gift."

"You will not need to raise any $10,000,000," he replied; "the donation will be unconditional."

"Then the money will be invested in bonds or real estate, we presume, and we shall be allowed to use the income in erecting new buildings and paying running expenses?"

"Not at all," responded the rich man. "The gift will be in cash, to be used in any way you please, and when it is all gone there will be another $5,000,000 at your disposal, gentlemen, if you have spent the first sum wisely."

The directors consulted together in whispers and then quietly sent for an officer.

The man evidently was insane.

How San Francisco Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 10

Really, don't you know, I am quite disgusted at the actions of the masses as seen here in your city. I think it is quite abominable. They are an uneducated, ruthless mob governed and swayed by sentiment, don't you know. Me and Roger walked out the other morning after a very early breakfast at 12:30, and I went over to the paper offices to see what the crowd was looking at. I found the ordinary news being painted on a long sheet by a painter man and a whole lot of cheering being done by the beggars who were looking at the painter man. Of course, we must allow these people to enjoy themselves, and I stood it as long as I could, then beckoned Roger and walked away. The beggars who were looking at the sheet were not the class of chaps who make soldiers; they are the other lot who make loafers. They would be suppressed if your Bobbies knew their business. I can't really possibly refrain from criticising what I call the bumptiousness of Americanism. It is different, I take it, entirely from English Jingoism. I am an American born, but thank heaven, I am English bred, and I object to my own countrymen making the mistake of thinking that yelling and flagbearing is patriotism. I am speaking simply of those whose manners should be better (the masses follow the classes' example), and you should show them as I do by actions that patriotism is one thing and that the Birmingham article is but, as your ex-president once phrased it, "offensive partisanship." I am truly sure that we, the Americans, are next to the British the best fighters on earth, and this in my opinion is history, but you must not by any means, don't you know, mistake shouting for valour and the stimulus of drink for bravery. I can't permit it. The American women are better bred, intuitively, than the American men. On the continent I have met American men. I have met them in Berlin, in Munich, in Dresden, in Paris, and in London. I have also had the ill-fortune to meet them in my travels in the Orient.

I have met some few of them, abroad, but very few, that I would be pleased to meet again. Those who were welcome at private homes and at the clubs were hopelessly in the minority. In France or Germany, if I hear an American smashing the language of the country into flinders, I feel like taking the trouble to go to the Consulate and find out who he is before I tell him that I can speak English. This saves me endorsing a draft, don't you see. I have pulled out a lot of you abroad at my personal expense, sorrow and trouble when I really thought the chap deserved it, and I have left it to the Consul a whole lot of times to get rid of the American whose only claim on him was a passport. The American race is all that it should be, but it is "gauche" and the name of being an American on the Continent is synonymous with what I am sure I know to be at least double charges. This is owing to the pork-packing and grocery fellows who go from America and view the National Gallery and the Louvre in ten minutes. The sort of personally conducted chaps who debauch the objects by hiring a private guide who tells them all he knows, and more, within the ten minutes limit. The habit now of the continental waiter when he sees three or four Americans get around a table is to beckon with one hand for a new bottle of whiskey, while with the other hand signals for the "garde civil." The ordinary American abroad, as I have seen him, is the flag waving, yelling, fullsome fool that I saw in front of the paper offices. I really think I may go further and say that the American abroad is obtrusive and offensive both to his own countrymen and others. He is so beastly careless of his money that the name American has become a by-word among the blooming waiters. He is so blasted ostentatious that the well-bred man shuns him, and the ill-bred parvenu follows him.

American patriotism is a real thing, but patriotism abroad does not mean a box party in Brussels, where the commercialism of the actors leads to a compliment to the American nation, and the ill-bred indecency of the box party leads to an interruption of the performance. Still this has happened. I saw it.

I am a stickler for good form, and I am almost as jealous of the name I bear as I am of my reputation for doing the proper thing, but had I found my kennel man yelling as I found the men in front of the paper office the other day, I should have heeled him. You folks have lots to learn, and blame me one of the lots is that hollering is not fighting and enthusiasm is not patriotism. When we went to the front in the Boer war we did it quietly, don't you know, and when we go to the front in the present trouble between Japan and Russia, it will be done in the same way, and the men who will do the fighting, British and American, will not do any yelling, and to lead a company of Americans against Russia would just suit the mood of

TWO LULLABIES.

By Marian Warner Wildman in Everybody's

What shall thy lullaby be, dear?
 Croonings of belted brown bees;
 Whispers of wind in the trees;
 Oriole's rune in the hot midnoon;
 Meadow-lark's melody, lyrical, clear;
 Cooing of pigeons and lowing of cows;
 Shrilling of katydids in the green boughs;
 Ripple of brooklet and splash of the rain
 Drowsily, dreamily tapping thy pane—
 Voice of the forest, the hills, and the sea,
 These—all these—shall thy lullaby be!

What shall thy lullaby be, dear?
 Merciless passing of feet
 Down in the wearisome street;
 Discord of cries from the alleys that rise;
 Voices of barter and anger and fear;
 Rumble of wagons along the rough stones;
 Jest and quarreling, laughter and groans;
 Drink-gendered ravings and curses of songs—
 Shrieking of trolleys and clanging of gongs—
 Sleep, if thou canst, in this grim nursery!
 These—all these—shall thy lullaby be!

SUNRISE ON THE ALETSCH GLACIER, FACING THE WEISSHORN.

By Hugh Macnaghten in The Saturday Review

Unwitnessed, at the birth of every sun,
 Here, in the mountain solitudes sublime,
 Eternal power reveals itself through time,
 And morn by morn the mighty works are done.
 And here to-morrow on the lonely way
 There may be signs and wonders, and the same
 Transfiguration turn no heart to flame;
 Ah! well for me that I was here to-day.
 I stood above the range of earthly care
 And rested in the sanctuary lone,
 Breathing the grace of sacramental air
 From snowy courts around the great white throne,
 And in the silent sunrise unaware
 I passed into the Presence, and have known.

FOREST TO THE CITY.

By Harold Child in Outing

Over desolate, untilled farms,
 The forest saplings creep;
 Until at last their sturdy arms
 Above the roof-tree sweep.
 Across the bowed and crumbling roof,
 The clinging scions greet,
 In gloomy, solemn, mute reproof,
 The City's teeming street.

THE RAPE OF THE WILDERNESS.

By Harold Child in Outing

With each stroke of biting blade,
 On cypress, oak and pine;
 The pendulum of Destiny,
 Knells death to art sublime.

—The epicure knows that an oyster should be eaten as near the oyster bed as possible, and that the least possible time should ensue between the time the oyster is "tonged" to the minute of consumption. Moraghan's Oyster House in the California Market is world-famed as the place best to secure the succulent bivalve. The "chef" is pre-eminent as a master of the art of cookery, and no one seeking satisfaction in oysters will ever do aught but praise Moraghan's.

An austere Board of Education has interdicted dancing among the high school girls of Little Falls, N. Y., because some of them kicked too high. Upon reflection we must admit that elevation is better for the mind than for the toes.

Caliente, Nev., rejoicing in the fact that it is the temporary terminus of Senator Clark's Salt Lake railroad, lays claims to distinction as the worst town on earth. People who have been there recall the quality of its meals and say "Amen!"

The Russian cavalry is in need of grass. Such is the sage information detailed to us. Horses are not usually in want of grass. Tin cans or old shoes serve their purpose admirably. The Russian ships are in need of steam would be equally true. It would not apply, however, to the Examiner staff.

There is no end to the accomplishments of the Roosevelt family. Mrs. Roosevelt now appears as a nurse, while the manifold accomplishments of her distinguished husband are too well-known to need further cataloging. When the children grow up the family can enter upon a career of general supervision of social and political matters.

SLOW JUSTICE.

It is a shameful fact to record, but it is true, that San Francisco has had more than one hundred homicides since any one has been hanged for a murder done in this city and county—a condition of affairs that speaks ill for our past and augurs ill for our future. The fault is not hard to find; it is no great task to lay the blame where it belongs. Upon the bench of the inferior courts are, for a great part, men notoriously amenable to the secret sinister influence of the gang which exists by cheating justice of her due; at the tables of the prosecutors are men of no ability or of especial skill in the deliberate bungling of pleadings in the interests of malefactors with money or "pull," at the desks where records are kept and where the summoning of jurors is conducted are still other rogues well trained in the art of making trial by jury a farce. Beyond all this array of cunning crookedness is a system of appeals, of stays and of delays on technicalities that makes the imposing and execution of the law's ultimate penalty the rare exceptions. The red-handed murderer, convicted in spite of "fixed" juries, complaisant judges and carefully careless prosecutors, is yet in no present peril of the rope. There is left for him all the labyrinth of the Supreme Court with its myriad possibilities of escape from the death penalty and its certain assurance of delays in year-long installments. The course of statute-making and code-revising holds out no promise of a surer and speedier execution of judgment in capital cases. Indeed, the trend of legislation appears to be more and more toward the relegation of those laws which provide the death penalty to the dead-letter section of the statute books. Session by session the Legislature goes on putting new stumbling blocks in the road to the gallows, and a Supreme Court whose specialty is reversing its own decisions, goes on making it more and more difficult to draw the noose and spring the trap.

The endless delay which our laws and our courts afford to the least influential murderer operates to deprive capital punishment of the essential element of its effect. The hanging of a murderer two or three years after his crime is of little value as a deterrent. Capital punishment so long deferred becomes merely the enforcement of the "lex talionis," the exaction of a life for a life, and that is precisely what our theory of the death penalty does not contemplate. Practically, as well as theoretically, the gallows should be not a means for the permanent removal from society of a man proved to be a menace of the lives of his fellows, but a place for the exhibition of a powerful deterring influence, a grim warning to the shedder of human blood, a publication of notice that there is no room in our civilization for men who lay violent hands upon their kind. But, in fact, so long a time elapses between crime and punishment in those rare instances where Justice claims and is awarded its own that the public is not able to recall with definiteness for what cause the hangman performs his function. We doubt seriously whether it would not be better to quit hanging than to hang so long after the deed. Some things we may well learn from the English, and among them is how to deal with murderers, robbers, burglars, footpads, and the like, so as to put a check upon the more serious crimes against the person. The noose must be swifter and more certain. The prisons for felons must be less pleasant places of abode. California's record of unpunished crime is too red to be of value as an advertisement of the State.

FAKE BUSINESS METHODS.

A great boom is noticed in business of an illegitimate kind, with the furniture trade of San Francisco as the present field of operation. Honest enterprise we always hasten to commend, and keen competition among merchants we regard as a sign of commercial health, as long as it does not lead to misrepresentation and "faking." But there is so much palpable fake about the methods of certain of the furniture houses that have lately sprung into prominence here that we are bound to call it to public attention. The worst offender calls itself the "Grand Rapids Furniture Company," and does business on Market street. Its modus operandi is that of a curbstone faker or a fly-by-night bogus jewelry concern. With columns and pages of newspaper advertising that must cost it thousands of dollars a week, it is pushing the sale of furniture, the cheapest, flimsiest and shoddiest ever put on the market—

Its latest trap for the unwary is an offer to give away among its dupes a house and lot "guaranteed" to cost the concern $5,500. Any business man knows it is not likely to do so; that the house and lot, if it exists, probably cost no such sum, and, further, that when it comes to the award, it is possible for the "Grand Rapids Furniture Company" to take good care to arrange that detail so that the prize will fall where it desires, and that would be either into the hands of somebody closely related to its management or somebody to whom it owes money.

A campaign of this kind is highly detrimental to the city and to its legitimate business interests, filling the homes of poor people with trash that will be fit only for kindling wood in a year or two, and driving honest dealers and honest goods out of the market.

There are others than the "Grand Rapids" people in the furniture-faking business, but it is the most conspicuous just now by reason of its loudness and boldness. Its house lottery scheme is the limit of illegitimate business methods, perilously near the line of downright fraud.

A PAST MASTER OF HYPOCRISY.

In his favorite role of "the friend of organized labor," Hearst's hypocrisy is at its rankest. God, or whoever it was that made this apology for a man, built him with a double face and a forked tongue and a mind incapable of straightforwardness. He might, possibly, be honest if he tried, but if that be so then he has never tried. The pinnacle of his turpitude is scaled when, for his own vulgar ambition's sake he sets himself up as the best friend and advocate of the labor unionists. The men who work for him in organized trades are the best witnesses of his knavery in this respect, but their testimony would cost them their jobs, wherefore they are naturally silent. But the case against him can be made out otherwise.

Here is an example of Hearst's "friendship" for union labor: A few weeks ago he was brought face to face with an ultimatum from the union of photo-engravers, the climax and culmination of months spent by this organization in trying to make him live up to his agreement with it as to the use of the plates or matrices sent to his San Francisco paper from his New York paper. The contention of the engravers, pressed home to Hearst here and in Los Angeles, was that he could not fairly make zinc plates of illustrations in one of his establishments and reproduce them in his six other papers without paying for them as if they were etched anew for each paper. He had long before recognized this principle in dealing with the printers' union concerning "plate matter," furnished by advertisers, and had also admitted it in his negotiations with the etchers. But at last, seeing that to live up to his engagements would cost him many thousands of dollars every year, he coolly repudiated the etchers. He would not have dared to defy his printers, pressmen or stereotypers, whose organizations are closely allied, but he knew that the etchers' union was not affiliated with the other unionized newspaper workers, and he could see no danger in flouting them, feeling certain that they were too weak to injure him. As to possible publicity, he relied, as he had often done before, on his secret understanding with the mis-leaders of labor here and elsewhere, to "break" any complaint the engravers might make, and keep it from going before any of the central councils.

Thus secured by his own strength and the union's weakness, Hearst virtually told the etchers to "strike and be d—d." They struck. A "scab" crew prepared the illustrations in the Examiner office that night and for several nights. Whether the matter has been adjusted we cannot say, but it is safe to assert that the union did not get what it asked.

Here is another case: A year or so ago an effort was made to unionize the newspaper reporters of San Francisco. It was an ill-advised attempt to accomplish the impossible, and the union died in early infancy. Other newspapers were wise enough to foresee this outcome and did not concern themselves about the movement. Hearst hunted down the men in the Examiner office who had been active in advancing the ill-starred union and discharged them all—not for the effort to unionize, but on this or that thin pretext.

It is knowledge of these matters and of many more like them that makes the rank and file of organized labor weary when they read such pronouncements as Hearst published in Sunday's Examiner, describing his own part in forwarding the cause of the workmen with all the power of his purse and his papers. The truth is that Hearst has long been exploiting organized labor for his own selfish end—the end of electing himself to the Presidency of the United States. Organized labor will do well if it pray to be delivered from such "friendship," preferring the enmity of its avowed foes to the double-dealing, self-seeking hypocrite Hearst.

THE SUPREME COURT OF HAWAII.

Judge Henry E. Highton, formerly of San Francisco, is being spoken of as a candidate for the Supreme Court of the territory of Hawaii. It was thought at the time of Judge Highton's departure from San Francisco that it would not be a long time before the qualities that have made him so favorably known as a jurist would bring him in the public eye in Honolulu.

Mr. Highton's change of residence was caused by the fact that his wife was for a number of years an invalid, and her physicians counseled a change of climate. It will be pleasing to her friends to know that her health has been completely restored, and that owing to this fact she is endeared to the Hawaiian climate and people. Judge Highton's name is closely interwoven in the history of California. He is a life member of the Society of California Pioneers, and has frequently been a vice-president of that institution. He was admitted to practice in 1860 in California. Judge Highton in his 42 years' career in law in California has handled nearly 4,000 cases, and these were nearly all in admiralty, real estate and commercial law. His remarkable success is shown in the settlement and trying of about 2,500 cases. He has had three or four hundred cases in his office for years. He has tried 15 or 16 murder cases of exceptional character, such as the Kalloch case, the Harlan, Gilmore and Taylor cases, and the Pearson case of Utah. Merely representative of great cases may be mentioned the Hopkins Estate case (estate $33,000,000), Cox vs. McLaughlin, Cole vs. Bacon, Confiscation cases, Passenger cases, Public School cases, Blythe case.

Mr. Highton has earned the unique distinction, among public men, of never having traveled on a pass, nor has he ever accepted a complimentary ticket to a place of entertainment. We doubt if there be any man of like standing, exposed to the same blandishments and temptations, who can make the same claim. Judge Highton will probably be nominated to fill the place now occupied by Judge Galbraith, a Democrat, who was appointed by President McKinley, and whose term expires on June 5th of this year. It is seldom the News Letter has the pleasure of endorsing the candidacy for public office of so worthy a gentleman.

POSTAL NECESSITIES OF A METROPOLIS.

Some time ago the News Letter urged that the officials in Washington increase the force of carriers at the San Francisco office. There are indications that this suggestion is to bear fruit. Thirty-one new carriers are to be appointed. The force of mail carriers is one of the best in the country, and indeed it may be said that the entire clerical help at this point is one of the best that has been obtained by the public service anywhere. It transpires that the immense growth of the city has not been taken into consideration by the Government at Washington, and that every branch of work in the local office is crowded with work and an increase in help is wanted throughout. Competent statisticians say that the population of San Francisco is 425,000. "In 1901," says the Postmaster, "there were delivered daily 145,000 pieces of first-class mail, mostly letters, In 1903 the average ran up to 199,000 pieces. The volume of mail to be delivered has increased 30 per cent during the past three years.

CARBON MONOXIDE AGAIN.

Again the deadly nature of the gas furnished by the local monopoly has been given a tragic significance. Mrs. Julia Crawford was killed on March 4th by the gas escaping from a small tube connecting a cook stove with the fixtures. She is only one among a thousand victims, and as she was alone in the world there will be no fuss made over her untimely taking off.

Colored men in Springfield do not mean to be lynched without some sort of compensation, and property owners are afraid of fire. That is the worst of lynching—it provokes the feeling that if one is to be lynched, the operation should be made worth while.

What on earth do the Russians want to trouble about neutral ports for. They will soon have no navy to put into any port, neutral or otherwise.

OUR FRAUDULENT CHARITIES.

There can be nothing more absolutely contemptible than battenning upon the miseries of others. Making capital out of the afflictions of the miserable has always been accounted one of the deadly sins, and rack-renting landlords and sweaters have always come in for a particularly bitter dose of invective and insult at the hands of moral reformers. But what are we to say of those who make money under the name of charity itself, and to the sin of oppression of the poor add the, at least, equally vile one of hypocrisy?

We are by no means free from such people in this little city of ours, where as a rule we are clear of dire poverty and the slum misery of the great centers is mercifully so far spared us. Still even in our comparatively happy condition there are those to be found who find the misery of a city like this sufficient to provide them with a means of subsistence, at least, and an opportunity for systematically and unceasingly victimizing the public. Some of these institutions are small and of little account; others are more ambitious, and collect comparatively large sums of money.

Following the Salvation Army, concerning whose administration of the funds submitted to its care, but little criticism can, on the whole, be made, arose a whole batch of minor societies, among which one calling itself "The Army of Heaven" was for a long time conspicuous. This band, taking for its motto the statement of our Lord with regard to the proximity of a celestial kingdom, employed the interval in soliciting alms from the well-to-do, ostensibly for the purpose of assisting the afflicted. These funds, however, for the most part were applied to purposes of organization, otherwise to the maintenance of the officials.

Other societies which are not so conspicuously self-seeking as this are still liable to suspicion, owing to the defective system of book-keeping which they use, and which if not actually fraudulent at all events gives rise to suspicions in the minds of the discreet which ought not to be raised by any charitable or so-called charitable institution. An accurate and complete account of the moneys received and the ways in which they have been expended is an absolute necessity, and the Endorsement Committee of the Associated Charities was instituted for the purpose of assuring the public in this matter. Unless this committee will guarantee the society it is very well worth the while of the charitable to satisfy themselves at least before they adventure any benevolence which involves pecuniary outlay.

There are actually societies which contribute more harm than good to the community, and which yet appeal to the public for funds, of the distribution of which no actual account is rendered. What shall be said of the Society for the Prevention of Vice? Here is an institution with a sufficiently imposing title which might be expected to do police work of such a nature that those who are subjected to the temptations and snares of which a city is always full might find some assistance. It must also be noticed that the opportunities possessed by such a society for illegitimate and immoral purposes is almost unlimited. Such a society should be actually above suspicion, and its accounts should be open to the closest possible investigation. What do we find, however? It is in the hands of a man who is so little to be trusted that the Police Department have found it necessary to take from him the star with which he was formerly entrusted upon the grounds that he is not worthy to carry it, a man, moreover, against whom proceedings have several times been taken.

A long and not altogether useless article might be made on the minor and hole-in-the-corner institutions which prey on the indigent and rob the miserable and the charitable alike, but it would serve no particularly useful purpose. The public should be on its guard against such unworthy frauds, and by cutting off the money supply would soon render their existence impossible.

THE PULEX CALIFORNIENSIS.

Some Eastern tenderfoot, temporarily resident in Riverside, writes to Leslie's Weekly and complains of that innocent little creature, the flea. In the first place the complainant in the case is a l—gentleman. He has a habit of neglecting speaking acquaintance with the truth. Fleas are in no wise as plentiful as he depicts, and they certainly are not so vicious. If this exotic from the snow-clad hills of the East prefers blizzards, floods, torrid heat, frozen thermometers and all the allied disagreeables of his native State to fleas, why does he not return to that delightful land? For his benefit and the benefit of others, let it be known to the uninitiated that the California flea is an institution originally inaugurated for the benefit of mankind. The Pulex Irritans is nature's cure for lassitude in lazy latitudes. He thrives best on red plush chairs and sofas, and is responsible for the strenuous life led by some Californians south of the Tehachapi. Notable cases are Harrison Gray Otis and Charles Lummis. It is said that these two gentlemen are so afflicted by this vermin that their frantic endeavors to fasten their troubles on other people are many times taken for manifestations of mental power. A close microscopic examination of the subjects has been made by experts and the trouble has been pronounced fleas. From these radiating centers of activity in the Angel City, colony after colony of insects have strayed. The Lummis variety has invaded Arizona, and is chiefly prevalent among the Indians where their progenitor, Lummis, has had a rubbing acquaintance. The Otis variety is found chiefly in Los Angeles, and it has never wandered far from its native heath, although it is on record that it once caused the Harrison Gray variety to jump the Rubicon.

Do not confound the Pulex Irritans with the Common Louse. The latter is a more dignified and respectable member of the insect race.

University Gossip

By the Undergraduate

The Faculty "Chapparal," the combined production of President David Starr Jordan and Professors Kellogg, Alden, Smith, Newcomer, Clark, Angell, Elliot and Snodgrass, has appeared at last, three weeks behind time, but thoroughly up-to-date in other particulars. This is the first instance in the history of the University that the faculty has been permitted to lay its profane hands on the Stanford comic bi-weekly, except in the guise of censor; and it has proved to the satisfaction of the present evacuant that it is impossible to get out a comic paper without knocking. Even the faculty knocks! It fairly hammers in a few cases, taking for its legitimate mark the defenseless head of the student; but it has padded the hammer or the cranium of its victim, and does not strike hard. Still, it seizes its golden opportunity to show up rhythmically and otherwise the chronic grafter, the men who wear sweaters to class, the girl who works her prof., the inveterate college tattletale, the man who woos in public, and the flunked-out boaster. The art work is decidedly "en caricature." Professor Snodgrass has missed his calling, and should apply for a job on Puck. A bit of decorative work is supplied by Mary Wellman, a professional artist. A good deal of verse, fully up to the standard set by the undergraduate (!) is in evidence, and even the much scorned pun is pressed into service.

The first editorial, presumably by Dr. Jordan, is in the nature of a lament, which ends: "Better take a straight tip from the old fellows who remember pretty keenly what they let slip at twenty, and get both hands into the present grab-bag." The last pays a tribute of fellowship to the undergraduate editor, Ike Russell, on the plea that "the touch of nature covers a multitude of sins." The edition is thoroughly college in flavor; the majority of the jokes and hits are local, but as such are bristling with brilliancy. Now that it is over, the undergraduate dares breathe freely, and is thanking his happy stars that it is no worse than it is. Dr. Jordan, meanwhile, is on the broad grin, feeling that he has proved himself a boy again.

The festive automobilist, who daily grows legion, is registering a kick against Stanford, in that he is not allowed to propel his gasoline engine along any of the University roads. Politely worded signs placed at the main gateways inform him of Mrs. Stanford's request that automobiles keep off the campus. This means that the modern tourist must dismount from his chariot at the outer gate and trust himself and his party to the mercy of horseflesh and 'busmen, if he would see the sights inside; and he complains that it causes him extreme annoyance and inconvenience—hence the kick.

The Stanford English Club, that gained distinction last year by its excellent presentation of "The Knight of the Burning Pestle," is on the point of publishing a small volume containing "Traditions of the University." The traditions are in the form of papers written by professors and old graduates concerning former "doings," and the manner in which the university has been built up in its fourteen years of existence.

The absent-minded beggar, famed in his own class, has been outdone by a Berkeley professor. The latter, after preparing an experiment in one of the laboratories, in which dangerous chemicals were employed, with a time limit to their fusion, forgot all about it, and escorted his wife to a theatre in town. Some mention by one of the actors of "combustible materials" made him suddenly remember the things he had placed under glass. He hurriedly left the show and took the next ferry for Berkeley. He arrived at the laboratory about ten-thirty, only to find that a student working there had prevented the combustion.

"I was at the theatre when I thought of it," explained the professor, mopping his brow.

"Were you alone?" asked the student, innocently. "By Jove, no! I was with my wife, and I've left her over there!"

Fortunately, the woman in the case was possessed of common horse sense, and made her way home unprotected.

One of Stanford's faculty jokes that may bear repetition, is supposed to be culled from an examination paper:

The Minister of Foreign Affairs

A Few Solid Facts.

Events in the Far East the past week have not been at all dwarfed in importance by events in our own hemisphere, but the latter should interest more for the moment. As predicted by the News Letter when American warships were ordered to San Domingo to ostensibly prevent the revolutionists from destroying the property and endangering the lives of foreign residents on that part of the island, but in reality to find an excuse to gather the little republic into our family of colonies and dependencies, the work of assimilation has reached the point of determination to do it. Word as near official as need be comes from Washington that the administration has decided that the only way to insure peace and protection to the white man's interests in San Domingo is for President Roosevelt to assume a protectorate right and hereafter have the concerns of that country supervised by this Government, and that such a step will be taken in the very near future. The two republics of Hayti and San Domingo are divided by an imaginary line, and the former is as prone to indulge in political revolutions as the latter. Consequently, sooner or later, the protectorate would have to be extended over Hayti, too, and in any event a protectorate would simply be the first step towards annexation, which would soon be consummated. When these two republics are rounded up we shall have an addition to our negro population of about 1,500,000. This, together with our home negro population and our colonial human acquirements, will give the United States fully 25,000,000 of people who are not even remotely connected with the white race, and whose habits, customs and ideals are antagonistic to the white man's progressive spirit and labor for a higher and a still higher civilization. And these blacks and browns and yellows in our national life constitute a problem whose solution will have to be faced sooner or later. In this connection it may be intimated at least that the proposed San Domingo protectorate, the disruption of the Colombian republic by the secession of Panama under the secret direction of the Washington Government, the "identical note" to the powers that the Russo-Japanese war must be confined to the territory of Korea and Manchuria, and that in no event must either of the belligerents trespass upon Chinese territory, and the American-Chinese treaty of commerce by which this nation could establish consulates in Manchuria, Russia to the contrary notwithstanding, were all the product of the brains of the British cabinet, but executed by our State Department. Also did three of England's ablest statesmen find it "convenient" to be in Paris during the framing of the Spanish-American peace treaty, and it was they who furnished the "afterthought" of the Washington Government to demand the cession of the Philippines, and, too, it was the British Premier, George Canning, who framed and put into about twenty-five words the now famous Munroe Doctrine, and sent it to President Munroe with a diplomatic suggestion that such declaration would be a good thing for the United States to make. President Munroe and his cabinet quickly saw the point, and in his next message to Congress, which was in December 1823, the "Munroe Doctrine" was declared to be a principle of this nation, but we have lost sight of the other part of the declaration, which was that while not permitting foreign nations to get a foothold in any of the American Latin States, the United States would not interfere with the affairs of Europe. The United States are up to their eyes in the affairs of Europe and Asia, and are playing the biggest horn in the "concert of nations." All this is no reflection upon the statesmanship of the Washington Government, but it shows that our rulers are open to British suggestions.

Events in Eastern Asia.

Apparently the Japanese have made but little progress the past week, but it is possible that they have made a great deal. The navy is bobbing around between Port Arthur and Vladivostock and striking severe blows, but neither of those strongholds have been forced to capitulate, though it is apparent that both will fall sooner or later. The Russian fleet at Port Arthur is reduced to three ships, and only one of them is a first class vessel. The Vladivostock squadron is not more than four or five ships, and they of the cruiser standard; besides, three of them are at sea, with three Japanese battleships, three cruisers and four torpedo boats in possession of their route of return to the Vladivostock harbor. But the strategy of the Japanese is so mysterious and secretly kept that military experts are merely guessing, and thus far the unexpected has happened. Never before in modern times was there a war that furnished newspaper correspondents so little real news. The Russians are quite willing to have all kinds of misleading and untruthful items of current happenings sent out, but the Japanese do not even do that much. The entire Japanese people seem to have resolved themselves into one great family, with each member pledged to guard and keep everything concerning the progress of the war as a sacred family secret. However, events show that the Russian tactics are to avoid a land engagement until their numerical force is two or three times greater than Japan's, but this the Japanese understand very well, and they are rushing toward the Yalu River to strike before the enemy is fully concentrated, but their march has been impeded by severe snow storms. Faith in Japan's ability to cross the Yalu and strike a crushing blow is growing stronger in military circles everywhere, but the fact remains that Russia can send two soldiers to Manchuria to Japan's one and still have a sufficient reserve force at home for local demands. And it is this fact that causes Japan's sympathizers to hope that she may strike so fast and so hard at the start that subsequent re-inforcements to the Russian army will not more than make good the losses. And it is this same fact that is drawing the United States and Great Britain closer to the firing line to be ready if Japan fails to strike crushing blows from the Yalu on to the enemy's strongholds in the interior.

Obituary

Dr. Herman H. Behr, a scientist of world-wide repute, on last Tuesday passed peacefully away.

Dr. Behr's death is a distinct loss to California and the world in general. He was born in Germany eighty-five years ago, and had lived in San Francisco for many years. Dr. Behr occupied the position of Curator of the Academy of Sciences at the time of his death. The old gentleman was also a member of the Bohemian Club, and he was universally esteemed.

Peter W. Watson, a prominent wool merchant of this city, died Sunday afternoon after a brief illness. Mr. Watson was a native of Scotland, but had resided in this country since his youth. San Francisco had been his home for a number of years, and it was here that he got his start in an important business career. He amassed quite a fortune during his life-time. Mr. Watson is survived by a wife and two brothers, Benjamin and James Watson. He was a prominent member of the Masons and other secret societies.

James P. Cogswell, in many ways a remarkable character, a pioneer of '49, one of the earliest manufacturers of San Francisco, died on March 7th. He was the founder of the hardware business which now bears the name of De La Montanya, and he also founded the Standard Soap Company. Mr. Cogswell at the time of his death was eighty-seven years of age. He leaves a widow and one step-son. This son is Mr. H. W. Mortimer, a well-known insurance man of San Francisco.

Charles Willey, brother of O. F. Willey, the well-known San Franciscan, died this week in Sacramento. Mr. Willey was an estimable citizen, and for twenty years held a position in the United States Surveyor-General's office. He was sixty-five years of age at the time of his death. His passing away is deeply mourned by his associates.

The Emporium

The Library Table

The Imperialist. Mrs. Edward Cotes has written another novel bearing the above title. She is better known under her maiden name of Sara Jeannette Duncan, and her "American Girl in London" is probably the most widely-read of her works. Mrs. Cotes possesses a lively style and unusually good powers of writing an interesting story, but she has also what very few women have hitherto shown that they have, the ability to comprehend political questions and to place political strife before the reader in an agreeable and informing manner. This book shows her at her best in these matters. The political questions raised by Chamberlain, the whole important question of the formation of a great empire out of the disjecta membra of the British possessions is the theme of the work, which is a new contribution to the question in that it discusses it from the colonial point of view. The hero is a young Canadian lawyer and politician who is appointed on a commission to visit England, and while there he comes under the influence of Chamberlain. He becomes a convert to the ideas of that masterful and imaginative statesman, and returns to Canada to forward the propaganda on behalf of imperial unity. He becomes a political candidate and is defeated in his attempt to gain office by reason of his imperialism, which alarms the timid professional politicians; incidentally, also, he loses his sweetheart.

The value of the book consists in a study of the various conflicting emotions with which the Canadians view the imperial idea. It is pointed out that the interests of the Dominion are naturally first and foremost in the minds of its people, and that the general tendency, sentiment apart, is to support such policy as will be locally beneficial. Hence they see-saw between the idea of closer commercial union with the United States and a close connection with the Mother Country, which would determine their economic future, for a considerable length of time, at all events.

As a novel there is not much to be said for the work. In fact, the only love story revolves around two of the subordinate characters, and partakes rather of the decorously conventional than of the exciting. Venus saunters through the pages in long skirts. The intention of the writer is unmistakably serious. She has evidently studied the matter at first hand and has acquainted herself thoroughly with colonial opinions. The political speeches are weak places. They are too set, but it is no easy matter to write a modern political speech so that it looks well in print.

Of course, the question always arises whether, after all, such questions are best discussed through the medium of fiction, whether it is not overloading the muse of romance a little to make her carry a serious political theme. If the subject be considered a legitimate one for a novel, the author deserves every praise for her idea and her method.

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

Biographies. The Appletons publish three new biographies, which have reached us simultaneously. The first of these, chronologically, is that of William Penn, as the founder of Two Commonwealths. The author is Augustus C. Buell, who is known as writer of the lives of Sir William Johnson and Paul Jones. It is an interesting book, possessing no particular graces of style, but free to a much larger extent than is usual in such works from the intrusion of the writer's personality. The main incidents in the life of the famous Quaker are given with much care as to necessary facts, but very little heed with regard to important detail. This is the chief value of this book—one is able to extract the gist of the matter easily and readily, and we are not compelled to wade through the mass of inconsequential facts with which so many historical writers love to fill their pages. The result of the reading of this book by the present writer has been a complete change of view with respect to the peaceableness and impeccability of the Quaker.

"James Oglethorpe" is a biography in the Historic Lives' series of the founder of the State of Georgia. The book is dedicated to the "Children of Georgia," and has been written with the idea of familiarizing the youth of the State with the life and career of its Founder. It should serve that purpose very well. Harriet C. Cooper is the writer.

"The Man Roosevelt." To most of us who are somewhat tired of the constant exploitation of the President's personality by the writers of books, this last addition to the procession appears somewhat unnecessarily. There is at the present time a small group of writers who use their personal acquaintance with the President as a means of obtaining a livelihood. The result is neither dignifying to the President nor edifying to the public. This book, however, is somewhat of an exception. The preface is straightforward and manly, and has a little touch of regret in it for having undertaken the task which compels forgiveness. On the whole, the account is fair and inspiring, with no more adulation than is to be naturally expected under the circumstances.

This is the reprint of a poem by The Grave. Robert Blair and is illustrated by reprints of the etchings of Schiaorvetti, of William Blake's pictures. The edition reprinted is that published by R. H. Cromek in 1808. It is a pretty little copy, well-printed and well-produced. It should be found interesting to those who care for these reprints.

D. Appleton & Co., New York.

"The Man Who Pleases and the Woman who Charms," is one of those little books which contain maxims for making one's self agreeable, as part of the gentle art of "getting on." It is free from nearly all the objectionable features of most of its class. The utility of such works always appears to be a little doubtful, but if they have to be done, and the demand would seem to show their necessity, this could not be done better than in this particular instance. The chapter on "Good Manners" may be particularly recommended to students of the State University. Hinds & Noble, New York.

Polo Pony Racing at Tanforan

The California Polo and Pony Racing Association will give a two days' pony racing meeting at Tanforan to-day, March 12th, and Monday, March 14th. This will be the association's initial meeting before a city audience. The first meeting of the association, recently held at Del Monte, was a great success, and emboldened by the success there attained, in place of a one day's meeting as originally scheduled, the directors decided upon holding two days, and also to largely increase the number of cups and amount of purses to be there competed for. The racing requirements are most amply provided for, and with the adequate transportation service arranged for their patrons, a large and fashionable attendance will grace the meeting with their presence on both days. Amongst the popular favorites who will carry silk are the well-known trio, "Silver Dick," "Becky" and "Fusillade," the latter may hardly prove to be in his best racing form, having recently been retarded in his training through having bruised his foot. Mr. Carolan is too good a sportsman to disappoint the public, and his handsome son of St. Leger will doubtless be seen carrying the popular blue and white in all the long-distance events.

"Silver Dick" has a speed reputation extending over three States, and with a trio of victories to his credit at Del Monte, he will no doubt carry a large amount of the public's money in each of his efforts. Rumor says that his owner, Walter Hobart, will again be in the saddle, his late pilot, Mr. Lawrence McCreery, being unfortunately debarred through indisposition from again accepting the mount. With "Becky," Mr. Rudolph Spreckels hopes to lower all previous existing quarter mile pony records, and with his favorite recently showed marked improvement in her training trial, the cerise and fleur de lis will certainly be in front on more than one occasion. Among the other ponies who have won their way into public favor may be mentioned Mr. W. E. Pedley's "Carlotta," Mr. McCreery's "Lucy Gitters," Mr. Spreckels' "Maud H.," Mr. Carolan's "Florodora." A numerous list of debutantes will also carry silk at the meeting for the first time.

Mr. Thomas A. Driscoll, whose recent accident still debars him from active participation in racing and polo, will fill the position of Clerk of the Course, and woe-betide any jockey who occasions any delay; Charles D. Jeffries of Spokane will act as starter, and he is willing to pledge his reputation that should "Miss Miller" face the flag, he will get her away without trouble or delay. Mr. D. W. Randall will act as Official Time Keeper, and the Stewards of the meeting are the same gentlemen who so ably officiated in like capacity at Del Monte, viz: Messrs. Charles Raoul Duval, F. J. Mackey, and Charles Butters. Robert Leighton will be Clerk of the Scales and Handicapper. Special trains will leave the Southern Pacific Depot, Third and Townsend streets, to-day and Monday at 1:30 p. m., returning immediately after the last race. Special electric cars will leave Fifth and Market streets every fifteen minutes after 11:30 a. m., in addition to the regular service. Tomorrow the polo game for the championship of the Pacific Coast will be played at Burlingame. The handicap tournament will be continued on Tuesday, after which the visiting team of English poloists will probably turn their faces homeward.

Jeffries said to Munro:
 "Work may go to hell,
 Let us go to 'Frisco,
 Where the gudgeons dwell.
 Hire a hall and fake a fight,
 Raise a crowd to see the sight,
 Make five and twenty thou. all right,
 Hear the suckers yell!"

 Made just thirty thou. all right,
 And 'Frisco liked the sell.

When is one insane? The answer would seem to be when the accused party does not please his heirs at law. Take Dr. Jacob Dugan's case. He left forty thousand dollars. Now, according to the ordinary estimate of sanity, he could not have done anything more sane than that. He lived in filth to accumulate it. This also is quite in accordance with the popular idea of things as they should be. One may touch any amount of filth, always provided that good money results. But what is good in the copy books is not good in the Probate Court, and a herd of angry nephews and nieces is besieging the ear of Judge Coffey with indignant protests of the successful man's insanity. Wisdom is justified of her nephews and nieces, also, and the only way to avoid being called a "mad miser" is to spend your money while you are alive, when they will call you a "dissipated old scoundrel."

The popular myth of the moral influence of women receives a blow in the case of Dr. J. Milton Bowers. Here is a man who, according to all the opinions of those who know, deserved hanging; who, by his own admission, put an end to two wives, and only escaped death by hanging for the murder of a third by a miscarriage of justice. Such a person, however, found no difficulty in getting a fourth woman to marry him, and it is reported that his effects give ample evidence of his popularity with women. Bowers was admittedly courteous and gallant in his manners. These qualities count more in women's estimation than all the virtues which they are supposed to inspire. Men like Bowers will receive every favor and consideration, while the honest and the hardworking will be ignored and despised. To win the favor of women there is one infallible receipt—dress well and lie glibly.

The gift of an American flag to hang in the auditorium of an Oakland Presbyterian Church is another instance of the deplorable tendency to secularize religion. If one goes to Church to see the same sights and hear the same things as are common to the outer world, what is the use of going, and what is the function of the church?

Berkeley is to be made an architectural wonder of the zig-zag, esthetic tan-colored variety. Between the collegian and the club woman it will be a beautiful place. But thank the Lord, we don't all have to live there.

They are so slow in their movements in Fruitvale that the police cannot even keep the police station from being converted into something other than a place for the detention of the suspected and arrested. So many years have gone by since the place was needed that a speculative real estate man has converted the jail into a cottage, built rooms on, run a fence round it, and created a garden. The tardy guardian of the peace only awoke to the fact that he had no place in which to house his prisoners when he actually needed it. It reads like a pretty romance of the South of France, only the French story would not say anything about the installments which the present tenants have paid to the real estate man.

To endeavor to escape from the Broadway Jail is not only a natural—it is a really meritorious—act. No prisoner concerning whose redemption there was the slightest hope, would ever consent to stay in Broadway Jail and await his trial. The odor of the place is sufficient in itself to turn an innocent suspect into a dangerous criminal. It contains all the worst features of a medieval dungeon, including the ugliness of the jailers. It is known all the world over as a filthy and barbarous place, and it is the butt of penologists of two hemispheres. It should be taken for granted that an attempt at escape from the Broadway Jail is one of the most unailing signs of the possibility of redemption of the prisoner, and any skillful attorney should use it in favor of his client on trial.

The much-heralded "labor-day" at the State University has been and gone. It proved exactly two things which I fancied that it would prove—the inability of the students to do one day's really serious work. The advertised labor proved to be for the most part a mere advertisement. Rough house and all sorts of skylarking continually interrupted the proceeding; no self-restraint was shown, the behavior was so bad at lunch time that some of the girls were almost hustled. It is true that the co-eds. considered a fifteen-cent lunch ample, but they need not have been crowded on that account, and the amount of work performed by twelve hundred supposedly industrious young men does not reflect much credit on their physical prowess.

That money has no odor we know has long been a favorite motto with the City Hall Crowd, but why on earth the followers of his Elegance the Mayor should object to the flowers at the corner of Kearny and Geary streets does not appear. Then one begins to discover that the retail florists have money, and that their money, too, carries no incriminating odor. Money from the brothel, the saloon and the flower-store flows into the public treasury (presumably), and mingle their several odors in the pactolian streams which sweep in one broad, rich river into the pockets of our city officials.

The Sultan demands pay for Russia's ships to go through the Dardanelles. Good old Sultan! It is so long since he had a chance to make anything out of anything that it is good to see him take hold and get a chance. The present conditions in the Balkans, however, do not give him promise of keeping it long.

The Sacramento hod-carriers are striking for a daily wage of four dollars. This is a proof not only of the prosperity of the State, but of the asininity of the unions.

There is a shortage in cash in the City Treasury at San Jose. San Franciscans will remember the same thing occurring in this city, and how the Mayor hefted it.

Dear Bessie: Have you ever been at a Kitchen Shower? I did not know exactly what it meant till I went to the one given the other day by Kate Selfridge for Ethel Kent, who is to be married early in April. May, who went with me, advised me to bring a bundle of bright new skewers, for what earthly purpose I could not think until I found each and every guest came laden with some article for kitchen use, by which the heart of the fair bride-elect was made glad. But suppose she boards, and doesn't keep house? Well, they can all be packed away for future use, and may come in handy sometime.

I have not been doing much of any importance, and yet seem to be always going somewhere, and cards do run away with one's time to a wonderful degree. Mabel Toy had a little telephone tea of a dozen or so last Saturday; Gertrude Dutton gave a very pretty purple and yellow—violets and jonquils—dinner the other night; all young people, and Helen Bowie had a charming luncheon for the bride-elect, Frances Harris. Card clubs are almost as plentiful as flies in summer, and I could not begin to tell you who all belong to them. Small ones are the most popular and one of the latest to form one is Maye Colburne, who has chosen seven-handed euchre for her club, which met at her house last week, and at Mrs. Henry Dutton's on Tuesday of this week. Myra Nickerson and Charlotte Ellinwood have had bridge whist parties; Sallie Winslow has got up a club of eight to play bridge; Mrs. Athern Folger had a bridge party on Friday night, and Mrs. George Knight gives a large 500 party next Saturday. For to-day a lot of parties have been made up for the pony races at Tanforan—the one to which I am "attached" is an automobile affair with lunch, etc., so I am in for a fine time.

Burlingame carried off the Mi Careme honors this year, Mrs. Frank Carolan and Mrs. Andy McCreary joining forces in giving a masked dance at the club house, so under these circumstances I think Grace and Lily Spreckels were wise in deciding not to have one. It was a jolly lark, one of the pleasant features being the trip down from town by the electric cars. Quite a number remained for the polo which was played there yesterday, and there will be more of it again to-morrow. There is always some fun going on at Burlingame; Frank Carolan gave a breakfast at Crossways last Saturday, which was followed by a run with the hounds across the hills; in which a lot of ladies took part.

Hilda Baxter's marriage to Ralph Hart, which came off last Saturday, was a very quiet one, the ceremony taking place in the McDonald's rooms at the St. Dunstan at noon with only relatives and a few friends in attendance. I hear Hilda looked pretty as a picture in her gown of pale blue cloth and big hat to correspond. They are spending their honeymoon down South. Weddings have not been very numerous of late, but they seldom are during Lent; and there will be several directly after Easter. The whisper is that Florence Bailey is to be married on Easter Monday, and her New York fiance is to arrive the week before; anyhow, on Wednesday in Easter week there will be two weddings in the swim. Frances Harris's will be a home wedding at her aunt, Mrs. Ries's, at four o'clock in the afternoon, and Ethel Kent's comes off in the evening at Grace Church. Ethel has selected yellow as the color for her wedding; her sister, Mrs. Graham, is to be matron of honor, her other sister, Kathleen, maid of honor, and with Mattie Milton, Florence Cole, Louise Hall, and Nolie de Golia will make a pretty group of attendants. Captain Helms, who is in the 19th Infantry, will be best man. There will be a small reception afterward, and they will go to Vancouver for their honeymoon. I almost forgot to mention that the groom will be Lieutenant Gilbert Allen of the army.

May Burdge and Bernard Miller are to be married at Arbor Villa next month, and Mrs. Smith, who always entertains in such a brilliant style, is going to give her the grandest kind of a wedding, so you may be sure it will be something fine. Winnie Burdge is to be maid of honor, Marion Smith, Florence Nightengale, Evelyn Ellis, Grace Sperry, Mary Baker, Marion Goodfellow, Carrie Oliver and May Coogan bridesmaids.

While on the subject of Oakland, let me tell you of a novel entertainment Marie was at the other day—a domino luncheon, given there by Mrs. John Adams, at which the Baroness Von Horst and Kate Voorhies Henry were the guests of honor. They all wore red dominos and masks, which latter must, I think have been rather uncomfortable things to wear when eating and drinking was in order, but anything for novelty, and I have not heard any one complain.

Pearl Sabin leaves for Washington City next week, where she is to be bridesmaid at the wedding of Kathro Burton and Lieutenant George Lee, which is to take place on Easter Monday at the home of the Burtons in the vicinity of the Nation's capital, where General Burton is stationed as Inspector-General of the Army. It is to be a yellow wedding, Lieutenant Lee being in the cavalry—those are his regimental colors, and Leila Burton, who was married to Lieutenant Wells last year, is to be the matron of honor. Apropos of button weddings, we shall have another one here before the year is out—and more than one, or I am no prophet—as the engagement of Anna Sperry and Lieutenant Clarence Carigan has been announced this week. Mabel coaxed me out to the new riding school the other day, and I was not sorry when I got there that I had gone. You never saw anything like the enthusiasm of the girls who are drilling for the benefit they are to have for the Doctor's Daughters; they are fairly bubbling over with it, and it promises to be one of the good things of the year. Among other things not heretofore set down will be the act of the San Mateo Hunt, Club in the art of high jumping, and as they are all to wear "pink," it will be one of the features of the show. The girls were all busily discussing Bessie Center's wedding, which took place in London last Tuesday, when it was thought June was the month chosen for the interesting event; I hear they are going to live here in San Francisco.

I think the Palm Garden at the Palace has been finished since you were here; anyhow, while at first it was only used for after the theatre supper parties, folks now give luncheons, teas and dinners there, and you have no idea what a stunning place it is for them, too. One of the jolliest of these parties was the dinner given there by Mr. Story last week, at which a lot of the recent heroes of the polo tournament at Del Monte were guests—Captain Haig, Cyril, Dick and Joe Tobin and Mr. Ezra, the Raul Duvals and others, fourteen in all.

Mrs. Will Tevis, who is seldom away from her favorite home at Bakersfield, had a house party of a few friends down there last week, lasting over Sunday; Millie Ashe Sewell was one of them, and she has now gone Eastward, after what she said was one of the most delightful visits she has ever paid to her old home, San Francisco.

One would hardly think that the oceans of rain we have had of late would tempt one to the country. But several have already departed for the summer when the spring is not yet in full sway, and among them are the Hopkins girls—Mrs. Will and Mrs. Gus Taylor—who have taken up their abode at Menlo Park thus early in the year. I am curious to see the new villa of which so many glowing accounts are floating around. The Sydney Van Wyckes have gone over to Berkeley to live—they spent the winter at the Bella Vista, and the Roy McDonalds have chosen Oakland for their home. Genevieve King bids us adieu to-day, going to Boston, where she will meet the Herricks, with whom she is going to Europe; and the Douglas Sloan Watsons will follow almost the same programme when they leave next month.

Ad. Mizner and Jack Baird are back again safe and sound, but having had some "experiences" during their automobile trip South, and say it is the only way to travel with pleasure. We are to see Ethel Shorbe and her sister, Mrs. Murtagh, about the first week in April; they are coming from Manila by the transport then due. —Elsie.

The Looker-On

He told her her voice was as sweet as a bird,
When it sings 'mid the flowers of May,
It never struck her that the thing was absurd
When he said he could listen all day.

So she married him later and learned with much pain
That he grumbled whenever she spoke,
And told her, not once, but again and again
That her singing was worse than a joke.

But she bottled the insult, and took it to court,
Where the Judge listened, silent and grim,
And the upshot of all that he uttered in sport
Was the fact that the joke was on him.

They were discussing the proposed new Federal Court the other night at the Press Club, and some one mentioned Judge De Haven in connection with it.

"The mention of De Haven reminds me of a good story at his expense," said an old timer. "Years ago, before the Judge had attained the ermine, and when he was doing his best in the House of Representatives to impress upon the statesmen of the East the greatness of California, an enterprising burglar was plying his trade in De Haven's neck of the woods. The silver question was then the main issue before the people, and the Judge was doing his best by the publication of addresses in the Congressional Record to show the people what he thought about it. I don't recall the extent of his position on the question, and anyway that is not material to this story. While the Judge was at Washington, fighting for the greater glory of his country, his residence up north was entered by this enterprising burglar, who was snooping around, and who had no more regard for the personal property of Congressmen than he had for the belongings of other people. It is sad, but true, that the burglar aforesaid, in the happier days of his innocent youth, had been a police reporter. Evil associates, doubtless, had corrupted his morals. He had seen policemen grow rich, and he concluded he would try the get-rich-quick plan himself. So he entered De Haven's house ready for plunder. When the Congressman returned home he found his larder emptied; everything eatable had been eaten; everything drinkable had evaporated. In his library, on top of a pile of manuscript speeches on silver, the Judge found a note from the burglar:

"I have read your speeches on silver with much interest," the ex-reporter wrote, "likewise I have with much patience corrected what appear to be rhetorical errors. For this I make no charge. It pains me, however, to find that a man so prominent as yourself in the affairs of the nation does not practice what he preaches. Here, at length, you have set forth the great advantage of silver to the world as a circulating medium, but the nearest approach to the white metal I can find in your whole shebang after a most careful search, are a couple of old plated spoons. Mr. Congressman, to a man of my profession this is most disappointing. Hereafter, I am for a gold standard. No plated spoons for WILLIE."

And now comes a prophet out of Chicago—Helen Bradford Thompson—and she proves to the satisfaction of herself and her friends that women—Chicago women, at least—have better memories than men. She has set it all forth in a book upon "The Mental Traits of Sex," a psychological dissertation in which is learnedly discussed everything concerning the ego and the alter ego in a manner which only one who has dived deep into the obtruseness of the science could attempt. Miss or Madam Thompson's method of proving the correctness of her thesis is interesting. She exhibited to an equal number of men and women students in the University of Chicago a choice collection of nonsense syllables, with instructions to memorize them. Here are some of the memory agitators: zef, sig, nam, kig. These were flashed before the students upon a board, one at a time. Then they had to go away, clinch them in their craniums, and return and enunciate them. The women were better at it than the men, it seems; therefore, it follows that women have better memories than men—for nonsense—or, as Author Thompson puts it, "Memory in its purest form is better among women than among men." Q. E. D.

We always had a low-down idea that women could retain a lot of nonsense longer than men, and now that the Chicagoese has proved it, we can safely say "I told you so." If it were not for this purity in the female memory, society chit-chat would be at a very low ebb indeed. The dear girls can rattle off their eeny, meeny, miny, moes for hours at an afternoon tea, and then come bright and smiling at another pink sociable the next afternoon, and recite with remarkable correctness everything they heard about everybody else upon the day previous. There is where the nonsense syllable theory is practically demonstrated. Also it shows that women are so constituted mentally that they simply can't help retaining whatever is flashed before them. It is not their fault at all, you know, because they are built that way.

My attention has been directed to a practice prevalent in the Police Department for years, and which is not only indefensible from a legal standpoint, but seems to be nothing more than an attempt upon the part of the police to secure for pawnbrokers, "fences," and other dealers in stolen goods, immunity from financial loss. It comes so close to a partnership in the proceeds of crime that to say it is dangerous to the welfare of the community is putting it lightly. To illustrate. Your house is robbed, and you report at police headquarters that the robbers have stolen a gold watch, for instance, and a quantity of plate. You describe the articles so that they may be easily identified. Then you await developments. In the course of a week or two, a detective calls at your place of business and tells you he has "turned up" the stolen goods. He has found them in a pawnbroker's shop.

"Where is the place?" you ask. "Why didn't you get them? I wouldn't lose those things for a good deal more than their price in money. I value them for their associations."

"Well, we will get them back, all right," the detective says. "but, you see, this pawnbroker gave the thieves $50 for them. Now, he thought they owned the things; he acted innocently in the matter, and, of course, he does not want to lose his money. I have had a talk with him, and he says if he gets his money back he will give up the goods, and aid us to get the robbers."

"What!" you say in astonishment; "first I am robbed; I go to the police, and now the police come here and want me to pay $50 for getting back my own things. Well, if that isn't an outrage."

"Well, you see, $50 isn't much to you," says the detective, "but the pawnbroker is a poor man. He could make lots of trouble. He paid out the money, and he thinks he should get it back."

Then the argument continues, and the chances are ten to one that the householder gives the detective the amount demanded. The next day his watch and silverware are returned, and the incident is closed. Of course, the robbers are never apprehended—unless, possibly, they drift over into Sheriff Taylor's bailiwick in Marin County.

This system of blackmail, levied by policemen upon owners of stolen property, is practiced daily in this city. The police know it is improper, immoral and illegal. They know the owner has the absolute right to his property wherever found, even if upon the shelves of a protected "fence," and that he should be enabled to recover it without paying toll. A search-warrant would obtain it in half an hour without a cent of expense; also, it forecloses the possibility of a "draw-down" by the detective, who usually divides with the pawnbroker. If the latter pays the thieves $5 for the goods the detective adds $20 to the amount when the owner is called upon to contribute. One case recently came to my attention where a boy, whose bicycle was stolen, had to give a policeman $5 before he could get his wheel back. It was learned afterwards that it had been sold to a pawnbroker for one dollar. The "fence" and the policeman made $2 each out of the transaction—provided the guardian of the law divided equally with his companion in crime. The police deny participation in the Chinatown gambling fund; they deny protecting bunco men, and they deny aiding the lottery dealers; but they admit and they try to defend this scheme of blackmail for the protection of pawnbrokers. They say they need the assistance of the pawnbrokers in their business; therefore, they protect the receivers of stolen property. The pawnbroker's is a nefarious business at best; the law looks on it with suspicion, and opens all the pawnbrokers' books at all times to the police. If they lose money by dealing with thieves that is only one of the risks of their business. Property owners should not be required to reimburse them. Above all, the police have no excuse for blackmailing the owners so that the pawnbrokers will not suffer. This matter is well worthy the attention of the Grand Jury. If they will take it up, abundant proof of the illegal practice I have referred to may be easily obtained.

* * *

Did you ever notice that after the holdup, the victim always says, according to the voracious daily press, that "the robbers overlooked $352 in Brown's inside coat pocket," or that "in the excitement the tall, masked man failed to see a $1,000 roll of greenbacks in the lower drawer," or that "the men must have been novices, as they did not thoroughly search the cash register; if they had they would have discovered $855 in gold, two diamond rings and a lottery ticket?" Are the daily papers chiding the highwaymen for their slipshod methods of doing business or is it their purpose to point out to enterprising young men the great possibilities of an ancient profession?

Dr. J. Milton Bowers is dead. With him is buried

Pears'

People have no idea how crude and cruel soap can be.

It takes off dirt. So far, so good; but what else does it do.

It cuts the skin and frets the under-skin; makes redness and roughness and leads to worse. Not soap, but the alkali in it.

Pears' Soap has no free, alkali in it. It neither reddens nor roughens the skin. It responds to water instantly; washes and rinses off in a twinkling, is as gentle as strong; and the after-effect is every way good.

Established over 100 years.

the secret of the most mysterious murder case known in the police annals of San Francisco. There may be men among the veteran detectives who have untold information regarding the deaths of Mrs. Bowers and her brother, the mysterious Benhayon, but if so, they have never given it to the public. If any man alive to-day knows who was responsible for the death of Mrs. Bowers, it is Bob Hogan, the detective; and if any man knows more than another of the circumstances leading to the alleged suicide of Benhayon it is also Hogan. In the opinion of men who worked on these murder mysteries with him sixteen years ago, Hogan is the ablest detective the local police force has had in two generations—bar none. It was over the Bowers case that Captain Lees and Hogan had their famous disagreement. Hogan was detailed on the case, and brought in enough evidence to secure the conviction of the physician of murder in the first degree. It was shown that his wife had died from sulphur poisoning; that he had insurance certificates on her life; that a former wife of Bowers had also died under mysterious circumstances. Hogan's chain of circumstantial evidence was so complete that Bowers was condemned to the gallows. But he boasted that he would never hang, and he made his boast good. During his long confinement in the Broadway Jail he was most constantly attended by an old German woman, who brought him his food daily in a basket. She was another mysterious figure in this mysterious case. If my recollection serves correctly, she has also passed away.

Bowers to the end insisted upon his innocence of his wife's murder. Captain Lees said he thought Bowers innocent. He resented the activity of Hogan in the case. The result was that Hogan was relieved from active detective duty, and was assigned to the District Attorney's office, where he has been ever since. If he ever writes his reminiscences they will rival in interest the adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

TIVOLI—The Gypsy Baron. A fine musical production.

The Silver Slipper girls are said to have come to earth in an airship. This airship made a particularly slow journey, as most of the "girls" are old ladies.

I have been written a letter from Oakland, by a well-known commuter, that is amusing, and which gives the average resident a better idea of the chronic somnolence of the interesting town across the bay. It seems that my friend the Commuter undertook the escort of two ladies to the Orpheus concert at the McDonough. He claims the concert was well worth hearing. But that's another story. Our concern is with what happened in the lobby. The commuter waited in the foyer whilst the ladies stepped into the dressing room. Suddenly the door-keeper projects himself into the commuter's presence. "Where are your tickets?" he yelled. "I showed him the stubs, three in number, which he had just handed me," continues my informant. "Where are the other parts?" he yells again. "I politely informed him he had just torn them off." "No one has come into this house for the last fifteen minutes," he said. I felt like rubbing my eyes to see whether I was in dreamland. "Why I gave you three tickets myself not fifteen minutes ago; they were for me and for two ladies, now in the dressing room, and you gave me these stubs. You tore them off and gave them to me." "No one has come in here in the last fifteen minutes," he repeated.

It seems that one of the ushers had seen the whole transaction; he had observed the sleepwalker returning the ticket stubs to the commuter, so he came over and led the poor doorkeeper away—to have another dream.

It is a question whether the theatre-goers of San Francisco are tired of the mismanagement of the antiquated California Theatre or whether they are not in touch with Dan'l Sully; anyway the house is empty nightly. "The Chief Justice," with Dan'l Sully, the unnatural actor in this case, in the titular role, is one of the Fitz Murphy's conceptions. He is in this part an automaton and not a man. It sparkles with epigrams, and scintillates with Murphysisms. It is strong, full of action, the weakest part of the play being the thread-bare cheque nonsense in the last act. This is painful. Mr. Sully cannot grasp the opportunities in this play. Murphy's wit is too fine. Sully is a comedy actor of the half-knockabout kind, and pathos in his handling is worse than bathos. In other hands and in other houses, with a little backing and filling, "The Chief Justice" might become a great play. It has in it the germs of popularity, but the playhouse and the player dampened the success of the initial performance. Mr. Sully is at best but a poor comedy actor, and his failure to conceive the possibilities of the part of Chief Justice, together with the unpopularity of the theatre, makes it certain that the "Standing Room Only" sign will not be dusted off for hanging out this week.

The only bit of real artistic work done in "The Chief Justice" is that of Butler Collins by William F. Kobman. His work is artistic. The rest of the cast are twin brothers to fence posts.

Homer Davenport has tried this week to convince the people that he can draw cartoons. There never was a worse humbug than this man's alleged ability in the line of caricature. He has never been able to draw anything that resembled anything or anybody. His drawings all look like a Kansas haystack in a cyclone. He is under the management of the Pond Lyceum Bureau, which reflects on the intelligence of the Bureau. Davenport is a pretty good story-teller, but considered as a cartoonist, he is—well—simply awful. Hearst managed to make himself believe that Davenport could draw, and then some of the public took to the idea, and finally Davenport became convinced. When it became necessary to retrench and cut down enormous expenses, somebody suggested to the young man with the yellow brain that Davenport was a luxury, and he was lopped off. Davenport has been successful, but it is a long story of luck too long to tell here.

Miss Block takes the part of the Inn Keeper in "The White Horse Tavern" at the Alcazar, and she does not appear as advantageously as in other roles. She redeems herself in her dancing, in which she is very graceful. The Giesecke of Osbourne is good. The Frederick Siedler of Mr. Durkin is well done. Harry Hilliard and Miss Starr gave us a splendid piece of juvenile work. Mr. Hilliard has apparently entirely overcome the levity that has been so prevalent in his tone. He has the ability of modulation, and it is a pity he should ever forget. Miss Starr as the lisping damsel is simply perfect. But by far the most finished piece of make-up and acting was the work of Mr. John B. Maher as Walter Hintzelmann, the ideal tutor and traveler. There was not a heart in that audience that did not go out to the good old man. He gave us the gentle old scholar to perfection.

* * *

It is to be hoped that Fischer's stage will soon see the last of "The Rounders." There is nothing in the skit, and the sooner it is forgotten the better. It is one of the stunts that I have seen and never want to see again. It would not be fair to the company to criticise them in this adaptation from the French. The lyrics are only fair, and the words are wearisome. Miss Russell makes the most of her part, and Miss Lynch is entitled to praise in hers. Miss Russell is very attractive as a coryphee, and those that waited to see her in the almost altogether were not disappointed. The new male faces in the cast are allowed by the playwright to give only an approximation of their abilities. I would suggest that adaptations from the French be tabooed unless a better selection be made.

There is a marked improvement in the giving of "The Gypsy Baron." The music at the Tivoli is delightful, and the attendance is good.

Half of the theatres in New York are closed, and the other half are playing to poor houses and poorer prices. That is exactly what is going to happen in San Francisco. "The Silver Slipper" is an instance. The music is not music, and only relieves a dull monotony by going with a zip and a bang. The six "Venus Girls" are athletic young females, and at a distance are quite agreeable to the eye. On nearer inspection they are not so good to look upon. There is the usual knock-about business that obtains in recent vaudeville, and Mr. Samuel Collins tries hard to be funny. The music betrays the hand of the authors of "Florodora" only at infrequent intervals. The "Champagne Dance" has a swing to it, and in fact the whole opera has a swing. This is due to the quick time rather than because of any inherent musical quality. The local theatrical managers need some one to vise their plays; some one who has had more than a commercial acquaintance with the English language. There is no reason why the men in the "Silver Slipper" should have been recruited from among the professional pall-bearers of New York, but from the appearance of these gentlemen I should have no hesitancy in saying that such was the case.

The Minetti Chamber Music Quartette which, during the last eight years has given continuous series of chamber music concerts, will again come before the public this year in a number of the most interesting and artistic programmes heard here during its existence. The programmes will contain several novelties of great importance, and will be executed in that finished style which always characterized the recitals of this popular quartette. The concerts will take place at Lyric Hall on Friday afternoon, March 25th.

The coming week is the last week of "The Gypsy Baron." "Mr. Pickwick" will be put on Monday, March 21st.

Many good things are promised for the future at the Columbia. Mary Mannering in "Harriet's Honeymoon," Anna Held in "Mademoiselle Napoleon," John Drew, and later on Maude Adams and the real Roger Brothers. It looks like a season of good shows.

The Alameda Lustspiel Ensemble will give a German performance at the Columbia Theatre on Sunday night, April 3d. The farcical comedy, "Das Opferlamin" (The Scapegoat) will be staged.

At the Central Theatre the popular drama, "Rip Van Winkle," which closes a highly prosperous week to-morrow night, will be followed on Monday evening by the favorite Irish drama, "Shamus O'Brien."

Deonzo and Schenck, trick barrel jumpers of renown, will be new at the Chutes this coming week, as will also Lyne and Leonard, the "Dancing Nabobs." Vera Randall, a juvenile singer and dancer, promises a novel specialty, and the Robinsons, a colored song and dance team, come with a great reputation for fun-making powers. The Bennington Duo, Tyrolean warblers, will vary their act, and Mabel Lamson, the popular contralto, will be heard in new illustrated songs. The amateurs will appear on

How San Francisco

Looks to Me

By Fernand Travers, Tourist

No. 11

The Illegitimate

You know, don't you, that I am really glad that I am an American born, but I thank God I was bred in Britain. Whilst I am proud of the land of "me" birth, I am equally glad that wealth and good taste on the part of my forebears compelled me to get my education abroad. One of the few things that Americans have yet to learn and which they should try to avoid is the breeding of that unspeakable thing which I am told is in this country called a "remittance man." I have loaned, as I said last week, a few pounds or dollars to American gentlemen, whom I have met when stranded abroad, and most of it has been paid back. I have been borrowed off a few times here in San Francisco by the "remittance man." The English education may be the best, but really the American business education makes the smartest business men. The American won't lend the remittance man a farthing—he knows he'd lose it. The chap at the club apologized the other night for introducing me to a what looked to me really decent chap. He said: "He is a good fellow, but don't loan him anything; he is a remittance man." I find that these chaps who get money from home and are called by the name of remittance men are the worst bounders you folks have to contend with. They beg and borrow, and for one or two days in the month they plunge, and what they do in the meantime between remittances only a non-committal Providence knows. I suppose there are some chaps who take care of their "Governors," send and use it carefully in other places than bars and gambling rooms. These chaps are hard to find. They are all bad. They wear their riding breeches to the links and a sack tweed coat to dinner; they do the "outré" thing all the time. They are shipped out here by some old father who dreams that the son who is shipped can't possibly, don't you know, do any worse over here than he did at home in England, and the news of his drunken debauches won't ever reach the English village any way, and so the weak-kneed and ant-brained scion of an already mentally decayed family, lands in California, assured of a monthly cheque from the Governor and a little extra now and again thrown in from the mater or the sister.

It takes but a little while, I think, for these indigent, expelled and rusticated fellows to get a clerkship in some shop, and then I am told they tell of their families, and who and what they are not, and usually they work some poor devil of an Episcopalian minister to introduce them to some nice people, and then, why, the chap leaves town with his debts unpaid, and all the money he could borrow, and even his linen in the hands of the washman, who is a poor Chinaman, and after growing a stubble beard and going around codging with dirty shirts and clothes he goes back, and beggar me if he does not go to another section of the same county, sometimes, and cheat again. I really think that I may moralize. I usually let Roger do that for me, but I gave him a few I. O. U.'s the other day, which I had collected from the remitters, and I think he burned them. I am sure he did not collect them, and so I am of the opinion that these fellows are really undesirable. They can't stay home, don't you know, and they bore a fellow over here. They do all sorts of impossible things in their straits, aside from drinking; they become hostlers, or waiters or touts or billiard markers, but they find their level, and the level is usually, I assure you, measured by the depth of the gutter. Had they been decent, they might still, don't you know, be in England, but the ordinary remittance man can't stay at home, and by gad, he can't stay here. He bellows and whines and works his friends of the Union Jack, and dies of dipsomania as a rule. It's too bad. These scummy chaps should be kept away; let them kill themselves off at home, and not be sent here to bring discredit on their families. One virtue the ordinary remittance man has, as I have found it, he has pride enough and a sort of courage which makes him keep his family name to himself. He may sink low down, don't you know, even as low as being a waiter in a beer place, but he keeps his name to himself. A gentleman of my class is always a gentleman, and as long as he continues to be such, other gentlemen will be his friends and bankers. I think that the fellow who has any standing at all in society can keep it, but only for the time, don't you know, that he deserves it. We of the classes are compelled to stand together, and it takes something disgraceful or dishonorable to drive one of our people out of our set. No man, unless he has brought it on himself by being a bad lot, and by his actions, has lost the confidence of his friends, ever needs to "sling hash," as you call it here. He can go into the wine business or coal, or other things. The gentleman who is one, and has proven it so, can't possibly, don't you know, become a wood-chopper or a tramway driver. We can find him something else to do if he is worth it. If he is a bounder and a bad one, he can live his life out in the manner that his weak nature suggests. The remittance man is a blasted bore; he is universally a scoundrel, he imposes upon his people at home as well as his friends here, if he makes any, and in the end goes unshaved and unshriven to a poor house graveyard to the everlasting relief of those who had the misfortune to know him. I think he is the Fagan of society, with the brutality of a Sykes. Blame me, he cheats, thieves, robs and spends under an alias. It is only the cur and coward, the whelps of the remittance man with the yellow streak that whines when licked and beggar-like shows his bruises and tells his name and disgraces the mother who bore him and the father who sent him way off across the pond for charity or the borrow of a dollar. I think it is really too bad that you can let these remittance fellows do these things. Can't you arrest them and put them in quod. I suggest this. The right English chaps over here don't care—that is their way, but really it is positively brutal to have a fellow, for instance, who says he left the old country and disgraced himself and "was a hash-slinger" in some sort of a low restaurant in some little place, and who worked his sister for a remittance, and then used the money in a bad manner. It is positively wrong to permit a bounding codger who will do a nasty thing like this to disgrace the name of a fairly decent English house. I want a stop to this kind of thing. Names, don't you know, are names, and I can and will individually protect that of

FERNAULD TRAVERS.

N. B.—I am devilishly sorry for that poor devil of a Carling, who wrote to your paper. Hash-slinger in a stingaree eating place in the night time and tourist. Gad! can't you help a fellow able as he must be to a position of clown in a cheap circus or as, what was it your American author called it—a chambermaid in a livery mews. Tourist and hash-slinger! Poor devil—he must have suffered.

This action on their part will leave the United States branch in the same financial condition as it was shown to be by the statement of its affairs December 31, 1903, rendered to insurance departments, which is as follows:

Assets.

Real estate in New York City, including company's office building, $261,000; Loans on real estate in New York City, $57,000; United States Government bonds, $379,800; Railroad and other bonds, guaranteed, preferred and other railroad stocks and other securities, $1,633,257; Cash in banks, $279,649; Cash in agents' hands and in course of collection, $274,550; Other admitted items, $26,626; Total, $2,911,882.

Liabilities.

Reserve for unearned premiums, $1,728,952; Reserve for losses in process of adjustment, $210,696; Reserve for other liabilities, $12,106; Surplus over all liabilities, $960,128; Total, $2,911,822.

C. A. Henry & Company, General Agents of the old Sun, did not rush into press as soon as the fire had occurred. It preferred to trust to the public and rested safe in its own strength and its well-known popularity. The British companies cabled their losses, and the Sun was among the first, but it saved its press notices until after the smoke of the fire had cleared away.

Mr. Dixwell Hewitt, Assistant General Agent of the old Hertford, sailed for Honolulu on the last steamer.

Mr. Joseph H. Lenehan, of the Phenix of Brooklyn, was a cabin passenger on the Sierra. He was accompanied by his wife and Miss Lenehan, and goes to Honolulu to look over the field. Only the fact that the Sierra sailed at 2 a. m. depleted the crowd that went down to the pier to see him off.

The Globe-Democrat states that the plans of the management of the World's Fair contemplate that invitations be sent out to the managers and principal officers of all the leading fire insurance companies doing business in the United States to be the guests in St. Louis on March 22d of the World's Fair management. The object of the meeting is to give insurance representatives an opportunity to inspect the facilities on the World's Fair grounds for fighting fire and to learn the character of the risks. Fears have been expressed that the World's Fair might not be able to secure the necessary insurance on the Fair exhibits.

The committee appointed from the St. Louis fire prevention bureau to arrange a programme of entertainment for the visiting insurance men consists of George T. Cram, chairman; F. D. Hirschberg and George D. Markham. The programme at the World's Fair grounds is to be spectacular. The firemen will be called out and tests of speed and efficiency will be made.

Thursday night. The zoo is constantly in receipt of new and valuable animals from all climes.

Rehearsals at the Tivoli are going on for "Mr. Pickwick," which promises to be a notable production. In this musical comedy, Dora de Philippe, a soprano from Paris, will make her first appearance in this city, as will also George Chapman, an eminent young baritone, who created Mr. Winkle in the original production. The clever young comedian, Forrest Seabury, has been especially engaged to play Joe, the fat boy.

Among the early productions at Fischer's Theatre will be "Chow Chow," that is now known as "The Runaways in the East," and "Kismet," both successful and beautiful musical novelties.

Among the many attractions at the Orpheum the coming week is Emmett Corrigan, the distinguished young actor who starred most successfully in this city last season, and has been induced to give up the legitimate, and will appear, with competent support, at the Orpheum this coming week. The medium for his introduction to vaudeville is a one-act playlet entitled "Jockey Jones, or The Day of the Handicap," and the Eastern press and public are most enthusiastic in praise of both the star and his sketch.

"Parsifal" is a pictorial sermon. Its three most impressive incidents are the ceremonial of the supper in the temple; the temptation of Parsifal in the garden of roses, transformed by magic to a blasted waste and the Good Friday scene where the repentant Kundry bathes the feet of Parsifal, and both are baptized. To preserve the atmosphere of this solemn festival play the management of the Alcazar announces that no one will be seated after the fanfare of trumpets in the foyer at 8 p. m., until the close of the overture—played in utter darkness—and the first act. It has been suggested that all applause be withheld until after the first act.

It is disagreeable to have some one raise both arms and an immense picture hat between you and the stage and obstruct your view in a frantic endeavor to reach the exit first. One would think the house was on fire. This is about the only place where a woman does not stop to ask: "Is my hat on straight?" It's all one to her if it's straight, crooked or back foremost, but she must discommode every one else to make that exit. Once out on the street, she will straighten out her cloak and hat, make the customary inquiry and then loiter around wondering at what particular restaurant she and her blanc-bec escort are going to visit.

Several accidents with horses in the East the last week has been food for thought concerning the automobile.

One especially serious affair was the case of a runaway, in which the occupants of the vehicle were women. It was a case of a horse being frightened on a down-grade, and the strength of the women not being equal to the task.
